Execution—Irregularities in Proclamation of Sale—Evidence of such Irregularities—Nazir's Report—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 274, 287, 289, 290, 291, and 295—Sale to satisfy Judgment Creditor who has not attached.

The proclamation of sale required by s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code, to be made at some place adjacent to the property to be sold, and the fixing up of a copy of the order in a conspicuous part of the property, are acts which must precede the posting of the notices in the Court-house as required by s. 290.

[35] Where the sale-proceeds of a portion of several parcels of property are sufficient to satisfy the decree of a judgment-creditor who has attached the property, another judgment-creditor, although he has not attached the property, is still entitled to have the remainder of the property sold to satisfy his decree under the provisions of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Three mouzas were attached in execution of decrees obtained by A and B. Prior to the sale, C, who had also obtained a decree against the owner of the land, applied for leave to execute his decree, in order that he might participate in the sale-proceeds under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code. Upon the day fixed for the sale, the Deputy Commissioner was unable, through illness, to attend; and he postponed the sale for three days. Two of the mouzas were sold, and realized more than enough to satisfy the decrees of A and B. The third was then sold in satisfaction of C's decree. Upon an application by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, it appeared, that notice of the sale had been posted in the Court-house more than thirty days before the date fixed for the sale, but had only been published on the properties to be sold five days before that date; that notice of the existence of a mortgage on the properties, but no further particulars, was given, and the mortgagee was allowed to purchase; and that the Deputy Commissioner had accepted the reports of the Nazir and Court-peon as to the proclamation of sale, and had refused to allow the judgment-debtor to give evidence of its insufficiency.

Held, that the proclamation of sale on the property having taken place only five days prior to the date of sale, and the particulars of the mortgage not having been given, there had been such material irregularities in the publication as to entitle the judgment debtor to give evidence of them and the other allegations made by him, in order to show that he had suffered material injury by reason of such irregularities.

Held, also that the Deputy Commissioner was not entitled to proceed upon the reports of the Nazir and Court-peon, but was bound to hear the evidence tendered by the judgment debtor, though he was justified, under s. 291, in postponing the sale as he had done.

Okhoy Chunder Dutt v. Erskine and Co., (1), Sreenath Thakoor v. Watson and Co. (2), and Shah Koondun Lall v. Noor Ali (3) followed.

Held further, that the third judgment-debtor, who had not attached the property, was still entitled to have the sale proceeded with and his decree satisfied under the provisions of s. 295.

THIS was an application on the part of the judgment-debtor, in three execution cases, to set aside a sale held in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Hazareebagh on the 18th May 1880, the properties sold consisting of three mouzas,—viz., Kharn, [36] Kharkhan and Palmo. It appeared that these mouzas had been attached in execution of two decrees held by Mohanund Dutt and Norchundur Dutt, but prior to the sale, a third decree-holder, Sheo Pershad Madi, applied for leave to execute his decree in order that he might participate in the sale-proceeds under the provisions of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code; but no prohibitory order had been issued or served in respect of this decree. The two first mentioned mouzas were in the first instance put up for sale and realised a sum more than sufficient to satisfy the decrees of the two judgment-creditors who had attached the properties, and on the same day, and immediately after they had been sold, the remaining mouza was put up and sold in spite of the protest of the judgment-debtor, and all three decrees were satisfied. Amongst the grounds upon which the judgment-debtor sought to have the sale of all three properties set aside, he alleged that the notices of sale were not published in the villages to be sold, which were situated sixty miles from Hazareebagh, until the 10th May 1880, only five days before the date of the sale, which was fixed for the 15th May, and that, consequently, sufficient time was not allowed for purchasers to attend the sale; that as the decrees, on account of which the two mouzas, Kharn and Kharkhan, were attached and sold, amounted to Rs. 4,597-3, and the sale proceeds thereof amounted to Rs. 6,800, there was no necessity for the Court to proceed with the sale of Palmo; and that the sale, though fixed for the 15th May, did not actually take place till the 18th, and in consequence of such delay, the sale should not then have been proceeded with until fresh notices had been issued under s. 259 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further objected to the sale on the ground of the inadequacy of the price obtained through the properties having been imperfectly described, no further particulars being given with regard to a mortgage thereon other than the mere fact of its existence, and that, as the mortgagee who was in possession had become the auction-purchaser, under these circumstances he had suffered material injury, of which and of the other allegations contained in his petition he offered to produce evidence. The Deputy Commissioner, however, refused to admit the evidence, and, [37] acting upon the reports of the Nazir and peon, dismissed the petition and confirmed the sale.

Accordingly from this order the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bannerjee, Mr. R. E. Twidale, Baboo Troyluckonath Mitter and Baboo Jagat Chunder Dey for the appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, Baboo Kallymohun Dass, and Baboo Tarucknath Sen for the respondents.

The following judgments of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—In execution of two decrees held by Norchunder Dutt, and Mohanund Dutt, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, appellant, in three mouzas, Kharn, Kharkhan and Palmo were attached and advertised for sale. Meantime a third decree-holder, Sheopershad, applied to execute his decree, in order that, under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code, he might participate in the sale-proceeds.

The two first mentioned properties were then sold, and realized a sum more than sufficient to liquidate the decrees of the judgment-creditors

 — Various objections were then taken to the sale, which were disallowed
 APPEL- by the Deputy Commissioner of Hazareebagh, and the judgment-debtor LATE has now appealed against that order. It is first of all contended by CIVIL. Mr. W.C. Bannerjee, for the judgment-debtor, appellant, that as the decrees — under execution were satisfied by the two properties first sold, no further 7 C. 34= sale should have been held. What would be the effect of an application
 4 Shome made by those whose decrees were under execution to abstain from further
 L.R. 169= proceedings on another decree-holder who had merely applied to execute 8 C.L.R. 369 his decree so as to obtain the benefit of s. 295, that is, to participate in the =5 Ind. Jur. assets realized in execution of the other decrees, we are not called upon to
 476. decide, because it does not appear that in the case now before us the [38] two decree-holders, who are actually executing their decrees, made any such application. That the amount realized by the sale of the first two properties was sufficient to satisfy their decrees is immaterial, since by the interposition of another decree-holder, under s. 295, that sum would not be payable to them alone. It would be subject also to the claim of this stranger, who, under s. 295, would be entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets. It could not then be said that by the amount realized from the first sale the decrees under execution were satisfied. We think, therefore, that the lower Court rightly proceeded to sell the third property Palmo.

It is further objected that no proclamation of sale was made on the spot as required by s. 274; that the Deputy Commissioner should have given the judgment-debtor an opportunity of proving this; that he improperly received in evidence and acted on the reports of the Nazir and peon; that even if the proclamation was made on the spot, it admittedly was not made until the 10th May, five days before the day fixed for sale, and therefore, not in sufficient time; that the property was not described in the sale-proclamation; that the Deputy Commissioner was not competent to adjourn the sale for three days in consequence of his sickness; that the mortgagee in possession should not have been allowed to purchase; and that, in consequence of all these irregularities, substantial injury has been caused, an inadequate price, much below the proper value of the properties, being obtained.

It is in the first place clear, that the Deputy Commissioner was wrong both in accepting as evidence the reports of the Nazir and peon regarding the sale-proclamation having been regularly made, and in refusing to give the judgment-debtor an opportunity to adduce evidence to the contrary. The case quoted by him—Alimooddy Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Sen (1)—is not in point. On the other hand it has been repeatedly held, that such reports are not legal evidence; Okhoy Chunder Dhur v. Erskine & Co. (2); Sreenath Thakoor v. Watson & Co. (3), Shah Koondun Lall v. Noor Ali (4).

[39] But even if the sale-proclamation was made, it admittedly was not made until the 10th May, five days before the day fixed for sale. We are informed by the appellant's counsel, and this is not disputed by the respondents' pleader, that the place on which it is said to have been made is sixty miles from the Court holding the sale. It is pressed on us by the learned counsel for the appellant, that although the law, s. 290, declares that it is necessary only that there should be an interval of thirty days between the date of fixing up of the sale-proclamation on the Court-house and the day of sale, that "fixing up" cannot be done until proclamation has been duly made and reported to the Court. The terms of the law, s. 290, certainly leave this in doubt, and it is difficult to understand the object of enacting a specific term, thirty days from any proceeding not the final proceeding, unless the other necessary proceeding is considered merely formal and of no material effect on the sale. It appears to me, however, that the making of a sale-proclamation on the spot is a most material proceeding, for it must be presumed, that, ordinarily, purchasers will be those living in the neighbourhood, best informed of the real value of the property, and most likely to purchase from the situation of the property with respect to their own residence or properties held by them. Of course, in some cases it may be that the value of the property to be sold may put it beyond the power of neighbours to compete at the auction, and that the bidders can only be capitalists residing near the Court-house; but such would be exceptional cases, and in seeking the object of the Legislature, we must look to the vast majority of the cases which occur. It appears to me, too, that it could not have been intended that a copy of the sale-proclamation should be "fixed up in the Court-house" until it was actually reported to the Court that the proclamation itself had been made under s. 274. I further think that the order in which these proceedings should be taken is indicated by the order in which they are expressed in s. 290. If this view be not accepted, the Court in each case would have to determine whether a sale-proclamation had been made in a reasonable time before the date of sale, so as to give a fair opportunity to persons likely to purchase, who live on or near the [40] property to be sold, although a term is specified with regard to the fixing up of the copy of the sale-proclamation in the Court-house. Such a rule would not only be inconvenient, but would be contrary to what I conceive to be the intention of the Legislature, viz., to fix some term which must expire between the last formality to bring a property to sale, and the sale itself. I, therefore, have no hesitation in holding that if the proclamation was made on the spot only five days before the date fixed for sale, there has been "a material irregularity in publishing it." It would, however, be incumbent on the person seeking to set aside the sale, the judgment-debtor, to show that "he has sustained material injury by reason of such irregularity."

As regards the objection taken regarding the adjournment of the sale for three days, in consequence of the illness of the Deputy Commissioner, we consider that that officer exercised a wise discretion given to him by law (s. 291) in refusing to hold the sale of properties of such large value except under his personal superintendence, which, in his absence from illness, would be impossible.

The next objection is, that the properties were imperfectly described in the sale-proclamation. The law requires that a proclamation of sale shall specify, as fairly and accurately as possible, any incumbrance to which the property is liable, and also every other thing which the Court considers material for the purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property. I observe that only the right, title and interest of the mortgagor (that is, the equity of redemption) were sold, and that the sale-proclamation states that the property is subject to a mortgage. It appears that the mortgagee is in possession of these properties, and that he is the purchaser at the auction-sale. Now it is clear that, to enable a bidder to form any definite idea of the value of these properties, the amount of the outstanding debt should have been specified. Unless that was declared, the mortgagee would be the only person who was in possession of this information; and if that information were withheld, he would be able to bid at an advantage with regard to other bidders. Such an omission, where [41] the mortgagee in possession is himself the purchaser, affords strong prima facie grounds for believing that an inadequate price was obtained.

We, therefore, remand this case to the Deputy Commissioner, and direct that he do give the parties an opportunity to adduce such evidence as they may desire on the points indicated, and decide the case accordingly.

CUNNINGHAM, J.—This is an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a judgment sale of immoveable property on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting it, whereby the appellant has sustained substantial injury.

One of the alleged irregularities was, that no proclamation was made on the spot in conformity with ss. 289 and 274, Civil Procedure Code. No opportunity was given to the execution-debtor of proving this, the Court satisfying itself with the reports of the Nazir and peon as sufficient proof of the proclamation. This was irregular. In the next place it is admitted that the proclamation on the spot, if made at all, was not made till five days before the sale. With regard to this the intention of ss. 289 and 290 must, in my opinion, be taken to be that the proclamation should be made on the property in question before or at the same time that the copy of it is fixed up in the Court-house, and that the reason of the omission in s. 290 of reference to the proclamation on the spot as one of the events which must occur at a specified time before the sale, is, that the Act regards the proclamation on the spot and the fixing of it up in the Court as simultaneous proceedings.

In the present instance, as the distance of the property from the Court was sixty miles, the period allowed was clearly inadequate, and there was a material irregularity which, if it can be shown that there has resulted material injury (of which gross inadequacy of price would be an indication) would entitle the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside.

Another of the alleged irregularities is the inadequate description of the properties in the proclamation of sale. Section 287 of the Civil Procedure Code requires that any incumbrance to which the property is liable should be stated, as well as every other thing which the Court considers material [42] for the purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property. In this case the proclamation stated the fact of an incumbrance, but omitted to specify the amount of the mortgage debt still outstanding. This would leave the incumbrancer in a more favourable position than any one else to judge of the value of the equity of redemption, and as he was the purchaser, it is probable enough that this irregularity did occasion substantial injury to the judgment-debtor.

The order of the lower Court must accordingly be set aside, and the case remanded to the Deputy Commissioner to rehear the application with reference to the observations made above.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF ROCHIA MOHATO (Appellant).

THE EMPRESS v. ROCHIA MOHATO.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32, cl. 1, and s. 33—"Questions in issue"—Charge added at Sessions—Depositions before Magistrate—Witness dying or absconding—Charge to Jury—Omission to notice evidence—Qualification of Jurymen.

In the proceedings before a Magistrate on [a charge of causing grievous hurt, two (among other) witnesses, one of whom was the person assaulted, were examined on behalf of the prosecution. The prisoners were committed for trial. Subsequently the person assaulted died, in consequence of the injuries inflicted on him. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, charges of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder were added to the charge of grievous hurt. The deposition of the deceased witness was put in and read at the Sessions trial.

Held, that the evidence was admissible either under s. 32, cl. 1, or s. 33 of the Evidence Act, notwithstanding the additional charges before the Sessions Court.

[43] The question whether the proviso to s. 33 of the Evidence Act is applicable,—that is, whether the questions at issue are substantially the same,—depends upon whether the same evidence is applicable, although different consequences may follow from the same act.

At the trial it was proved that the other witness who had been examined before the Magistrate had disappeared, and that it had been found impossible to serve him with a summons. His deposition was put in and read.

Held, that it was properly admitted under s. 33.

In summing up the case to the jury, the Judge omitted to call their attention to the evidence of the witnesses for the defence. This evidence appeared to the High Court to be untrustworthy.

Held, that the summing up was not defective on account of this omission on the part of the Judge.

The fact that a person is a clerk in the office of the Magistrate of the District, is not sufficient to disqualify him from sitting on a jury.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gasper, for the appellant.

Mr. M. Ghose, for the prosecution.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by PONTIFEX, J.—This is an appeal from a conviction by a jury in respect of which we can only interfere if there has been some error of law or misdirection by the Judge. Now it is alleged that we ought to interfere on two grounds: first, that evidence has been wrongly placed before the jury; and secondly, that in certain particulars there has been a misdirection, or rather a want of direction by the Judge.

With respect to the first ground that improper evidence has been placed before the jury, the complaint is, that the depositions of two witnesses who were examined before the Magistrate were improperly allowed by the Judge to be put in by the prosecution and used in the Sessions Court under the following circumstances:

* Criminal Appeal No. 162 of 1881, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Patna, dated the 19th February 1881.

One of these witnesses was the person whom the defendant and his party were accused of assaulting, and who has since died. Now, before the Magistrate the only complaint was a charge of grievous hurt. But in consequence of the death of the person [44] who was hurt, viz., Khedroo, other charges were added before the Sessions Judge, viz., a charge of murder and a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. In consequence of these additional charges, it is argued that, under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, the questions in issue before the Sessions Court and before the Magistrate, were not substantially the same in the two proceedings. As a matter of fact, the prisoner has only been convicted of grievous hurt; and therefore the issue that was before the Magistrate was the only issue that has been decided against the accused by the jury. It appears to us, that, by "the questions in issue," referred to in s. 33, being required to be "substantially the same," it is not intended that, in a case where the prisoner injured dies subsequently to the enquiry before the Magistrate, his evidence is not to be used before the Sessions Court, because in consequence of his death other charges are framed against the accused. We are of opinion that the evidence of the deceased in this case was admissible under s. 33, and even if it were not admissible under s. 33, that it would be admissible under the first clause of s. 32 of the Evidence Act. The question whether the proviso to s. 33 is applicable,—that is, whether the questions at issue are substantially the same,—depends upon whether the same evidence is applicable, although different consequences may follow from the same act. Now, here the act was the stroke of a sword which, though it did not immediately cause the death of the deceased person, yet conduced to bring about the result subsequently. In consequence of the person having died, the gravity of the offence became presumptively increased; but the evidence to prove the act with which the accused was charged remained precisely the same. We therefore think that this evidence was properly admitted under s. 33.

With respect to the other deposition which was put in and read before the Sessions Court, it appears that a person named Jan Ali, alleged to be the gomasta of the ticcadar, was examined before the Magistrate, and that he lived in the cutcherry-house. A summons was properly taken out to be served on Jan Ali at the cutcherry-house; but the peon in his return stated that as he was unable to find Jan Ali and serve him [45] personally, he hung up the summons on the cutcherry-house. There is also evidence to show that Jan Ali suddenly disappeared from the cutcherry-house. It is further shown that inquiry was made in his native village whether he had returned there; but the result of the inquiry was that nothing had been heard of him. It was therefore impossible to say where Jan Ali was or to serve him with a summons. We think, under these circumstances, that his deposition was properly usable under s. 33 before the Sessions Court; and it does not appear that any objection was made before the Judge to its admission. We find on the record no petition or memorandum showing that objection was made when the deposition was read; but we do find that, on the part of the defendant himself, the deposition before the Magistrate of one of his own witnesses was put in and was used as evidence. We think, therefore, that both these depositions were properly admitted by the Judge to be used as evidence in this case.

We then come to the next ground before us, that there has been a misdirection by the Judge, or rather a want of sufficient direction to the jury. It is alleged that many matters were not mentioned by the Judge in his charge which ought to have been brought to the notice of the jury; and, in particular, stress was laid on the fact that the Judge made no reference whatever to the evidence of the witnesses for the defence. We asked that the evidence of the witnesses for the defence should be read to us, and it has been read to us, and we have no hesitation in saying that the Judge, by making no reference to it in his charge to the jury, acted favourably rather than otherwise towards the prisoner. For, if reference had been made to that evidence, it would at the same time have been necessary to point out to the jury that the witnesses were not in accord with one another; that their statements were discrepant; and that the evidence of the principal witness, who is now relied upon for the defence, was really unreliable.

Moreover, we know that the prisoner was defended by counsel in the Court below; and although particular points may not have been alluded to in the Judge's charge to the jury, we have little doubt that they were made, and properly made, much of [46] by the defendant's counsel. It is therefore not to be assumed that these points were absent from the minds of the jury in considering their verdict. It is impossible for a Judge in summing up to go into every particular of the evidence. It is only necessary to direct the attention of the jury to the important and salient points in the case.

There is one other objection to which it is necessary to refer, and that is an objection that is taken before us as to the constitution of the jury, but about which there is nothing in the grounds of appeal to this Court. It is stated that the foreman of the jury was a clerk in the Magistrate's office. This is the only ground, as we understand it, on which objection could be made to him. He was challenged before the Judge, and it was for the Judge to decide whether the grounds of the challenge were such that he ought not to be allowed to sit on the jury.

The Judge was not satisfied that the grounds were sufficient; nor do we see any reason why his being a clerk in the Magistrate's office should disqualify him from sitting on the jury.

Under the circumstances, we must dismiss this appeal. The conviction and sentence will stand.

viz., in the first place that the Magistrate is satisfied that a dis-[47]pute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists, and in the second place, the ground upon which he is so satisfied, yet as the police report from which the grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace appeared was incorporated by reference, the final order was not defective.

In re Gobind Chunder Moitra (1) distinguished.

No sufficient evidence of possession was produced before the Magistrate, but evidence as to the title of the person in whose favour the Magistrate found was given, and the Magistrate based his decision upon the latter evidence, and determined the case with reference to the merits of the claims of the parties to the right of possession.

Held that, although the Magistrate would have been justified in looking to the evidence of title in corroboration of the evidence of possession, he was wrong in basing his decision on the evidence of title, and his order was set aside.

The judgments of the Court were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

FIELD, J.—This is a case under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The land in dispute is a piece of newly-formed chur land. It was claimed by one party as belonging to his estate Jahazmara, and by the other party as belonging [48] to the Mehal Panchkati. This rule was obtained substantially on three grounds: first, that the preliminary proceeding of the Magistrate was defective; secondly, that the order made by the Magistrate is bad, inasmuch as it does not contain a sufficient description by boundaries so as to enable the land in respect of which the order has been made to be identified; and thirdly that the Magistrate allowed his mind to dwell, not upon the question of possession, but on the question of title; and that he had not evidence of possession before him which could justify him in making the order. As to the first of these points, the learned Counsel for the petitioner relied on the case of Sheikh Munglo v. Murga Narain Nag (2). In that case no proceeding whatever was recorded by the Magistrate who initiated the proceedings under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There was merely an order endorsed on the back of the police report, which order was in these terms: "Serve a notice on Durga Churn to at once cease from building the hut under s. 518, Criminal Procedure Code, and call on both parties to appear before me this day week with their documents, that I may determine, under

s. 530, Criminal Procedure Code, who is in possession of the disputed land."

Now, in the case at present before us, there is a proceeding. The Magistrate has recorded the following words: "whereas from the police report a breach of the peace probable." It would seem that some such word as "is" or "appears" has been omitted. In In re Gobind Chunder Moitra (1), which was before this Bench a few days ago, I expressed an opinion, that it is the duty of the Magistrate, before taking proceedings under s. 530, to record a proceeding stating, in the first place, that he is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists, and in the second place, the ground upon which he is so satisfied; and these observations have been now pressed upon me. I certainly think that it is the duty of a Magistrate to record distinctly, in cases under s. 550, that which the law requires to be recorded. But whether the omission on the part of a Magistrate to comply precisely with the requirements of the law will, in every case, afford a sufficient [49] ground for setting aside his order, is another matter. In the case In re Gobind Chunder Moitra (1), which was recently before this Bench, a reference was made, in the Magistrate's proceedings, to the police report, and I expressed an opinion that even if the police report were taken to be incorporated by reference in the initial proceeding, there would not be matter sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the law. In the present case, the Magistrate's proceeding by itself, is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law; but if the police report, to which this proceeding refers, be taken to be incorporated, there is sufficient to show, first, that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existed; and secondly, to show grounds upon which the Magistrate might reasonably be so satisfied. I am distinctly of opinion that a Magistrate who records a proceeding like that which has been recorded in the present case, performs his duty in a perfunctory and unsatisfactory manner, but I am not prepared to say that the final order in the present case is defective, on the ground that the initial proceeding did not contain within itself all which the law requires to be recorded, but that we have to look to the police report in order to find matter sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section. On this first ground, then, it appears to me that the objection taken by the learned Counsel must fail. As to the second ground, that, namely, connected with the boundaries, there is, in all probability, a sufficient description, regard being had to the nature of the land which formed the subject of dispute and to the difficulty of giving precise boundaries of chur land; but it is not necessary to go farther into this question, because the order of the Magistrate ought, in my opinion, to be set aside on the remaining ground, which I am about to deal with. This ground is, that there was not evidence of possession before the Deputy Magistrate to justify his order; that he has allowed his mind to wander away from the question of possession, which it was his duty to adjudicate upon; and that his order is based entirely upon the view which he has taken with respect to title.

I have read through the evidence of the witnesses examined [50] on behalf of the petitioner before the Magistrate, and it appears to me that this rule ought to be made absolute upon the ground so taken. S. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enacts that the Magistrate shall, without reference to the merits of the claims of any party to the right of possession, proceed to enquire and decide which party is in possession of the subject of dispute. Now it has been contended before us, that the proper meaning to be placed upon these words is, that the Magistrate is entirely precluded from receiving any evidence whatever as to the title of the parties. In that argument I do not concur. That possession should follow title is a reasonable and natural presumption; and if a Magistrate, in a case of this kind, uses evidence of title merely in order to guide and assist his mind in coming to a decision upon the question of possession, it appears to me that he is not transgressing the provisions just quoted by using evidence of title for this limited purpose; but if, instead of proceeding to decide as to the actual possession, he virtually puts aside the consideration of this question and determines the question of title alone, then I think he is clearly doing that which the law has forbidden him to do. In the present case, the Deputy Magistrate, in the commencement of his judgment, says, that the parties were called upon to show their respective claims to it, i.e., the chur. He does not say that they were called upon to show their respective claims to possession. He then proceeds to enter into the question of title, to consider the circumstances under which the chur came into existence, and to give reasons for thinking that this newly-formed chur is part of the estate of one party rather than of the estate of the other party. Having devoted a considerable portion of his judgment to the question of title, he then proceeds to deal with the question of possession. He commences this part of his judgment by saying, "Now to show possession, Baboo Kali Kristo Thakoor's men have examined several witnesses, one of whom is a Munsifi peon." He then deals with the evidence of the witnesses called to prove the distraint proceedings, which he believes to be fictitious; and finally he says, "I lay not much stress on the deposition of such witnesses. As the circumstance and probability [51] go in favour of Moonshi Golam Ali and as (to?) what I have stated in paragraph two of this decision, the disputed land lies beyond Jahazmara and is adjoined to Chur Panchkati; and as I believe it is in Golam Ali's possession, I direct that the disputed land should remain in Moonshi Golam Ali's possession till otherwise decided by competent Court." Here the Deputy Magistrate expressly states that he does not lay much stress upon the testimony of the witnesses; and if we put aside this oral evidence, the other evidence before him is concerned mainly, or indeed altogether, with the question of title. It is therefore clear that, apart from the oral evidence upon which he did not lay much stress, there was not evidence upon which the Deputy Magistrate could determine the question of actual possession, for evidence of title, though it may supplement and support direct evidence of possession, cannot, standing alone, be proof of possession. If the oral testimony of the witnesses went to show that the possession was with Golam Ali, and if the circumstances and probabilities of the case and evidence of title had been used merely to corroborate this testimony, there would be sufficient on the record to support the order of the Deputy Magistrate; but on examining this oral evidence I find that it is mainly directed to the question of title, and contains little or nothing upon the question of possession.

On the whole it is clear from the matter upon which the witnesses were examined, and from the Deputy Magistrate's judgment, that he did not properly address his mind to the question which it was his duty to try,—that is, the fact of actual possession, but did that very thing which by the provisions of s. 530 he was precluded from doing,—namely, determined the case with reference to the merits of the claims of the parties to the right of possession. This being so, it appears to me that the Deputy Magistrate's order under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be set aside.

This rule will be made absolute.

PONTIFEX, J.—I also agree that the proceedings must be set aside, and after the judgment of my learned brother, it is only necessary for me to say that, in my opinion, there was a sufficient proceeding recorded for the purpose of initiating proceedings under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I also wish to add that, if there had been substantial evidence of possession or a conflict of evidence on that question, the Magistrate would have been justified in looking to the evidence of title in corroboration of the evidence of possession. But as my learned brother has read the deposition of the witnesses, and it does not appear that there was sufficient evidence of possession, I agree that the case should not have been decided upon evidence of title alone.

Rule absolute.

AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).^{*} [11th February, 1881.]

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Mortgage of Ancestral Estate by Father for Family Purposes—Attachment of Property in Execution of Decree—Death of Judgment-Debtor prior to Sale.

Where a decree on a mortgage was obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the debt having been incurred for joint family purposes, and in execution thereof the joint family property was attached, but prior to sale the judgment-debtor died: in a suit subsequently brought by the other members of the joint family praying for a partition of their shares, and for a declaration that such shares were not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree—

Held, that there could not be a partition as between a person already dead and his sons, and that the whole of the ancestral property was liable for the mortgage-debt, the only declaration to which the plaintiffs could be entitled being, that they were not liable to pay the debt.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiffs, seven in number, for the purpose of obtaining a partition of a four-annas share of Mouza Nirpur, and seven-annas of Mouza Chuck Ibrahim [53] between themselves and Chundermun Koer, the deceased father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6, and husband of the plaintiff No. 7; and for a declaration that the share which should be allotted to them was not liable to be sold in execution of a decree, dated 26th July, 1875, passed against the said Chundermun Koer. The facts alleged in the plaint were, that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 6, with Chundermun Koer their father, and the plaintiff No. 7 their mother, were members of a joint Hindu family holding jointly possession of ancestral property consisting of, among others, the mouzas aforesaid; that Chundermun Koer, on the 17th of May, 1874, executed a bond in favour of the defendant (the plaintiffs not being aware for what necessity the bond was executed); that in that bond the abovementioned shares of the mouzas were hypothecated; and that the defendant, on the 26th of July 1875, obtained a decree on the strength of the bond, and that, in execution of the decree, the shares were attached. Chundermun Koer subsequently died. Upon these facts the plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to the declaration and the relief abovementioned. The defendant alleged in his written statement that the mouzas in dispute were the self-acquired property of Chundermun Koer; that the debt contracted by Chundermun Koer, being not for immoral purposes, but, on the other hand, having been necessary for the joint family, was binding upon the sons. The defendant, therefore, contended that the shares in question were liable to be sold in execution. The Subordinate Judge found that the property in dispute was the ancestral property of Chundermun Koer, and that it was not proved that the loan advanced by the defendant on the 17th of May 1874 was necessary for joint family purposes; and, in giving the plaintiff a decree, declared, that only $\frac{1}{8}$ th-anna of Nirpur and $\frac{7}{8}$ th anna share of Chuck Ibrahim was liable to be sold in satisfaction of the defendant's decree against Chundermun Koer, dated the 20th July 1875. and that the remaining portion of the four annas share and seven annas share of those estates belonged to the plaintiffs, and that their shares should be separated from that of Chundermun, and be equally partitioned between themselves.

From this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J. (who, after stating the facts as above, continued).—Upon these findings of fact by the Subordinate Judge he framed the following judgment:—

"It is hereby declared that only $\frac{1}{8}$ th-anna of Nirpur and $\frac{7}{8}$ th anna share of Chuck Ibrahim are liable to be sold in satisfaction of the defendant's decree against Chundermun Koer dated 20th July 1875. The remaining portions of four annas share and seven annas share of those estates belong to the plaintiffs, and their shares should be separated from Chundermun's share, and would be equally partitioned between themselves." We think that this decree is erroneous, because it seems to us that there could not be a partition between a person who is already dead and his sons. No doubt, according to the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (1), if the property under attachment had been sold, and if it had been proved that the decree was a personal decree against the father, and that the debt for which the decree was passed was contracted for immoral purposes, the purchaser would have acquired only the interest of the deceased father, and a partition might have taken place between the purchaser on the one hand, and the sons and the widow on the other. That is not the case here because although there was an attachment in the lifetime of the father, that attachment was not followed by a sale. It may be that the defendant, decree-holder, would not proceed upon that attachment. In that case, the decree which has been passed by the lower Court would be wholly infructuous. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree passed by the lower Court cannot stand. It appears to us that the only declaration which in this suit the plaintiffs can obtain is, that they are not liable to pay the debt due to the defendant under the decree of [55] July 1875. The lower Court has gone into that question in its judgment, and has decided it in favour of the plaintiffs.

This question has been set at rest by the decision in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoolall (1). In the course of the judgment in that case, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe:—"In the case, which has been referred to in argument, of Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Mussumat Babooee Munraj Konweree (2), Lord Justice Knight Bruce, who delivered the judgment of the Privy Council, says,—though an estate be ancestral, it may be charged for some purposes against the heir, for the father's debt, by the father, as indeed the case above cited—Oomed Rai v. Heera Lall (3)—incidentally shows. Unless the debt was of such a nature that it was not the duty of the son to pay it, the discharge of it, even though it affected ancestral estate, would still be an act of pious duty in the son. By the Hindu law the freedom of the son from the obligation to discharge the father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt, and not to the nature of the estate, whether ancestral or acquired, by the creator of the debt." It is quite clear from this passage that, whether the original debt was a personal debt of the father or not, the ancestral property in the hands of the sons would be liable to satisfy it, unless it be proved that it was contracted for immoral purposes. This is clearly an authority to show that, unless the debt is proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes, the defendant is entitled to recover it by the sale of the ancestral property in the hands of the sons. In this case, although the plaintiffs did not allege that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes, still that question had been gone into by the lower Court and found to be not established. That being so, we are of opinion that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the whole of the ancestral estate in the hands of the sons is not liable for the money which is due to the defendant under the decree of July 1875.

The plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, be dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

ASMUTULLAH DALAL AND ANOTHER (Judgment-Debtors) v. KALLY
CHURN MITTER (Decree-Holder).^{*}
[11th March, 1881.]

Execution of decree—Debt payable by instalments—Failure to pay—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 179.

The terms of compromise in a suit for money, provided that the debt should be paid by monthly instalments, and that, on the failure to pay any three successive instalments, the entire amount should be recoverable by application to execute the full decree. The decree was dated the 12th June 1875, the first instalment was due in July 1875, and the last in October 1877. Default was made in payment of the first three instalments, but the decree-holder did not apply for execution, and accepted subsequent payments. On the 13th December 1879, he applied for execution for the amount then remaining due.

Held, that the period of limitation prescribed by art. 179, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, began to run on the third default taking place, and that no subsequent payment could stop limitation once begun.

ON the 12th June 1875, one Kally Churn Mitter obtained a decree against one Asmutullah Dalal and another for Rs. 751-1-6. The parties had filed a solenamah in the suit, and it was provided, that the sum for which the decree had been obtained should be paid by instalments, commencing from the 10th Assar 1282 (July 1875), and extending to the 30th Assin 1284 (October 1877); and that, on failure to pay any three consecutive kists, the entire amount should be recoverable by application to execute the full decree. Default was made by the judgment-debtors in the first three instalments, but the decree-holder did not apply for execution and accepted payments in subsequent months in satisfaction of the various instalments. On the 13th December 1879, an application for execution for Rs. 345-7-9, the amount remaining due, was made. The Munsif held, that the right to levy execution accrued on the 1st Bhadro 1282, or August 1875, when the judgment-debtors failed to pay the [57] third instalment; and that, as more than three years had elapsed from that date, the application was barred by limitation. This decision was reversed by the District Judge, who held, that the "certain date," mentioned in art. 179, cl. 6 of sch. ii to Act XV of 1877, was in this case any one of several successive dates, "i.e., the 30th of each successive group of three months in which default was made," and that time began to run after default of any three of the kists.

The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MORRIS and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by TOTTENHAM, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is, whether the execution of the decree held by the respondent is barred by limitation as is contended by the appellants. The law applicable is Act XV of 1877.

The date of the decree is the 12th June 1875, and this application for execution, apparently the first, was filed on the 13th of December 1879,—i.e., four and a half years after the above date.

It appears that the parties had filed a solenamah in the original suit, the terms of which were embodied in the decree. It was accordingly directed that the decretal amount should be paid off by instalments on particular dates specified, the last instalments falling due between two and three years after the date of the decree. And it was provided, that should the judgment-debtors make default in the payment of three instalments, the decree-holder might thereupon execute the decree for the whole amount at once, without waiting for the subsequent instalments. In the very first three instalments there occurred default, and on no subsequent occasion was the due instalment paid up, punctually or in full. Payments were, however, made at uncertain intervals down to the month of Assar 1286,—that is, one year and nine months after the last instalment ought accord-[58]ing to the decree, to have been paid off. A considerable amount is said to be still outstanding, and the present application, which is simply for execution of the decree for the amount still due, after deduction of the various sums already realised, was filed, as already stated, on the 13th December 1879, which corresponds with the end of Aghran 1281.

The period of limitation applicable to the case is admittedly three years. The dispute is as to the date from which the period is to be counted. The first Court was of opinion, that it should be counted from the date on which the judgment-debtors had first been guilty of three defaults in paying the instalments specified in the decree. The Munsif thus held that limitation began to run on the 1st Bhadro 1282, or in August 1875, and the application not having been made within three years of that date, he held that execution was barred. The lower Appellate Court reversed this decision, being of opinion that cl. 6 of art. 179 in the second schedule of the Limitation Act governed the application, and that the "certain date," therein mentioned is in this case "any one of several successive dates,—i.e., the 30th of each successive group of three months in which default is made." And further on the Judge says,—"According to my view, time may begin to run after default 'of any three of the kists.'"

By this decision the Judge seems to accord to the decree-holder the privilege of selecting for himself the date from which limitation shall be counted. Clearly he will not allow the first Court or the judgment-debtors to settle the date. It seems to us that the Judge is wrong in supposing that the law intends to leave the question of limitation to the option either of any Court or of any party to the proceedings.

The Judge refers to two cases, Upendra Mohan Tagore v. Takilia Bepari (1) and Krishna Chandra Shaha v. Omed Ali (2), dealing with the old law of limitation in respect of execution of decrees, viz., s. 20, Act XIV of 1859, decided in this Court, in order to show, that, under that law, fresh limitation ran from each fresh default made by a judgment-debtor in paying instalments provided by a decree.

[59] He observes, that these rulings are no doubt based on the principle that a creditor shall not suffer in consequence of having shown consideration to a defaulting debtor by any strained application of the law. And he goes on to say that his own view is, that the new Limitation Act does not alter the law in this particular.

The rulings quoted do not, however, seem to us to be based upon any sentimental principle whatever. The first case was decided upon the principle, that the law allowed a period of three years from the date upon which the right to execute accrued, which, in the case of a decree for instalments, could not be until the first default in payment of an instalment, and the decree-holder was within three years of the accrual of his right to execute. In the second case it was simply held, with reference to the provisions of s. 20, that proceedings to keep the decree alive had, in fact, been taken within three years before the application then under consideration.

We find nothing in the present law to show that there are, or may be, various recurrent starting points from which limitation is to run in respect of the execution of a decree as a whole after it has become final. Excepting that each application or notice referred to in cls. 4 and 5 of art. 179 of the second schedule gives a fresh starting point, otherwise there is but one starting point provided for limitation in respect of execution of a decree as a whole, viz., the date of its becoming final, or if the decree orders that the whole amount be paid on a certain date, then such date. Section 4 of the Act requires, that any application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule, shall be dismissed.

The decree before us ordered certain sums to be paid on certain dates, and in respect of those sums the provision contained in cl. 6 of art. 179 was applicable. But the decree nowhere directs that the payment of the whole amount outstanding shall be made at a certain date. It only gives the decree-holder the option of applying for execution of the whole decree still unsatisfied, upon the occurrence of default in three of the prescribed instalments. Under the decree, therefore, the decree-holder had several courses open to him, subject, of course, to the rules of limitation. He could have, upon the occurrence of three defaults, forthwith taken [60] out execution of the whole decree, or he could have executed for each instalment severally within three years after it became due, or he might have contended himself with accepting whatever was paid from time to time and then applied for execution of the decree for the outstanding balance, taking care to do so before the expiry of three years from the date of the decree or from the date of the third default, if he thought the terms of the decree altered the period of limitation. The law, by cl. 6 of art. 179, sufficiently recognizes and provides for the Court's power under s. 210 of the Civil Procedure to order the amount of a decree to be paid by instalments, but there is nothing in the limitation law which recognizes any authority in this Court to supersede its provisions by extending the period of limitation and admitting an application for execution of a decree as a whole more than three years after the date mentioned in art. 179.

The lower Appellate Court seems to have supposed that the decree ordered the whole amount to be paid at the date of any third default in the prescribed instalments, and that, therefore, cl. 6 would save limitation any time within three years of the last such instalment falling due. But that opinion is untenable. If the bar to immediate execution contained in the decree itself does at all extend the period prescribed by art. 179, that period certainly began to run on the third default taking place, and no subsequent payment could stop limitation once begun (s. 9). This application was not made within three years of even the third default, and therefore, in so far as it is an application under the penalty clause of the decree for execution of the decree as a whole, it is barred by limitation. But we think that the decree-holder is still entitled to the benefit of cl. 6 of art. 179 as respects any instalments ordered in the decree, and which fell due on dates not exceeding three years before the application was filed.

The present appeal is, therefore, dismissed, and the lower Court will be directed to execute the decree for such instalments as are not barred, and the amounts of which may be found to be still outstanding on an account being taken.

We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Partial satisfaction under arrangements made by Court—Limitation—Subsequent application for execution.

In execution of a decree, an order was made by the Court, directing the payment of the rents of certain property, which had been attached as they became due from the mukuridar to the judgment-debtors, to be made to the decree-holder, to satisfy his decree; and afterwards the execution case was struck off the file. Subsequently, default having been made by the mukuridar in the payment of the rents of certain years, and the decree not having been fully satisfied, the decree-holder applied for an order directing the payment of the rents which were in arrear to be made by the mukuridar in accordance with the previous order. Notice having been directed to be served on the judgment-debtors, they came in, and pleaded limitation.

Held, that as the application was not strictly one for fresh execution, limitation could not apply, and that as the effect of the order in the execution-proceedings was virtually to appoint the decree-holder receiver under the provisions of s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859, and as the attachment was still in force, his proper course was to file a regular suit qua receiver against the mukuridar.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The decree upon which execution had, in the first instance, been obtained, was that of the High Court on special appeal, dated the 29th June 1865. The decree-holder applied for execution in 1867, and attached a mouza, alleged to be the property of the judgment-debtors; but, in attempting to sell it, he was met with the objection that it was debutter property. This objection was sustained by the Principal Sudder Ameen, who, [62] on the 29th February 1868, ordered, that the property was to remain under attachment, and that the decree-holder was to continue to receive from the mukuridar who held the mouza the annual rent payable

APPEL- The decree-holder filed his present application for execution on the LATE 14th April 1880, and stated therein that the amount still due to him
CIVIL. allowing for what had been paid, was Rs. 1,761-6-4; that the mukuraridar, in accordance with the order of the 29th February 1868, paid him the rents from 1275 to 1384, corresponding with the years 1868 to 1878, but had not paid him those accrued due since, and he asked therefore for an order that he might be compelled to pay him the rents for the years 1285 and 1286, corresponding with 1878 to 1880, towards the satisfaction of the decree.

7 C. 61.

The application was made before the Subordinate Judge, who directed notices to be served on the judgment-debtors, and they came in and pleaded limitation to fresh execution being issued. The Additional Judge, however, held, that the effect of the order of the 29th February 1868 was virtually to constitute the decree-holder receiver under the provisions of s. 243 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), and as the attachment was still in force, this application was not for execution, but merely to enforce compliance of that order against the mukuraridar; consequently limitation could not apply. Inasmuch, however, as the relief sought could not be granted in this summary proceeding, he disallowed the petition, but without costs, and referred the decree-holders to a regular suit for rent in his capacity of receiver against the mukuraridar.

From this order the judgment-debtors appealed.

Baboo Hem Chunder Bannerjee for the appellants.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

[63] The judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by

CUNNINGHAM, J.—In execution of the decree which forms the subject of this appeal, the Subordinate Judge, on the 29th February 1868, found, that the property under attachment being debutter could not be sold, but while exempting it from sale, he attached the rents payable to the judgment-debtors, making them applicable towards satisfaction of the decree. His order directed the mukuraridar, the lessee of the judgment-debtors, to pay his rents to the decree-holder. The terms of this order may be somewhat informal, but, as we understand them, they amounted to an appointment of the decree-holder to be a receiver under s. 243, Act VIII of 1859, without the direct intervention of the Court, as is usual between the receiver and the decree-holder.

These collections were made up to the end of 1284 (April 1878), that is, for about ten years. For some reason or other the decree-holder then had some difficulty in realizing his rents, and he has been badly advised to apply to the Court for re-execution of his decree against the judgment-debtors, instead of acting under the authority of the order of February 1868, and he has asked for an order directing the mukuraridar to pay the rents for 1285 and 1286.

The judgment-debtors have, accordingly, pleaded limitation in bar of further execution of this decree.

The Subordinate Judge has disallowed this objection, holding that the matter now before him was not in execution of the decree, but simply one between the decree-holder and the Court, the decree being under execution in the hands of the Court; and that, under such circumstances, there could be no limitation. We think that this view of the law is correct. The property is still under attachment, and the Court has itself undertaken the duty of satisfying the decree from the usufruct of the property by appointing a receiver. The decree-holder, qua decree-holder, is powerless. He is merely the recipient of money deposited at his credit in the Court. In the present instance, through the accident that the decree-holder has himself been appointed receiver, payments are made without the direct intervention [64] of the Court; but they are, nevertheless, from time to time, certified to the Court, since the decree-holder has been ordered to submit his accounts to the Court.

The proceedings in execution under the order of February 1868 have never yet terminated, and therefore no question of limitation arises.

The case of Hurronath Bhunjo v. Chunni Lall Ghose (1) which was relied upon by the judgment-debtors' pleader, both before the Subordinate Judge and before this Court, is not in point. The Subordinate Judge has rightly distinguished this case, which was one in which, by private arrangement the judgment-debtor agreed to satisfy the decree by monthly payments without any intervention of the Court. The proceedings in execution then terminated, so far as they were conducted through the Court, and when it was sought to revive them, it was found that they had become barred by limitation.

No doubt, the form which the present proceedings have taken at the instance of the decree-holder is, as I have already pointed out, irregular, for there was no necessity to apply for execution of the decree or to bring the judgment-debtors before the Court. The judgment-debtors would, therefore, ordinarily be entitled to their costs, but they have chosen to plead limitation both in the lower Court and before us in appeal, and as that plea has been rejected we cannot give them any costs.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal, but without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHANDRA NATH SIRKAR AND OTHERS. THE EMPRESS v. CHANDRA NATH SIRKAR AND OTHERS.*
[2nd April, 1881.]

Confession—Persons jointly charged—Statement by Prisoner in absence of Co-prisoners—Evidence Act (I of 1872) s. 30.

Several persons were charged together with offences under ss. 148, 302, 324, and 326 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge, when about to examine the prisoners, required all but the prisoner under examination to withdraw from the Court until their respective turn for examination came round, and convicted each prisoner chiefly upon what was said by his co-prisoners during his absence from the Court.

Held that the evidence so given was inadmissible.

THE facts of the case fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. Gasper and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the appellants.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered

MORRIS, J.—This is a case of riot, which resulted in the death of one Gopeenath Manjhi, permanent injury to the right arm of Khaim Sheikh caused by gunshots, and minor injuries to others, also caused by gunshots and by cutting weapons.

The Sessions Judge, in concurrence with both the assessors, has convicted Chandra Nath Sirkar, Alum Poramanick, Nundo Manjhi, and Hukim Pormanick of riot under s. 148 of the Penal Code, but differing from the assessors, he has also convicted Chandra and Nundo Manjhi of culpable homicide not amounting to murder; and he has sentenced Chandra Nath Sirkar to transportation for life, Nundo Manjhi to transportation for ten years, and Alum Poramanick and Hukim Poramanick to rigorous imprisonment for three years.

[66] Concurring with one assessor, but differing from the other, the Sessions Judge has further convicted Malu Sheikh, Modhone Sheikh, Mudhee Sheikh, and Kolimuddeen Pathan, of riot, but he has, differing from both assessors, also convicted the last named of culpable homicide not amounting to murder; and he has sentenced Kolimuddeen Pathan to transportation for life, and the other three persons to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Two other men were acquitted by the Sessions Judge.

Appeals have been preferred against all these sentences.

The appellants have been defended by Mr. Gasper both in the Sessions Court and before us, and we are surprised to find that, in a case of such public importance and of so serious a character, the Legal Remembrancer has not been instructed to appear on behalf of the prosecution.

It appears that disputes have been existing, for some time past, in the village of Tepri, between two parties claiming to receive rents from the ryots, the one party being certain Sandivals of Solop, Kali Sunder Sandyal and another, and the other party, one Debi Doss, the auction-purchaser of the rights and interests of Bykunt Sandyal, brother of the Sandyals of the first party. Before this occurrence, Debi Doss died, but his interest is represented by his son Jibun Ram.

The existence of these disputes, and the likelihood of their terminating in a serious riot, was well known to the police, whose station is two and-a-half kos, or five miles, distant from Tepri; and so late as the morning of the riot, which forms the subject of the present trial, the head constable left the place on completion of an investigation into an offence which arose out of the disturbed state of the village. The evidence shows that both sides had then assembled forcibly to assert their respective claims, and foreign clubmen (deshwalis) had been enlisted to overawe the villagers, and, in the event of a disturbance, to give to their respective sides the benefit of their superior strength and skill.

Under his purchase in 1283 or 1876 of the rights and interests of Bykunt Sandyal, Debi Doss claimed the entire sixteen annas share of the rents of the village. The other Sandyals opposed him, alleging that the interest of Bykunt Sandyal was only a small fractional share not exceeding one anna. The villagers [67] generally had yielded to the claim of Debi Doss, but a certain number of men of the fisher-class, inhabiting the quarter called Manjhipara, refused to pay him the rent demanded of them, and were supported and encouraged in their resistance by the Sandyals.

The zemindari cutcherry of Debi Doss was held at the house of Mundo Manjhi, close to the Manjhi's quarter, and a fence had been set up, barring the passage into the homestead of Dusrut and Subul Manjhi, at the head of the path, which runs west and north of Nundo Manjhi's homestead. The object of this was apparently to protect the Manjhis against any sudden attack from the cutcherry quarter. These facts must have been patent to the head constable, who was in Tepri on the morning of the riot, and it is impossible to believe that they were not also known to the superior police officers at the adjoining police station. It is matter, therefore, of extreme surprise that they did not take strict measures to prevent the breach of the peace that was evidently imminent, or at any rate to hinder the introduction of fire-arms and large bodies of "deshwalis" into the village. This negligence on their part has deprived this Court of independent testimony, and made it extremely difficult to ascertain from the garbled accounts of the partisans of either side what the real facts connected with the origin of this riot are, or to say which party took the initiative. We gather, however, from the evidence that, on the 10th July 1880 (Asar 27th, 1287), Chandra Nath Sirkar held open cutcherry under a gab-tree close to the house of Nundo Manjhi, which had been set apart for a cutcherry, and began collecting rent from the villagers on the part of Debi Doss.

An attempt was evidently made to collect the rent from the residents of the Manjhipara close by, and this was at once met by an attack in force by the Manjhis, aided by deshwalis of the Sandyals, who were either stationed in the house of Gopal Manjhi or in the neighbouring house of Bhagirathi Thakur. The houses of Gopee Manjhi, Dusrut, and Subul, which were in one cluster, became the scene of the disturbance, and almost immediately a large body of men on both sides assembled there and began the fight. One or more guns were discharged at the Manjhis, resulting in the wounding of Gopeenath Manjhi, [68] Khaim Sheikh, and Dhonai. Gopeenath died in hospital on the 13th from peritonitis caused by this injury, and Khaim has been permanently deprived of the use of his right arm. It would seem that they were standing in the lane near the bamboo fence. There is much discrepancy in the evidence regarding the number of shots fired and by whom they were fired, but it is clear from the nature of the injuries inflicted, and the shot-marks found on the spot, that there must have been more than one discharge of fire-arms. There was some attempt made on behalf of the prisoners to account for these gunshots by an accidental discharge in the struggle brought on by the Manjhis, but there is no reason for accepting this explanation. There can be no doubt that the guns were fired deliberately at the Manjhis to injure some of them, and to ensure success to Debi Doss's party. Some of the witnesses even declare that certain persons, one of whom was the prisoner Kolimuddeen, were ordered to fire to drive off the Manjhis; whichever party, therefore, made the first move, it is clear that the other was fully prepared to resist, and it is equally clear that the party of Debi Doss overcame the Manjhis and looted their houses after they ran away. There is no evidence to show that the prisoners acted in the exercise of their legal rights of self-defence, and therefore any one of them who is proved to have been present, engaged in this riot, is liable to be convicted of some offence connected therewith. The Sessions Judge has felt the difficulty of relying implicitly on the evidence of the Manjhi witnesses, who, no doubt, were actively engaged on their side: and he has adopted the extraordinary expedient of convicting the prisoners principally on what each has said regarding the other. However much the law (s. 30, Evidence Act) may allow him to take into consideration a confession made by one of the prisoners as affecting himself and also another prisoner, the course which Mr. Gasper states the Sessions Judge adopted in recording the statements of the prisoners, and which is not denied by the Sessions Judge in reply to our enquiry on this subject, would prevent us from giving full effect to that law. It would seem, that when the Sessions Judge was about to examine the prisoners, he required each to withdraw from the Court until [69] his turn for examination came round. In consequence of this procedure, the principal prisoner, Chandra Nath Sirkar, was examined in the absence of the other prisoners, who never had an opportunity of denying or even knowing what he had said, and yet that statement, made behind their backs, is made the chief ground for convicting them. It is an elementary rule that no one should be condemned in his absence, and yet the Sessions Judge has acted in a manner directly opposed to it. We, therefore, are obliged to place entirely out of consideration any statement made by any of the accused in the absence of another prisoner so far as it affects the latter. (His Lordship then proceeded to consider the evidence and dismissed the appeals).

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Morris and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

BABA CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. ABEDOODEEN MAHOMED AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [17th February, 1881.]

Suit for arrears of rent—Beng. Act VI of 1862, s. 10—Irregular proceedings of Collector under—Shareholder—Proprietor.

An applicant under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862 must be the proprietor of the estate, and not merely a shareholder in the proprietary body.

Mahomed Bahadoor Mojoondar v. Rajah Raj Kishen Singh (1), Moolook Chand Mundul v. Modhoosoodun Bachusputty (2), Shoorender Mohun Roy v. Bhuggobut Churn Gangopadhya (3), followed.

Under the above section, the Collector is not entitled to assess the rents at what he considers to be fair and reasonable rates from the rents prevailing in the neighbouring properties, but is only authorised to ascertain for the landlord what the existing condition of his estate is, what are the measurements, what the names of his tenants, and what the rents they are paying.

Anunt Manjhee v. Joy Chunder Chowdhry (4), followed.

In a suit for rent by one co-sharer, the plaintiff claimed that the rent should be calculated at the rate fixed by the Collector, in a proceeding held [70] under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862. It appeared that the defendants had not had notice of the proceeding, and that the Collector had ascertained the rate from the rents paid in the neighbouring properties.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 1189 to 1211 of 1879, against the decree of Baboo Bhugwan Chunder Chuckerbutty, Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, dated the 19th March 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Bhubun Mohun Ghose, Munsif of Bhatmari, dated the 26th August 1878.

(1) 15 W.R. 522. (2) 16 W.R. 126. (3) 18 W.R. 332. (4) 12 W.R. 371.

Held, that the proceedings of the Collector were irregular, as he had acted without jurisdiction, and that they were not binding on the defendants for the purpose of showing the rate at which rent was payable by them.

In all these cases, which were analogous and tried together by the consent of all parties, the plaintiff sued the defendants for arrears of rent for the years 1281, 1282, 1283, and part of 1284, corresponding with the years 1874 to 1878, at a rate fixed by the Collector in a proceeding held by him under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862. The defendants contended that the rate claimed were in excess of those actually due, and that they were exorbitant; and further, that they were not bound by the proceedings of the Collector, as neither they, nor their predecessors, had been parties thereto, and that such proceedings were irregular and illegal.

It appeared that the plaintiff had become the purchaser of a two-annas eight-gandas share in the mouza in which the defendants held their jamas, and he alleged that, having failed to realize any rents through the ryots having combined against him at the instigation of his other co-sharers, and refused all information, he was forced to apply to the Collector under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862. The Collector thereupon deputed an Amin to ascertain the tenures and the rents payable in respect thereof, and it was upwards of three years before this enquiry could be completed. During his proceedings, the Amin, being unable to proceed in the ordinary way, applied to the Collector, and under his instructions proceeded to ascertain the rents payable in the disputed mouza from those paid in the adjoining village, and having duly prepared the necessary papers, submitted them to the Collector, along with the jamabandi terij, on the 27th June 1870. The Collector, subsequently on the 29th June 1870, confirmed the report and directed a decree to issue in accordance therewith.

It appeared also during the hearing of these cases that the same jamabandi terij had been filed in certain other suits in which the present defendants were not parties, which had been [71] instituted by the plaintiff against other ryots, and in which he had obtained decrees; but it seemed that there was ample evidence on the record in those suits, apart from the jamabandi terij, to prove that the rents which he then claimed were calculated at the rates actually payable to him, whereas in the present cases no such evidence had been given, but, on the contrary, it was shown from the jama-waseel-bakee papers of the other thirteen annas nine and a quarter gandas proprietor in the estate, that the defendants were in possession of these respective tenures at and after the several rents admitted by them to be justly due, which were calculated at a rate far less than that now claimed by the plaintiff. From the evidence of the plaintiff's own witnesses it was further shown, that he had been in receipt of rent from the defendants since 1272, corresponding with the years 1864-65, which was previous to the application being made to the Collector to have the measurement taken and the rent ascertained; and that, after he had become a shareholder by purchase in the mehal, he had instituted a suit for mesne profits which had accrued due to him from the persons who had withheld possession since the date on which he had acquired the right by purchase; and consequently it was urged by the defendants that there had been no necessity for the proceedings held by the Collector.

The defendants admitted rent to be due by them but at a considerably lower rate than that claimed; and pleaded tender of that amount, but failed to prove any such tender.

The Munsif accordingly after having heard the evidence on both sides, gave the plaintiff a decree with costs for the full amount claimed by him, calculating the same at the rate fixed by the Collector in the above proceeding and set out in the jamabandi terij; but on appeal this decree was varied by the Subordinate Judge, who held that the Collector's proceedings were not binding on the defendants, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the rent claimed, calculating the same at and after the rates admitted by the defendants.

From this decree the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—In all the suits for arrears of rent out of which these appeals arise, the Subordinate Judge has declined to recognize the rates of rent fixed by the Collector in the proceedings held by him at the instance of the plaintiff under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862, and has dismissed the plaintiff's suits, save in respect of certain sums admitted by the defendants themselves. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge is appealed against, on the ground that he cannot go behind the decision of the Collector under Beng. Act VI of 1862, that the defendants made no appeal at the time against the decision under s. 10, and that, therefore, the proceedings under that section are final.

It seems to us, however, clear on the face of those proceedings, that the Collector acted without jurisdiction; and that, therefore, the Subordinate Judge is right in declining to accept the rates that have been fixed by him.

First, the Collector proceeded on the application of a fractional holder of the estate only, and not on the application, as the law requires, of "the proprietor" of it. In his plaints in the several suits before us, the plaintiff himself admits that it was he alone who instituted proceedings in the Collectorate, and that, out of the entire sixteen annas, he held a two annas eight gandas share only. But in numerous decisions of this Court it has been held, that an applicant under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862 must be the proprietor of the estate, not a shareholder only in the proprietary body, and that such shareholder cannot demand separate measurements; see Mahomed Bahadoor Mozoomdar v. Rajah Raj Kishen Singh (1) Moolock Chand Mundul v. Modhoosoodun Bachusputty (2), and Shoorender Mohun Roy v. Bhuggobut Churn Gungopadhya (3). On the application, therefore, of the present plaintiff only, the Collector had no jurisdiction to proceed under this section. A second [73] fatal objection is, that the Collector did not proceed to ascertain, determine, and record the rate of rent payable in respect of the lands in question. On the contrary, he assessed them at the rates which the Amin ascertained to be prevailing in the neighbouring villages, and not in the village itself. That the Collector based his decision, as to the lands and jamabandi, entirely upon the report and enquiry of the Amin, is indisputable. It is so stated by him in his own proceedings. But the Amin, as is apparent from his report, was unable to ascertain from the ryots themselves what the actually existing rates of rent payable by them were. He refused to accept the rates which were entered in the papers of one of the co-sharers in the estate which he saw, and he avowedly adopted the rates which he found to prevail in the neighbouring villages. It is evident, therefore, that, instead of ascertaining and recording the existing rates, he assessed what he considered to be fair and equitable rates. But this he clearly had no power to do, and the Collector was acting equally ultra vires in accepting and adopting them. This is the view of the law taken in Anunt Manjhee v. Joy Chunder Chowdhry(1); there the learned Judges say—"In the present instance what the Revenue Officer did was to assess upon the land such rent as he thought proper. This is quite beyond the power of any one acting under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862. The sole object of that section is to authorize the Revenue Courts to ascertain for the landlord what the existing condition of his estate is, what are the measurements, what the names of the tenants, and what the rents that they are paying."

(3) 18 W. R. 332.

In other particulars the Collector has acted irregularly and contrary to the provisions of s. 10. But the above mentioned two instances suffice to show that he has far exceeded the power given him under s. 10, and that his decision cannot be sustained.

We, therefore, affirm the decision of the lower Court, and dismiss all these appeals with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

ATTERMONEY DOSSEE (Plaintiff) v. HURRY DOSS DUTT (Defendant).
[13th April, 1881.]

Ex parte suit on a former decree of the High Court—Procedure on revivor.

There is nothing in Act X of 1877 which prevents a suit from being instituted on a decree of the High Court.

[F., 33 C. 560 (564)=9 C.W.N. 952; D., 6 B. 7 (8); 8 B. 1 (13).]

THE plaintiff stated, that one Gostobehary Mullick had, on the 8th May 1875, in a mortgage suit against one Hurry Doss Dutt, obtained a decree for an account and for a sale of the mortgaged premises, and for payment of any deficiency that might remain after sale; that, in June 1876, Gostobehary Mullick died intestate, having received nothing under his decree save a sum of Rs. 130 for interest. On the 31st March 1879, letters of administration to the estate of Gostobehary were granted to his mother Attermoney Dossee (the present plaintiff.) The decree, however, remained unsatisfied, no steps having been taken to revive the suit. Attermoney Dossee, therefore, brought the present suit on the decree of the 8th May 1875 (it being too late to revive the suit in the usual way under the Civil Procedure Code), asking that her suit might be taken as supplemental to the former suit, and that she might be declared entitled to the benefit of the former decree; that the amount due under the said decree and indenture of mortgage and costs might be paid to her as administratrix, or that, in default, the premises might be sold as

JUDGMENT.

 9 C.L.R. 357. [75] The judgment of the Court was delivered by WILSON, J.—This case raises a question which, so far as I know, has not been before decided. I do not think the question is one of any great difficulty; but as the suit is undefended, and I therefore had not the advantage of hearing the matter argued from the defendant's point of view,
 I thought it right to take time to consider.

I think the suit is well brought. It may be regarded in either of two ways. It may be looked at as a suit upon the former decree. As a general rule a suit lies upon the decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction, unless the right to sue be taken away expressly or by implication. I see nothing to prevent a suit being brought upon a decree of this Court. And the Limitation Act prescribes the period of limitation for such a suit in
 sch. ii, div. i, art. 122.

This suit may again be regarded as a suit supplemental to the former suit, and to revive the decree. And so regarded, I think, the suit is properly brought. Under the older procedure in the Supreme Court, a common law judgment was revived by scire facias, a proceeding which was of the nature of a new action to give effect to the old. An equity suit was revived by bill of revivor.

Act VI of 1854, s. 31, introduced a simpler method of reviving a suit on the Equity Side of the Court, by order in the suit, founded upon a suggestion without the necessity of a bill. But I can see nothing in that enactment to take away the right to proceed by bill, if for any reason the simpler mode of proceeding was not available.

The High Court inherited all the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court.

The provisions of Act VIII of 1859 were, by rule, made generally applicable to this Court; and that Act contained provisions for reviving suits by a summary process. The present Procedure Code, which, for the most part, applies by its own authority to this Court, contains provisions of a like nature. But in these Acts again I find nothing to take away the right to proceed by the older and more cumbrous methods, if for any [76] reason the parties to a suit are unable to take advantage of the newer and simpler procedure.

In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this suit, and should have a decree in the terms of the first and second prayers of the plaint, the defendants having six months' time to redeem. The defendant, however, is not to blame for the necessity having arisen for recourse to a suit. That was in consequence of difference between the parties interested in Gostobehary Mullick's estate. The decree will, therefore, be without costs up to decree.

7 C. 76.Public documents—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 74.

In a suit to obtain possession, under a title acquired by purchase at an auction of certain lands, together with mesne profits, upon setting aside an alleged taluqua etmami right claimed by the defendants, the defendants in support of their claim produced certain documents purporting to be abstracts from, or copies of, Government measurement chittas, dated Mugh 1126-27 (1764). These documents were produced from the Collectorate, but there was nothing to show that they were the record of measurements made by any Government officer.

Held, that they were not "public documents" within the meaning of s. 74 of the Evidence Act.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—The only point at issue in this case is whether the etmami tenure of the defendants existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decision of the first Court, has decided in favour of the defendants. It relies entirely upon certain papers of the year 1126-27 Mugh, corresponding with the English year 1764, which purport to be abstracts from, or copies of, chittas made apparently in that year. The Judge says: "I am inclined to admit them," and he does so, because, to use his own words, "they are public documents compiled by, used by, and guarded by public officers, and their certified copies are admissible as evidence of the contents of the original." Now, in the first place, these documents are not copies of the originals, but they are copies of copies. No reason is assigned why the originals or their copies are not produced. Then, again, there is nothing to show, beyond the fact that they came from the Collectorate, that they are the record of measurements made by any Government officer. So far as we can judge, they are only abstracts of measurement chittas of the year 1126-27. Whether they correctly represent the khutian, or abstract of those chittas, it is impossible to say, for there is no evidence whatever on this point; nor is it apparent in what year they were made, or in what respect they were of public use. Therefore, we find ourselves unable to hold that these documents are "public documents" within the meaning of s. 74 of the Evidence Act. Independently of these documents, there is no evidence which throws back the tenure of the defendants to a later date than 1,200 Mugh, which corresponds with the year 1839. In that year this tenure was measured with other tenures of the turuff of the plaintiff under the name of Elman Allal Roshan.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 690 of 1879, against the decree of Baboo Koilash Chunder Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 12th December 1878, modifying the decree of Baboo Chunder Coomar Roy, Munsif of Fatik-chari, dated the 31st January 1877.

No doubt, in the measurement record of certain plots of this tenure, other tenures, such as Inas, Rofi, Razak, Aziz, and Razak Aziz Kutab, are referred to as apparently connected with [78] it. But whether Inas, Rofi, Aziz, and Kutab were relations of the ancestors of Allal and Roshan, grandfathers of the present defendants, is unknown. Even assuming that the etmams bearing those names have some connection with the original etmams of Allal and Roshan, there is no evidence to show how long they existed,—that is to say, whether they were created before or after the Permanent Settlement. It seems to us, therefore, that there is no evidence to support the finding of the Judge in favour of the defendants that the etmam in suit was in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement. We, therefore, set aside his judgment and restore that of the first Court, with costs of this Court and of the Court below.

RAJKISHORE SHAHA (Plaintiff) v. BHADOO NOSHOO AND OTHERS
(Defendants). [11th March, 1881.]

Money-decree on mortgage bond—Subsequent suit by mortgagee to enforce his lien on the property mortgaged.

The plaintiff, a mortgagee of certain specific property, given as security for an advance, obtained a money-decree against the representatives of his debtor. A third person, having a claim against the same debtor, seized and attached the specific property mortgaged to the plaintiff, and sold to A, who had notice of the plaintiff's lien. The plaintiff then brought a suit against A and the representatives of his debtor, to have his lien declared and debt satisfied.

Held, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's previous money-decree, he was still entitled to enforce his lien against the property pledged.

[R., 10 C. 567 (570); D., 33 C. 849 (851).]

IN December 1875, one Asman Singh executed a bond in favour of the plaintiff in consideration of a loan of Rs. 899, pledging, as collateral security, an elephant. Asman Singh subsequently died, and on the 8th May 1877, the plaintiff obtained a money-decree on the bond against the representatives of Asman Singh.

[79] On the 16th May 1877, one Kenaram (who was also a creditor of Asman Singh) obtained a decree against his representatives, and in execution of this decree put up the elephant for sale. The elephant was purchased by the defendant Bhadoo, who had express notice of the plaintiff's lien.

Bhadoo, after the purchase, refused to recognize the plaintiff's lien, whereupon the plaintiff brought this present suit to have his lien declared, and the elephant sold in satisfaction thereof.

The defendant contended that the question was res judicata under the plaintiff's decree of the 8th May 1877; that the plaintiff's lien had merged in the judgment under that decree, and that the lien had passed to himself when he purchased at the auction-sale.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 278 of 1879, against the decree of J. W. Campbell, Esq., Judge of Rungpore, dated the 16th June 1879.

The District Judge held, that the plaintiff's lien had not been extinguished by the judgment, and that it did not pass to the purchaser of the elephant; but that, as against the defendant, the plaintiff's lien was lost, that the suit was not barred as res judicata, but that the plaintiff was only entitled to a declaratory decree.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, on the grounds that he ought to have obtained a decree for the sale of the elephant, and that the Judge was in error in deciding that the plaintiff's lien was extinguished as against the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—The plaintiff, appellant, lent money, in December 1875, to one Asman Singh, who, as security for the re-payment of the loan, mortgaged an elephant to the plaintiff, retaining possession of the animal.

Asman Singh having died without paying off the debt, the plaintiff sued his representatives in 1877, and obtained a money-decree on the 8th May 1877. Subsequently, one Kenaram [80] Oswal, who held another decree against Asman Singh, caused the mortgaged elephant to be sold in execution of that decree. The present plaintiff objected to the sale, on the ground of his own lien upon the elephant, and the sale was effected with notice to the purchaser of the plaintiff's claim. The present suit was brought against the auction-purchaser and against the debtors to obtain an order for the sale of the elephant in satisfaction of the debt.

The purchaser, the defendant No. 1, represented that the elephant had passed into the hands of third parties, who intended to buy it from him.

Thereupon these parties were made defendants. It does not appear, however, even in the statement of the defendant No. 1, that they have acquired any interest in the elephant. As, therefore, they are not properly parties to the suit or the appeal, the appeal against them must be dismissed with costs. The point in dispute is, whether or not the plaintiff, having once obtained a decree for the money due to him, can bring another suit of the present kind to recover the money from the property that was pledged to him.

The lower Court has held that such suit is not barred, but that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaratory decree only, affirming that his lien on the pledged elephant still exists. It has refused him the full relief sought, because he has not demonstrated his inability to execute the decree of the 8th May 1879, by proceeding against other property of the debtors before seeking to follow the pledged property in the hands of another party.

We may note that no objection has been taken by the respondent, the defendant No. 1, to the Judge's findings, so far as they are in favour of the plaintiff; we think that those findings ought to have been followed up by a decree for the relief sought, it being of course left to the option of the defendant No. 1 to pay off the claim and retain the elephant. Had he bought it at the execution-sale without notice of the plaintiff's lien, we might have been disposed to hold that the plaintiff was bound to exhaust all other property of his debtors if it could be shown they had any, before attaching what had been sold to [81] another, although that was the very property pledged to him.

But we are not aware of any principle of law or equity which should compel a creditor to abstain from executing his decree against the property pledged, and to harass himself with endeavours to find other property to attach, merely because a third party has chosen to buy the pledged property with full knowledge of the lien existing upon it. It is admitted by the lower Court that the plaintiff must have ultimately had recourse to such a suit as the present one, on failure to recover the amount of his decree by other means. We think that he was entitled to bring his suit in the first instance as he has done, and was not bound to avail himself of this remedy only as a last resource. In the Full Bench case of Haran Chunder Ghose v. Dinobundhoo Bose (1), the Judges expressly lay down that, notwithstanding a previous money-decree against the mortgagor, there is a right of suit against a third party to enforce the lien against the property pledged. Mr. Justice Markby observed, that the right to sell the very thing pledged is inherent to the pledgee, and, as a general rule, no claimants upon the property posterior to the first pledgee can interfere with this right, though of course they may have a right to redeem before sale.

Entirely concurring in this opinion, we think that the appellant has established his right to the relief sought for in his plaint against the defendant No. 1.

We accordingly amend the decree of the lower Court by adding to the declaration therein contained an order that, subject to the right of the defendant No. 1 to redeem the elephant, the amount of the plaintiff's claim, or as much of it as possible, be realised by the sale of the said elephant, any surplus sale-proceeds being returned to the defendant; and we direct that the defendant No. 1 do pay the plaintiff's costs in both Courts.

FAKURUDEEN MAHOMED ASSAN (Judgment-debtor) v. THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL (Decree-holder).*

Execution of Decree—Merger—Foreign Judgment—Act X of 1877, ss. 12 and 14.

The judgment of a foreign Court, obtained on a decree of a Court in British India, is no bar to the execution of the original decree.

THIS was an appeal from an order passed by the Judge of Pubna, allowing execution to issue under a decree obtained by the late N. P. Pogose, against Azeemuddeen Chowdhry, in the Court of the District Judge of Furriddpore. In 1880, the decree-holder brought a suit on this decree in the French Court at Chandernagore, where the defendant was then residing, and obtained a judgment, allowing the claim, on the 21st of April 1880.

In September 1880, the decree-holder applied to the Court in Furriddpore, which passed the decree, praying that it should be sent to the District Court of Pubna for execution. This was done, and the decree-holder then made an application in the latter Court to have the decree executed. The judgment-debtor opposed the application, which was granted by the District Judge.

The judgment-debtor appealed.

Baboo Kissory Lall Sircar, for the appellant.—The decree of the French Court has extinguished the previous decree of the Furrirdpore Court. All the decree-holder can do now is to bring a fresh suit on the French decree. How can the Pubna Court know whether the French decree is satisfied? The lower Court relies on Saroda Prosau Mullick v. Luchmeeput Sing Doogur (1); but that case does not apply now, for s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859, on which the Privy Council relied, has [83] no corresponding section in the present Civil Procedure Code. See also Story's Conflict of Laws, pp. 498-9, and s. 14 of the new Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Jackson, for the respondent.—It is impossible that a decree of a Court in British India, which is here of a higher nature than the French decree, could merge in the latter. Smith v. Nicholls (2) and The Bank of Australasia v. Harding (3) are clear to show, that a foreign judgment does not merely not merge a decree, but does not merge even the original cause of action. See also Godard v. Gray (4). If by s. 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure the pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action, why should the foreign decree be a bar to the execution of the decree of the British Court?

Cur. ad. vult.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—We agree in the view of the law that has been laid down by the District Judge of Pubna, and consider that the Pubna Court can, upon the certificate that has been sent to it, execute the decree of the Furrirdpore Court. The circumstance that the judgment-creditor, in order to secure property of the judgment-debtor, which was in a foreign territory, viz., Chandernagore, has obtained a decree in the Chandernagore Court on the basis of the decree of the Furrirdpore Court, does not, in our opinion, constitute a bar to the execution of the latter decree. The foreign Court does not stand in a higher position than the British Court, so that a decree of the latter should be merged in that of the former. According to the explanation given in s. 12 of the Procedure Code, "the pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action." It seems to follow, therefore, as a necessary consequence, that the existence of a decree in a foreign Court is no bar to the [84] execution of a decree of a Court in British India, even though the cause of action in both suits be the same.

Nor does it follow, as has been contended, that such concurrent decrees work injustice in the matter of their execution to the judgment-debtor, for any payment made in satisfaction of the decree of the Chandernagore Court, can, under the procedure prescribed in s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, be at once certified to the Pubna Court, and the amount placed to the credit of the judgment-debtor. In the event of execution of the two decrees being taken out simultaneously, it would be open to the judgment-debtor to bring this circumstance to the notice of the Court, and the Court would, doubtless, exercise its discretion in the manner indicated by the Privy Council in the case of Saroda Prosaud Mullik v. Luchmeeput Sing Doogur (1). But no hardship of this kind exists here. It is not suggested that execution has issued and property of the judgment-debtor is about to be sold by the Chandernagore Court. Even if this was the case, the judgment-debtor could, as already mentioned, secure himself from loss by certifying to the Pubna Court the payment of the sale-proceeds to the judgment-creditor. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF JUGGODISHARI DABI.*

Executors—Administration-bond—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 256—Probate.

Executors, as well as administrators, are liable, under s. 256 of the Succession Act, to give a bond to the Judge of the District Court for the due collection, getting in, and administering the estate of the deceased.

IN this case, one Juggodishari Dabi, the universal legatee and executor under the will of one Doyamoyi Dabi, applied to the [85] Court of the District Judge of Rajshahye for probate of the will. On the 20th of January, 1881, the Judge made an order directing probate to issue, on security, to the amount of Rs. 20,000, being given by the applicant. The latter then applied to the High Court for a rule calling upon the Judge to show cause why the above order should not be set aside, and why probate should not be granted to the applicant without requiring a bond under s. 256 of the Succession Act.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar in support of the application.—The Judge was wrong in demanding a bond from the executor to the will. A bond is only taken from administrators under s. 256—Run Bahadur Singh v. Moharance Rajrup Koer (2) and In the matter of Monohur Moorkerjee (3). The reason why security is not required from an executor is, that the testator has put faith in him without requiring security. [MORRIS, J.—Section 3 of the Succession Act says, "Probate" means the copy of a will certified under the seal of a Court of competent jurisdiction with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator. The form of grant of probate in s. 254 declares "that administration of the property and credits of the deceased was granted to" the executor. It is clear that, under these two sections, an executor who obtains probate, obtains some grant of administration; and s. 256 says, that every person to whom any grant of administration has been made shall give a bond.]

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—Regard being had to the definition of probate in s. 3, Act X of 1865, and to the words of s. 256, which section appears to us to refer as much to s. 254 as to s. 255, we cannot say that the District Judge was wrong in law to require an administration-bond from the person to whom the Court had ordered probate to be granted. In fact the Act scarcely seems to leave any option in the matter. A case has been brought to our [86] notice—Run Bahadur Singh v. Moharance Rajrup Koer (1)—in which the learned Judges, who were asked to direct that an order for probate should be conditional on the petitioner's furnishing security, stated, that the uniform practice of this Court was not to take security from an executor named in the will. In that case, however, there was no judicial declaration that the taking of a bond would not be in accordance with the law. And we find no reported case in which this Court has interpreted the law in the sense contended for by the pleader for the petitioner, viz., that s. 256 authorizes the taking of a bond only in the case of the grant of letters of administration under s. 255, and not in the case of grant of probate under s. 254. We have found a case, not reported, Mis. App. No. 321 of 1875, in which a Division Bench, following a supposed ruling of the Madras Court, in H. C. Rul., 3 Mad., App., 10, held, that there was nothing in the law to authorize the District Judge in calling on the applicant for probate to give security. But, on referring to the report cited, we find that there was apparently nothing more than an extra judicial expression of opinion, for which no reasons were assigned, elicited by a letter from a District Judge. This is not sufficient authority for disregarding what appears to be the clear provision of the Act.

We think, therefore, that in law the lower Court was entitled to call for the bond mentioned in s. 256. But at the same time we are clearly of opinion that the Judge ought to exercise a reasonable discretion in prescribing the sum for which the bond should be given; and that this question should be regulated by circumstances. Where, as is stated in the present case, the person to whom probate is granted is himself the universal legatee and sole executor under the will it seems to us that the District Judge should be satisfied with a bond for an amount almost nominal. With this expression of opinion, which may probably induce the lower Court to reconsider its order, we discharge the rule.

False Charge—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Opportunity of substantiating Charge.

Upon a trial for bringing a false charge with intent to injure, it appeared that the original complaint was lodged in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, and a local enquiry by a competent police officer was directed. The officer reported that the charge was false, and recommended that the prisoner should be prosecuted. The Extra Assistant Commissioner ordered the papers to be sent to the Deputy Commissioner, who ordered the prosecution, and the prisoner was convicted.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—It appears to us that there is no legal foundation for the trial of Sokhina Bibi under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. Sokhina Bibi lodged a complaint under ss. 354 and 376, coupled with s. 511, in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner. After her examination, the Court, under s. 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, directed a local enquiry to be made by a competent police officer. This officer, a Sub-Inspector, submitted a report, in which he expressed the opinion that the charge preferred was false, and that the complainant should be prosecuted for making a false complaint. [88] Thereupon the Extra Assistant Commissioner passed the following order:—"Let the papers be recorded as false, and let the papers be sent to the Deputy Commissioner for proper orders as regards instituting a case against the complainant under ss. 211 and 182." Upon this the Deputy Commissioner, on the 3rd December, passed an order to the effect that in his view no notice ought to have been taken of the complaint owing to the character of the complainant; but as an enquiry had taken place he would allow the petitioner to be prosecuted, if the District Superintendent of Police wished it. The District Superintendent of Police expressed a wish that a prosecution should follow. Upon this the Deputy Commissioner, on the 20th December, ordered the prosecution.

It seems clear to us that there has been no proper adjudication by the Extra Assistant Commissioner of the complaint preferred by Sokhina Bibi. On the receipt of the report of the Sub-Inspector, he should have communicated its contents to the complainant and afforded her an opportunity, if she so desired it, of producing the witnesses named in her complaint, or of giving such other proof in support of her complaint as she might think proper. Having thus put the complainant to the proof and giving her the opportunity of substantiating her complaint, the Extra Assistant Commissioner should have proceeded to decide the case. This course he had not adopted at all, and as Sokhina Bibi was prepared to give evidence in support of her complaint, the Deputy Commissioner had, we think, no power to direct a prosecution under s. 211 to be instituted. This is in accordance with the rulings of this Court in Syed Nissar Hossein v. Ramgolam Singh (1) and in Government v. Karimdad (2). It also strikes us as improper that this prosecution should have been directed by the Deputy Commissioner contrary to his own expressed opinion as to its propriety, and solely in deference to the wishes of the District Superintendent of Police, whose subordinate had been complained against.

We have to observe, with reference to the Assistant Commissioner's explanation as to the examination of the complainant's witnesses, that their examination by the Sub-Inspector of [89] Police when enquiring into the original complaint, and their subsequent examination in the present case as witnesses for the defence before himself could not give the prisoner the opportunity of proving that the original complaint was true, to which she was entitled before she could legally be prosecuted for making a false charge.

We, therefore, quash the proceedings, which have resulted in the conviction of Sokhina Bibi under s. 211, and setting aside the sentence of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment, direct her release.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We regret very much that we have no power to assist the appellants. This is, undoubtedly, a very hard case upon them.

The defendant was sued for an account, but managed to delay delivering the account till it was too late for the plaintiff to sue him for the account due.

The lower Courts have both decided in favour of the defendants upon the ground of limitation, and very properly so. But it was very hard, under the circumstances, to visit the plaintiffs (who have been thus unjustly treated by the defendant), with costs, and although we are compelled by law to confirm the decision of the lower Courts, we give the respondents no costs of this appeal.

This is one of the inconveniences which we pointed out here a few days ago, of bringing a suit of this kind for an account only, and not suing at the same time to have the account adjusted and the balance found, to be due paid to the plaintiff. In a suit of this kind properly framed (as it always is on the Original Side of this Court), the whole question between the parties is disposed of in one suit, and the plaintiff secures his [91] just rights without the risk, which he always runs in a suit for an account only, of being barred by limitation when the account is delivered.

The plaintiffs have duly sued within one year from the time when the account was delivered, but they are barred unfortunately by the last clause of s. 30 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, which requires the suit to be brought within three years from the date of the termination of the defendant's agency.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed, but without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTE.—In a plaint filed by a principal against his agent for an account, the ordinary form of prayer is as follows :—

1. That an account may be taken of all sums of money received by, or come to the hands of, the defendant as such agent of the plaintiff as aforesaid, for, or on account of, or for the use of, the plaintiff, and of the application thereof, and of all dealings and transactions of the defendant as the plaintiff's agent; and that the defendant may be decreed to pay to the plaintiff what, on taking such accounts, shall be found due from the defendant to the plaintiff; and to deliver up to the plaintiff, all documents in the defendant's possession or power belonging to the plaintiff.

2. That the defendant may be ordered to pay the costs of this suit.

3. That the plaintiff may have such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

Decree for Sale—Sale and Confirmation—Execution barred at time of Sale—Position of Auction-Purchaser—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 316—Act XII of 1879—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 156

A person purchased certain property at a sale in execution of a decree in November 1878; his purchase was confirmed, and he obtained a certificate of sale on the 23rd May 1879, from which date he remained in possession. The [92] judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside for irregularity, but his application was dismissed both at the hearing and on appeal. He had applied, before the sale took place, to stay the sale, on the ground that the right to apply for execution was barred. This application was dismissed, but was allowed on appeal. It did not appear that the auction-purchaser was a party to the proceeding, or that he was cognizant of the application.

Two years from the date of the sale, and one and-a-half year from its confirmation, the judgment-debtor, on a summary application, obtained an order setting aside the sale and putting the auction-purchaser out of possession. Held, that the order was erroneous, the Subordinate Judge having no power, after the sale had been confirmed, to set aside the sale by a summary order; and that under art. 165, sch. ii, of Act XV of 1877, the application for such an order was barred.

The words "subsisting decree" in s. 316, Act X of 1877 as amended by Act XII of 1879 mean a decree unreversed and in full force and not merely one upon which execution cannot be issued.

[F., 11 C. 376 (378); R., 10 C. 220 (223).]

ONE Gridari Mahton brought a suit against Bissessi Dutt Singh, in which he was unsuccessful the defendant obtaining a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs.

On the 18th November, 1878, the defendant applied for execution of his decree for costs, and obtained an order for the sale of certain properties belonging to the plaintiff; and on the same day the judgment-debtor applied to the Court to have the sale stayed, on the ground that the right to apply for execution had been barred by limitation; but his application was refused and the sale proceeded with. At this sale, Mahomed Hossein Halmoki Mahulla became the purchaser of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in certain properties; and he, on the 23rd May, 1879, obtained an order confirming the sale. Prior to this order the judgment-debtor applied, under s. 314 of Act X of 1877, to set aside the sale for irregularity, but his application was dismissed, and the decision confirmed on appeal.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge against the order of the 18th November, 1878, dismissing his application to stay the sale, and the District Judge on the 5th July, 1879, reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and held that the right to apply for execution was barred, and his decision was confirmed on appeal to the High Court.

The judgment-debtor then applied to the Subordinate Judge to have the sale set aside and the purchase-money refunded to [93] the auction-purchaser; and on the 13th September, 1880, the following order was passed :—" I think the sale ought to be set aside and the purchase-money refunded. The decree under which the sale took place has been declared to have been barred by limitation at the date of the attachment and sale. The decree was therefore not subsisting when the sale took place, and the sale passed nothing to the auction-purchaser ; the auction-purchaser will get back his purchase-money and the judgment-debtor will be restored to possession."

The auction-purchaser obtained a rule calling upon the judgment-debtor to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge, of the 13th September, should not be set aside, on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, after the sale had become absolute and had been confirmed, to make such an order.

Baboo Amarendronath Chatterjee in support of the rule, cited Bassappa bin Malappa Aki v. Dundaya bin Shivlingaya (1) and Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdhry (2).

Baboo Tarrucknath Palit and Baboo Nilmadhub Sen, for the opposite party, relied on the case of Nojabut Ali Chowdhry v. Sheikh Moha Busseeroollah Chowdhry (3).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—This is a rule obtained by Mahomed Hossein, who is the purchaser of certain land at an execution-sale, to discharge an order made by the Subordinate Judge of Patna on the 13th of September, 1880, which order set aside the sale made to the plaintiff, directed the purchase-money to be refunded, and also directed the judgment-debtor to be restored to possession.

The rule was obtained on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, after the sale had become absolute and had been confirmed by the Court, to make any such order.

The facts were these. In a suit which was brought by Gri-[94] dari Mahton against Bissessi Dutt Singh, the defendant obtained a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs.

On the 18th November, 1878, an auction-sale was held in execution of that decree, at which the present applicant purchased the right, title and interest of one of the judgment-debtors in certain property and by a certificate duly granted and dated the 23rd of May, 1879, the sale was afterwards confirmed.

Meanwhile, an application had been made by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale for irregularity, under the provisions of s. 314 of Act X of 1877, but this was refused by the Subordinate Judge on the 17th May, 1879, and on appeal to the District Judge, this decision was confirmed, it being admitted by the appellant that he could not support his case upon the ground of irregularity.

It appears, however, that, on the 18th of November, 1878, before the sale took place, another application had been made to the Subordinate Judge to stay the sale, on the ground that the right to apply for execution had been barred by limitation ; but the Subordinate Judge decided against this application also, and consequently the sale proceeded. The order of the Subordinate Judge was also appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the 5th July 1878, holding that the right to apply for execution was barred and the High Court, to whom a second appeal was made, confirmed that decision.

(1) 2 B. 540.

(2) 1 B. L. R. A. C. 56.

(3) 11 B. L. R. 42.

It appears that these last mentioned proceedings were in some way or other brought to the notice of Mr. Beveridge, the District Judge, on the hearing of the appeal in the other case on the 24th March, 1880; but he very properly considered that, for the purposes of that appeal, he ought not to go into them.

At the same he threw out a suggestion in his judgment, that possibly the last words of s. 316, as amended by Act XII of 1879, might help the judgment-debtor, or might operate to make the certificate already granted a nullity, and that a substantive application might perhaps have the effect of cancelling the certificate.

Upon this the judgment-debtor appears to have made an application to the Subordinate Judge to have the sale set aside, [95] and the purchase-money refunded to the auction-purchaser; and the Subordinate Judge made an order to that effect, upon the ground that the decree under which the execution took place was not subsisting at the time of the sale, because the right to execute the decree had been barred by limitation.

The present application was then made to us to set aside this order of the Subordinate Judge, as having been made without jurisdiction, and the question which we have to decide now is undoubtedly one of great importance to auction-purchasers.

The plaintiff purchased this property in November, 1878. His purchase was confirmed by the Court, and he obtained a certificate on the 23rd day of May, 1879, from which time he has been in possession. No application appears to have been made by the judgment-debtor during the pendency of either of the appeals from the Subordinate Judge to stay the confirmation of the sale, until those appeals had been decided. The purchaser was no party to the proceedings in which the question of limitation was raised, nor is he shown even to have been cognizant of these proceedings. He purchased apparently, in perfect good faith; and the question now is whether, after the lapse of nearly two years from the date of the sale, and one and-a-half years from the date of its confirmation, the auction-purchase is to be set aside, and the plaintiff turned out of possession, upon a summary application made in the execution-proceedings to the Subordinate Judge.

The ground upon which the Subordinate Judge bases his judgment seems obviously erroneous. He seems to suppose that because the right to take out execution upon a decree is barred by limitation, the decree itself has ceased to subsist; whereas, of course, the decree remains and will ever remain, in full force, as an adjudication of the rights of the parties, whether execution can be taken out upon it or not. A decree subsists for ever, unless it is set aside or reversed by some competent authority.

The words upon which the Subordinate Judge relies at the close of s. 316 as amended have been probably added to the section in consequence of what fell from the Bombay High Court in the case of Basappa bin Malappa Aki v. Dundaya [96] bin Shivlingaya (1); but whether they were or no, the words "subsisting decree" evidently mean a decree unreversed and in full force, and not merely one upon which execution cannot be issued.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GOPAL DHANUK.
 THE EMPRESS v. GOPAL DHANUK.* [21st April, 1881.]

Plea of Guilty—False Charge—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Record of Plea—Explaining Charge—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 237.

A prisoner, charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having brought a false charge with intent to injure, by accusing A of having caused the death of a person by doing a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide under s. 304 A, stated at the trial that, the original complaint made by him was false, and that he made it unthinkingly. The Sessions Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty, and sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment. No record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, appeared on the proceedings, nor did it appear that the charge had been explained as well as read to the prisoner [97] and the Judge considered that the original complaint did not amount to a false charge of an offence under s. 304A.

Held, that the conviction was bad.

[Appl., 10 M. 232 (F.B.) = 2 Weir 183.]

IN this case one Gopal Dhanuk was charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code with having made a false charge with intent to injure one Bedwa. It appeared that the prisoner had stated to the police that Bedwa had assaulted one Manjar, who died shortly afterwards, and that the death was the result of, or accelerated by, the blow. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, the prisoner stated that the original complaint made by him to the police was false, and that he made it unthinkingly. The Judge treated this statement as a plea of guilty, and sentenced the prisoner to eight months' rigorous imprisonment. No record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, appeared on the proceedings, nor did it appear that the charge had been explained as well as read to him; and the Sessions Judge, in giving judgment, stated that the original complaint, though malicious, could hardly be regarded as amounting to a charge of culpable homicide.

The prisoner appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MORRIS and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

* Criminal Appeal, No. 188 of 1881, against the order of W. H. Verner, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 26th February 1881.

MORRIS, J.—This conviction is bad in law, and must be set aside. The Sessions Judge states that the prisoner pleads guilty to the charge, and that the only question is as to what punishment should be allotted. We find in the proceedings no record of the prisoner's plea, as required by s. 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when he pleads guilty. All that we find is a narrative by the Judge of what occurred and of the statements made by the prisoner. We do not find from this, that the charge was explained as well as read to the prisoner (vide s. 237), and we do find that he did not admit one very important element in an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, viz., the intention to injure another. The prisoner is said to have represented that he made the false complaint unthinkingly. This certainly does not amount to a plea of guilty.

[98] The Judge was further somewhat inconsistent, for, after stating that the prisoner pleaded guilty, he proceeds to show that he was not guilty of the charge as framed, inasmuch as he had not made a complaint of an offence under s. 304 A of the Penal Code, which was alleged in the charge.

The Judge committed an error, therefore, in convicting the prisoner without a trial. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence, and direct that the prisoner be tried according to law, and that the Judge conform to the procedure laid down in chap. XLX, Code of Criminal Procedure.

Conviction set aside.

WOMESH CHUNDER GHOSE (Plaintiff) v. SHAMA SUNDARI BAI
(Defendant).^{*} [21st April, 1881.]

Evidence—Secondary Evidence—Bond—Loss or Destruction of Instrument—Evidence Act (I of 1874) s. 65, cl. (c).

In a suit by the purchaser of a debt, the plaintiff stated that, in 1873, A executed a bond in favour of B to secure the repayment of Rs. 1,000, and that he had purchased the interest of B at a sale in execution of a decree against him. The plaintiff now sued A upon the bond, making B a party. At the trial A denied the execution of the bond, and it was not produced by the plaintiff who, having served B with notice to produce, tendered secondary evidence of its contents. B was not examined as a witness, and no evidence was given of the loss or destruction of the bond.

THE plaintiff in this case alleged that the defendant No. 1 executed a registered bond on the 16th Choit 1279 (28th March [99] 1873) in favour of the defendant No. 2, Ramjoy Sircar; that the bond was for Rs. 1,000, and stipulated that that amount with interest at 3 per cent. per mensem, should be paid in the month of Joisto 1280 (May 1874); that, in execution of a decree against Ramjoy Sircar, his interest in the alleged debt was put up for sale, and was purchased by the plaintiff for Rs. 200 on the 28th of December 1877, four years and nine months after the alleged execution of the bond. On the 12th of March 1878, nearly five years after its alleged execution, the plaintiff instituted the present suit against the alleged obligee, and he also made Ramjoy Sircar a defendant. He claimed that Rs. 2,783 was due on the alleged bond, and asked for a decree for that amount against the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 1, whom the Judge stated to be a purdanashin lady, by her written statement, denied having ever executed any such bond. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree, but his decision was reversed by the District Judge.

The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court. The learned Judges, before whom the appeal was heard in the first instance, differed in opinion, and the case was accordingly re-argued before three Judges.

Mr. G. Gregory and Baboo Gurudoss Banerjee for the appellant.

Mr. Bell and Baboo Doorga Mohun Das for the respondent.

The following judgments were delivered :—

PONTIFEX, J., (who after stating the facts of the case, continued) :—
The plaintiff, when he purchased for Rs. 200, does not appear to have made any enquiry as to the existence of the bond. He took no steps to obtain possession of it or to satisfy himself that if it had really been executed by the defendant No. 1, it still existed uncanceled and untransferred by Ramjoy Sircar. His purchase was, in fact, a mere speculative purchase, and may have been a collusive one. In this suit, the plaintiff neither produces the alleged bond, nor does he adduce any evidence that it is still in existence uncanceled; or that, at the date of his purchase, Ramjoy Sircar continued to be [100] interested under it. But he made Ramjoy Sircar a defendant to the suit, and served him with notice to produce the bond, which, however, was not produced; nor was it shown to be in Ramjoy Sircar's possession or power. Upon this he sought to use a copy from the Registry Office as secondary evidence. But making Ramjoy Sircar a defendant, and giving him notice to produce, would not, in my opinion, entitle the plaintiff to use the copy from the Registry Office as secondary evidence against the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff can stand in no higher or better position than Ramjoy Sircar would himself have occupied. Before Ramjoy Sircar could have used secondary evidence, it would have been necessary for him to prove the destruction or loss of the alleged instrument. But Ramjoy Sircar has not been examined, and as the evidence stands, there is no proof of destruction or loss. For all that appears, the bond, if really executed, might, at the date of the institution of this suit, have been cancelled, or in the hands of a third party, or purchased for value. To admit secondary evidence under these circumstances would, in my opinion, be most dangerous, and inasmuch as the plaintiff purchased without requiring delivery or proof of the continued existence of the bond, he is not, in my opinion, entitled to claim any benefit under the last part of cl. (c) of s. 65 of the Evidence Act, otherwise he, as appears, would be placed in a better position than the obligee. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

So far I have treated this as a special appeal upon which we are unable to look at the evidence. But, as the defendant No. 1 had, in her written statement, denied execution of the bond, I asked the question of the plaintiff's counsel whether execution of the alleged bond had been proved. In answer to my question, their evidence was read to us. None of the witnesses, named as attesting witnesses on the registered copy, has proved the execution of the bond by the defendant No. 1. One of such attesting witnesses was called, but he admitted that he did not see the defendant No. 1 execute. Another person, a servant, who was not named as an attesting witness, was called, [101] and he stated that he saw the defendant No. 1 execute a bond and a power-of-attorney to register on the same occasion. But a writer in the Registration Office, who says he has been for the last two years out of employment, deposed that he had witnessed the execution of the power of attorney, and that the bond was not there at the time the power was executed.

Again, according to the copy sought to be used as evidence, the bond, if unpaid at the prescribed time in Joisto 1280 (May 1874), was to be paid by instalments, and the payments were to be endorsed. Therefore, even if the bond had been executed, there may be substantial reasons for its non-production. And no explanation is given why the bond has not been sued upon earlier; or why Ramjoy Sircar allowed a well-secured debt, which, at the time of plaintiff's purchase, must have amounted to Rs. 2,500 at the least, to be sold for Rs. 200.

Under these circumstances, I should myself have had no hesitation in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, on the ground that he had not proved the execution of this alleged bond by this purdanashin lady. And these circumstances also show, how dangerous it would be to let in secondary evidence in a case like the present.

MORRIS, J.—I quite agree with Mr. Justice Pontifex, that the plaintiff, as purchaser of a possible debt due under an alleged bond, cannot stand in a higher position than the obligee of that bond. When he sues to recover upon the bond, he must either produce it or satisfactorily account for its loss or non-production; and unless he can show that the obligee had it in his possession and power when his interest in it passed to him, and failed to produce it, though called upon and legally bound to do so, he cannot be allowed to give secondary evidence of its contents, nor can the Court presume that it is still in force.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

PRINSEP, J.—The plaintiff, in execution of a decree against Ramjoy Sircar on 28th December, 1877, purchased the debt due to the said Ramjoy on a registered mortgage-bond, dated 16th Cheyt 1279 (March 28th, 1873), purporting to have been [102] executed by Shama Sundari Bai. The law (Act VIII of 1859) nowhere provides for delivery by the judgment-debtor of such a bond before sale to the Court, or after sale to the auction-purchaser, but requires that "attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting the creditor from receiving the debt, and the debtor from making payment thereof to any person whomsoever until further orders of the Court." The sale apparently took place without any objection on the part of either the obligee (the judgment-debtor) or the obligor Shama Sundari Bai.

The auction-purchaser of the debt due to the obligee has now sued to recover the full sum of money due on the bond with interest up to date, and in this suit he has made Ramjoy Sircar, the original obligee, a defendant, as well as Shama Sundari Bai.

Shama Sundari Bai, in her written statement, denied that she had taken any loan from Ramjoy Sircar, or that she executed any bond to him. She further stated, that Ramjoy Sircar and another person were her mooktears; that they always had cash in their hands; that they still owe her money; that they have never furnished her with their accounts, and that as she has not been able to obtain possession of her papers which were with her father Kashi Singh (deceased) she has not been able to sue them.

She next disputed the necessity specified in the bond for borrowing the money, and contended that the copy of the bond filed by the plaintiff was not admissible in evidence.

Several processes were issued for the attendance of the original obligee, Ramjoy Sircar, with the bond, but without any success, and a prosecution in the Criminal Court was instituted against him. It appears that, during the pendency of the appeal in the District Judge's Court, he has died. An attested copy of the bond obtained from the Registration Office was, therefore, tendered and received as secondary evidence. When the case was first heard by Mr. Justice Morris and myself, we differed on the only point raised, viz., the presumption arising from the non-production of the original bond, and we have now heard this special appeal re-argued.

[103] As I have the misfortune to differ from my learned colleagues in being of opinion that the order of the District Judge should be set aside and a decree given to the plaintiff, it is necessary that I should state my reasons for this opinion.

The District Judge, on appeal has found, in concurrence with the first Court, that "it is proved that in Cheyt 1279 B. S. (March, 1873), a sum of Rs. 1,000 was borrowed in the name, and for the interest, of defendant Shama Sundari from her mooktear Ramjoy Sircar, and a bond for the amount, with interest at 3 percent. per mensem, duly registered, executed in his favor to secure repayment." The District Judge then expresses himself in the following terms: "Now, on the woman's part the substance of the defence, besides a false denial of the execution of the bond and contraction of the debt in 1279, consists of a general assertion, that Ramjoy Sircar, as her agent, had money constantly in his hands belonging to her, and might, therefore, have cleared off any such debt. I consider that such a defence throws upon the plaintiff the onus of proving the actual existence of a subsisting debt from the defendant to Ramjoy Sircar at the time of his purchase in December, 1877.

"His certificate tells us that he bought the interest of Ramjoy Sircar in the debt: he must further show what that interest at the time was. It is too much to presume that, because a debt was contracted in 1279 B. S., under an express agreement that the said debt should be extinguished in three months, it was, therefore, subsisting seven years afterwards. The possession of a bond by the creditor raises the presumption of the subsistence of the debt: here the creditor does not produce the bond. For all we know the debt was extinguished in 1280 Joisto, as agreed, and the bond handed back to the woman's father. It would be very hard to expect a purdanashin woman, after her creditor is dead, and her father who managed her affairs is dead, to prove by positive evidence, that a debt contracted seven years before has been actually paid off, especially when the creditor was her trusted agent, and there is nothing whatever on the other side to raise a presumption of the subsistence of the debt at the present day. I think the Subordinate Judge has been in error in laying any such onus on the woman. The [104] non-production of the original bond by the plaintiff raises a presumption against the subsistence of a debt. If he meant to make his speculative purchase effective, he should have got the bond, if any such bond was then in the possession of Ramjoy Sircar."

As I understand the ground upon which the plaintiff is considered to have failed in this suit, it is that, because he has been unable to produce the original mortgage bond, it is to be presumed that it is not in the possession of the obligee, and consequently that no debt to him existed at the time of sale. His purchase is condemned as speculative, and though he has purchased at a public auction held by a Civil Court, and done all that can possibly be expected from him to obtain the necessary evidence of the debt, and though the defendant, the obligor, had never stated that the debt has been paid off, nor indeed pleaded any payment at all, we are to give her the benefit of a liquidation in full of a debt found to have been contracted on her behalf, the money having been applied to her benefit.

No doubt, all purchases of debts through the Courts in execution of a decree must generally be speculative, because in mostly every case the judgment-debtor is obstinately passive. The Codes of Civil Procedure, however, have always recognized debts as saleable property, and though under the present Code of 1877, enquiry is made before sale to ascertain, with as much accuracy as possible, the exact property to be sold, no such provision existed under the law of 1859 under which the sale now under consideration was held. A purchaser like the plaintiff would, therefore, have little means of ascertaining what he purchased, except that in the present case he would have something tangible in the knowledge that the debt was secured by a registered instrument; and though the obligor was not bound to appear on service of the notice of attachment under s. 236, Act VIII of 1859, to deny the existence of any debt, he would be entitled to draw some inference from her non-appearance. Further, I would observe, the Court, under Act VIII of 1859, had no power to compel the appearance of the judgment-debtor or the production of any instrument forming evidence of the debt under sale, and, therefore, a purchaser would be at some [105] disadvantage in establishing the debt when the entire evidence might be in the hands of one who, like Ramjoy Sircar, has persistently declined to appear. That has, as far as my experience goes, been the practice in the Mofussil Courts.

Now as regards possession of the original bond, it is clear that, originally, it was with Ramjoy Sircar the obligee, and as I understand the law, the presumption would be, that it has so remained. It is not for us to suggest what may have happened. There has been the publicity of a public sale in Court, and we have in the present case the additional security that even supposing that it has been transferred to a third party, it could no longer be made the subject of a suit, as the claim has become barred by limitation.

It has, however, been stated that, before bringing the present suit, the plaintiff should have sued Ramjoy Sircar for delivery of the bond; but the uselessness of such a proceeding is shown by what has happened in the present case. Ramjoy would not have appeared, and with an ex parte decree the plaintiff would be in no better position than he now is without the expense of such a suit. It appears to me that the plaintiff has done all that is in his power to prove his case, and that, in the absence of any proof or even any plea of payment on this bond, we are bound to give him a decree.

It has been suggested that the plaintiff may have colluded with Ramjoy Sircar, but this is amply explained away by his action in prosecuting him criminally for not appearing in answer to process of the Court to produce this bond. We should be more justified in imputing collusion on the part of the female defendant with Ramjoy Sircar, her old servant, to evade payment of a portion of her debt by inducing him to withhold production of the bond.

We have it found in two Courts that the bond was executed by the defendant Shama Sundari; that it was duly registered under a power-of-attorney executed by her; and that the money was paid to her father Kashi Singh, and applied to the payment of Government revenue due for her estates. With these findings, and in the absence of any allegation of payment of any portion of the debt, it appears to me, that the plaintiff is [106] entitled to a decree. Evidence of any payment would clearly be in the hands of Shama Sundari, and if, as has been thrown out at the second hearing of this special appeal for the first time, the bond itself might bear evidence of this by endorsements of payments, we should expect that this would have been the obligor's case, and that she would have united with the plaintiff in requiring the production of the original bond. The evidence in this case has been read to us, though we are sitting in special appeal, and that shows, that whatever may be the value of the direct evidence as to the execution of the bond by Shama Sundari, and that has been believed by two Courts, there can be little doubt that she executed the power-of-attorney to her father Kashi Singh and another, to register it; and that in that mookhtarnamah the bond is so described as sufficiently to connect it with the bond now set up, and while referring in passing to the evidence, I would remark that the first Court finds that "no money was kept with Ramjoy Sircar, and no revenue was paid from such a fund as alleged by the defendant," but the District Judge on appeal merely states that Ramjoy Sircar the creditor was her trusted agent. The transaction was, however, conducted on behalf of the lady by her father Kashi Singh, against whom nothing has been said, and to say the least of it, it has been left doubtful whether Ramjoy Sircar had any other money dealings with Shama Sundari. If anything turned on this, we ought to remand the case to the District Judge to determine this point.

We have, therefore, in the present case the finding of the lower Court, that the bond was executed by the defendant, that the money paid on it was received by her father and applied to her use; and in my opinion, it follows, that the onus lies on her to prove payment. It is not for us to suggest for her what she has never said in her defence, or to consider what may have become of the bond itself. It is sufficient, I conceive, that execution of the bond has been proved, and that the defendant has received the benefit of the money paid. She has not attempted to plead any repayment of that debt. I would, therefore, give the plaintiff a decree.

Private Sale of property attached in Execution—Incumbrance created after Attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 240.

The title obtained by the purchaser on a private sale of property in satisfaction of a decree, differs from that acquired upon a sale in execution. Under a private sale, the purchaser derives title through the vendor, and cannot acquire a title better than his. Under an execution-sale, the purchaser, notwithstanding that he acquires merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title, by operation of law, adversely to the judgment-debtor, and freed from all alienations and incumbrances effected by him after the attachment of the property sold.

In 1858, the respondent obtained a decree against B. In 1863, in satisfaction thereof, he caused to be attached a decree for mesne profits made in favour of B against the appellants in 1860. In May, 1865, the respondent obtained an order for the sale thereof; but instead of proceeding to execution-sale, he purchased, in 1866, the whole of the mesne profits due under the decree of 1860, by private sale from B. Meanwhile, in September, 1865, an order of Court had been made, between B and the appellants, on their consent (but without the respondent being a party to it), whereby the decree for mesne profits was set off, pro tanto, against a prior decree for a larger amount, which the appellants had obtained against B.

Held, that the sale of 1866 having been a private one, and not in process of execution, the respondent only obtained such title as B had in the decree of 1860—viz., a title subject to the effect of the order of September, 1865.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (16th March, 1877), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye (10th July, 1875).

The principal question on this appeal was as to the effect of an order made on consent by a Divisional Bench of the High [108] Court, on the 14th of September, 1865, in reference to the execution of two cross-decrees. In 1828, persons called in these proceedings the Sannials had obtained a decree for more than Rs. 82,000 on which interest accrued, against others, called the Bhuttacharjias. In 1860, the Bhuttacharjias obtained a decree against the Sannials, setting aside a sale of lands which had taken place in execution of the decree of 1828, and awarding mesne profits. On the 14th September, 1865, an order of Court was made, on consent of the parties, that the decree of 1860 should be set off in part satisfaction of the decree of 1828. Meanwhile, in 1858, the father of the respondent Ramkumar Ghose had obtained a decree against the Bhuttacharjias for money; and in May, 1863, in consequence thereof, the decree of 1860, was attached. In 1866, Ramkumar Ghose, not proceeding to execution by sale of the attached decree, purchased from the Bhuttacharjias the whole of the mesne profits due to them under their decree of 1860.

This appeal rose out of proceedings afterwards taken by Ramkumar Ghose, jointly with the Bhattacharjias, in execution of the decree of 1860. The Sannials opposed this execution on the ground both of limitation and of the right of set-off established in 1865.

In the Court of first instance, a stay of proceedings was ordered on the latter only, of the above grounds of defence. The High Court concurred in holding that limitation did not bar the proceeding in execution, but declined to give effect to the order for the set-off, and reversed the decree of the first Court.

The judgment of the Court (KEMP and AINSLIE, JJ.), after giving at length a history of the litigation, continued thus:—

The only question we have to deal with is, whether Ramkumar Ghose, by purchasing the Bhattacharjias' claim to mesne profits on the 27th March, 1866, after their agreement with the Sannials to have their decree adjusted by set-off, recorded in the order of this Court of 14th September, 1865, is bound by that order, and, consequently, loses the advantage which he had gained by attaching the Bhattacharjias' decree. It has been decided that, as against him as a rival decree-holder, no right [109] of set-off under the law (s. 209, Act VIII of 1859) existed; and it is admitted that, if he had proceeded on his attachment and caused the Bhattacharjias' decree to be sold, and had himself become the purchaser, the Sannials could not have resisted his claim to put that decree into execution without reference to their cross-decree. But it is contended that his decree has been satisfied, and that the attachment thereby came to an end, and that he stands in precisely the same position in respect of the Sannials as any third party, wholly unconnected with this litigation, who might have acquired by private purchase the Bhattacharjias' rights at a date subsequent to September, 1865.

There are several reported decisions, of which it is only necessary to mention the judgment of the Privy Council in Anundo Loll Doss v. Jullodhur Shaw (1), which point out that the object of s. 240 is to secure the rights of an attaching decree-holder. These, however, do not carry us very far; but there is the Madras case of Annayunavadan v. Iyasawmy Pillai (2), which is in many respects analogous to this case. In that case, the plaintiff having sued on a bond by which property was hypothecated, obtained a decree establishing his rights under the hypothecation, and attached the property in execution. Eventually, the judgment-debtors, in 1868, sold the property to the plaintiff while still under attachment for the amount decreed. The defendant set up various claims arising out of an alleged mortgage and sale to his vendor, and subsequent agreement in 1857; but these had already been rendered fruitless by the result of a suit instituted in 1862. He further relied on an agreement made in 1866 while the property was under attachment, but not made with him with the consent of the plaintiff for the satisfaction of his decree. The Court held the plaintiff entitled, by s. 240, to recover on his purchase unincumbered by the prior agreement between his vendor and the defendant.

If, then, a private sale of the attached property with the consent of the attaching-creditor for the satisfaction of his decree, whether to the creditor himself or to a third person, is protected [110] by s. 240 from any incumbrances imposed on the property subsequent to attachment as much as if it was a sale effected under the orders

If, instead of attempting to sell the Bhattacharjias' decree, the Court had, under s. 243, done what we think it ought to have done, namely, appointed a manager to put the decree into execution so far as was necessary to satisfy the claim of the attaching-creditor, Ghose's interest would have been duly protected without any avoidable sacrifice of the interest of the Sannials.

We should now, we think, deal with this case as if this course had been adopted. The result will be, that while Ghose is enable to recover that which he might claim under his decree against the Bhattacharjias unfettered by any agreement between them and the Sannials the balance of the decree will be subject to that agreement.

[112] The decree of the Sannials must be calculated with simple interest from the date of the decree to the 14th September 1865; and that of the Bhattacharjias, from the date of the ascertainment of mesne profits to the same date. The amount of Ghose's decree with interest as therein awarded, must also be calculated to the same date. After deducting Ghose's decree from the Bhattacharjias' decree the balance of the latter must then be set off against the Sannials' decree; the Bhattacharjias' decree, so far as they are concerned therewith, must be declared finally satisfied. Satisfaction will be entered on the Sannials' decree, taking effect from 14th September 1865, to the extent of this balance; and for the remainder, with the subsequently accruing simple interest, they will be at liberty to proceed in execution against the Bhattacharjias, while Ramkumar Ghose is declared entitled to proceed against them (the Sannials) upon the unsatisfied portion of the Bhattacharjias' decree with interest on the principal sum of his own decree. The order of the Subordinate Judge in execution suit No. 69 is set aside, and the case remanded to him with instructions to proceed at once upon these orders and wind up the accounts with as little delay as may be.

We make no order for costs.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. T. D. Moyne, for the respondent.

For the appellants it was contended that the respondent, Ramkumar Ghose, was not protected against the consequences of an alienation by the Bhattacharjias effected in 1865, before his purchase from them. The consent given in September 1865 to the order of Court, declaring the set-off, established a prior charge on the decree of 1860. The respondent having bought the decree by a private sale, the result was, that his attachment in no way interfered with the right of set-off established by the order of September 1865. Even if the sale had taken place in due process of execution, the attachment of May 1865 would not prevail over the order of September 1865; for, at the time of the attachment, the litigation was pending, which resulted [113] in the order of set-off, and the respondent must be deemed to have had notice that the decree of 1860 was subject to a claim prior to his own.

For the respondent Ramkumar Ghose, it was argued, that the order of the 14th September 1865 was not a complete judicial order disposing of the right of execution set-off. Nothing less than a complete order of a Court would prevent the respondent's right to execute from arising, and an execution set-off, as distinguishable from equitable set-off, depended upon distinct directions given by the Court under the legal obligation to execute. The order of the 14th of September 1865 was insufficient in this respect. Again, at the time when the order of September 1865 was issued, the property was subject to this attachment at the suit of the respondent already placed upon the decree of 1860.

Reference was made to Jhatu Sahu v. Baboo Ramacharan Lal (1), Sheikh Golam Yabeya v. Mussamat Shamasundari Kuari (2), Puddomonee Dossee v. Roy Muthooranath Chowdhry (3), Maharaja Dhiraj Mahatab Chund v. Surnomayee Dossee (4).

Mr. Leith, Q. C., replied.

At the end of the arguments, on the 4th December 1880, their Lordships having stated that the decree of the High Court must be reversed, reserved the statement of their reasons till after the hearing of the appeal—Tarakchandra Bhattacharjia v. Baikantnath Sannial.

This latter case was finally disposed of on the 26th January 1881, when W. A. Raikes (Cowie, Q. C., with him) argued the case for the appellants.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondents.

Mr. W. A. Raikes replied.

Sir B. PEACOCK, on the 26th January 1881, after the death of Sir J. W. Colvile, stated their Lordships' reasons.

JUDGMENT.

[114] SIR B. PEACOCK.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court at Calcutta, dated the 16th of March 1877, which reversed an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 10th July 1875, by which he ordered, amongst other things, that an execution case, No. 69 of 1875, instituted by the respondents against the appellants should be postponed until further orders.

At the close of the arguments on the hearing of the appeal their Lordships, after deliberation, stated that they would humbly advise Her Majesty by their report to reverse the decree of the High Court and to affirm that of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye so far as it related to the execution case, No. 69 of 1875, and that the respondents must pay the costs of the appeal. They, however, reserved the statement of their reasons for this report until after the argument of another appeal in some respects connected with this case, in which Tarakchandra Bhattacharjia is the appellant and Baikantnath Sannial and others are the respondents.

Their Lordships will now proceed to give their reasons for the report in the first appeal, which will be submitted to Her Majesty at the next Council.

The history of the case is stated by the learned Judges in the judgment under appeal. It appears that, in the year 1828, certain persons who are now represented in estate by the appellants, and whom, as well as the appellants, it will be convenient to speak of as the Sannials, obtained a decree against certain other persons who, as well as the Bhattacharjia, respondents, may be called the Bhattacharjias, for a sum exceeding Rs. 82,000. It was subsequently held, that the judgment carried interest at 12 per cent. from the date of the decree until the realization thereof. In execution of the decree the Sannials attached, sold, and became the purchasers of certain immoveable properties of the Bhattacharjias, and obtained possession thereof, which they retained for many years. After considerable delay the Bhattacharjias instituted proceedings to set aside the sale in execution, and on the 10th of November, 1857, obtained a decree of the Principal Sadr Amin of Rajshahye, setting aside the sale and declaring the right of the [115] Bhattacharjias to be restored to possession of their property with mesne profits. That decree was affirmed on appeal by the late Sadr Court on the 23rd May, 1860.

In the interval, between the date of the decree of the Principal Sadr Amin and the affirmance thereof by the Sadr Court, viz., on the 17th of May 1858 Anund Mohun Ghose, the father of the respondent Ramkumar Ghose, and who is now represented by him, obtained a decree against the Bhattacharjias for a sum exceeding 67,000 rupees. In execution of that decree Anund Mohun Ghose attached, in May 1863, the Bhattacharjias' right to mesne profits under their decree against the Sannials of the 10th of November 1857, and on the 26th May 1865, an order was issued by the District Court for sale of the decree for mesne profits.

The sale in execution of the Sannials' decree of 1828 having, as before stated, been set aside, they took fresh proceedings to have the decree again executed for the amount of principal and interest due thereon. Numerous conflicting judgments were, from time to time, given by different Courts as to the amounts due to the Sannials and to the Bhattacharjias respectively, on their respective decrees, and as to the right to set-off one judgment against the other. The amount due to the Sannials under their decree exceeded the amount due by them to the Bhattacharjias under their decree for mesne profits. It is unnecessary, and it certainly would not be profitable, to point out in detail the effect of the several conflicting judgments which were delivered in the course of the litigation between the Sannials and the Bhattacharjias. It is sufficient to say that, on the 14th of September 1865, upon an application for a review of a judgment which is not set out in the record, a judgment was given by Justices Kemp and Campbell, stating that it had been arranged, by consent of both parties, that the Sannials should have simple interest only on their original decree from the year 1828 to the date of payment, it being understood that the cross decree of the Bhattacharjias for mesne profits should also bear simple interest from the date of ascertainment only. The learned Judges, having then proceeded to modify an order which had been previously made, declared that simple interest only should be calculated on the Sannials decree [116] from 1828, and that then the decree of the Bhattacharjias should be set off against the gross amount of the Sannials' decree once for all.

It is not clear that the operative part of the order was made by consent, but the fact has not been disputed, and it may be taken to have been so. The judgment was given in a proceeding in which the Sannials were petitioners, and the Bhattacharjias were judgment-debtors. Ramkumar Ghose was not a party to the proceeding. He did not, however, proceed to a sale under the execution against the Bhattacharjias of the decree for mesne profits which he had attached, but he entered into a private arrangement with them, by which they sold to him the whole of the mesne profits due to them under their decree against the Sannials, together with all interest due thereon, in lieu of the sum of Rs. 74,506 due to him upon the decree obtained against them by Anund Chundra Ghose, his father. The arrangement was carried into effect by a deed of sale, dated the 15th Chait 1272, corresponding with the 27th March, 1866. It was correctly stated by the High Court that the only question they had to deal with was, whether Ramkumar Ghose, by purchasing the Bhattacharjias' claim to mesne profits on the 27th of March, 1866, after their agreement with the Sannials to have their decree adjusted by set-off, recorded in the order of the 14th September, 1865, was bound by that order, and consequently lost the advantage which he had gained by attaching the Bhattacharjias' decree.

The Subordinate Judge had held that Ramkumar Ghose, by privately purchasing the mesne profits from the Bhattacharjias, had destroyed the right which he possessed under his attachment as a decree-holder, and stayed his execution against the Sannials. The High Court reversed that decision, and held that the benefit of the attachment was not affected by the private purchase, and that Ramkumar Ghose was entitled, so far as might be necessary to secure his own rights, to hold the decree clear of the incumbrance created by the consent-decree between the Sannials and the Bhattacharjias which had been recorded behind his back while the property was subject to his attachment. They, however, limited the right of Ram-[117] kumar Ghose to avail himself of the mesne profits freed from the Sannials' right of set-off to the extent of satisfying the amount of his decree against the Bhattacharjias with simple interest to the 14th September, 1865, the date of the consent order.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the private sale to Ramkumar Ghose was not tantamount to, and had not the same effect as, a sale in execution of Ramkumar Ghose's decree, under which the mesne profits had been attached; and that Ramkumar Ghose, by virtue of his purchase, acquired no greater interest than the Bhattacharjias had in the decree for mesne profits, and consequently that he was bound by the order of the 14th September, 1865.

By s. 201 of Act VIII of 1859, it is enacted that if the decree be for money (which Ramkumar Ghose's decree was), it shall be enforced by the imprisonment of the party against whom the decree is made, or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both, if necessary. By s. 205 debts due to the judgment-debtor may be attached and sold as property in execution of a decree. By s. 236, where the property shall consist of debts not being negotiable instruments or shares in any railway, banking, or other public company or corporation, the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting the creditor from receiving the debts, and the debtor from making payment thereof to any person whomsoever until the further order of the Court; and then by s. 240, in the case of an attachment by written order, any payment of the debts to the judgment-debtor after the order shall have been made known in the manner in the said Act mentioned, and during the continuance of the attachment, shall be null and void.

It is not necessary to decide whether, if Ramkumar Ghose had purchased at a sale, under his execution, the attachment would have protected him from the effect of the order of the 14th September, 1865, the attachment having been issued pendente lite,—that is to say pending the proceedings between the Sannials and the Bhattacharjias, in which the question was raised as to the right of set-off. It may be admitted for the sake of argument, but only for the sake of argument, that [118] the order of the 14th September, 1865, made by consent of the Sannials and of the Bhattacharjias, directing the set-off, amounted to a payment of the mesne profits by the Sannials to the Bhattacharjias, and a receipt thereof by the Bhattacharjias within the meaning of s. 240. The effect of that section, however, is, not to render the payment of a debt which has been attached in execution absolutely void, under all circumstances and against every one, but merely to make it void, so far as may be necessary to secure the execution of the decree. The principle is clearly laid down in the case of Annund Loll Doss v. Jullodkur Shaw (1).

The private sale, pending the attachment, was binding upon Ramkumar Ghose, and also upon the Bhattacharjias. Ramkumar's decree was satisfied by the sale to him of the mesne profits in lieu of the sum due to him under his decree. He never afterwards could have proceeded to execute that decree or to sell under the attachment. By privately purchasing the mesne profits which he had attached, he abandoned his execution, and also the attachment, which was a part of the execution.
There is a great distinction between a private sale in satisfaction of a decree and a sale in execution of a decree. In the former, the price is fixed by the vendor and purchaser alone; in the latter, the sale must be made by public auction conducted by a public officer, of which notice must be given as directed by the Act, and at which the public are entitled to bid. Under the former, the purchaser derives title through the vendor, and cannot acquire a better title than that of the vendor. Under the latter, the purchaser, notwithstanding he acquires merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title by operation of law adversely to the judgment-debtor, and freed from all alienations or incumbrances effected by him subsequently to the attachment of the property sold in execution.

The High Court relied upon the case of Annavunavadan v. Iyasawmy Pillai (2), but there is a distinction between that case and the present, for there the property sold was hypothecated to the plaintiff by the bond for which the decree was obtained. The case, however, is of no greater authority than [119] the decision under consideration, and their Lordships are not prepared to say that it would have been affirmed on appeal.

Their Lordships cannot but regard as lamentable, the long, harassing, and expensive litigation to which the Sannials have been subjected in endeavouring to obtain the fruits of their decree of 1828, an object which, although upwards of half a century has elapsed since the date of the decree, they have not as yet attained. It is indeed a subject of deep regret that in the course of that litigation so many contradictory and conflicting judgments have been delivered, sometimes on appeal from an inferior to a superior Court, and sometimes even by the same Judges in reviewing their own judgments.

TARAKCHANDRA BHUTTACHARJIA v. BAIKANTNATH SANNIAL
AND ANOTHER. [26th January, 1881.]

THE hearing of the appeal of Tarakchandra Bhattacharjia v. Baikantnath Sannial and another, having been interrupted by the lamented death of Sir James Colville, the case was re-argued this day before the Committee, and their Lordships' judgment, at the close of the argument, was delivered, on the following terms by—

(1) 14 M.I.A. 549, (550).

(2) 6 M. H. C. R. 65.

JUDGMENT.

SIR B. PEACOCK.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the High Court was correct as to the construction of the order of the 14th September 1865. That order runs as follows:—

“At the hearing of this case this day by consent of both parties it (torn) arranged that the plaintiff (torn) have simple interest only (torn), original decree from the year (torn), date of payment, it being (torn) that the cross-decrees of (torn), for wasilat also bears simple interest from date of ascertainment only. The orders, therefore, for calculating interest on the one hand upon the sum ascertained to be due in 1250, and for setting off the wasilat due to defendants year by year is modified, and there will be no annual account to set the two accounts against one another. The simple interest only will be calculated from 1828, [120] when the other decree can be set off against the gross amount once for all. Decree as above, with costs in proportion.”

From this judgment, and from the decree which was drawn up upon it, it appears to their Lordships that the intention of the Court was, as the Court have themselves subsequently expressed in the judgment now under appeal, that the interest should be calculated on the Sannials' decree from 1828 down to the time of that order, and that interest on the mesne profits, which had been assessed as due to the Bhuttacharjias, should be calculated at the same rate of 12 per cent. from the date when those mesne profits were ascertained, down to the time of that order of the 14th September, 1865. In point of fact the interest was calculated up to the 31st of December in that year, but in that respect the Bhuttacharjias, who were the appellants, have gained a benefit, and the other side have not objected. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the judgment of the High Court, so far as it relates to the calculation of interest, is quite correct.

The decree of the Bhuttacharjias has not been set out on this record, but it appears that that decree included other matters than the mesne profits which were alluded to in the order. On the taking of the accounts before the Judge of the lower court, the Sannials admitted a set-off to the amount of Rs. 3,00,104-0 1. That amount included the sum of Rs. 16,324-10-15, in addition to the Rs. 2,11,914-11-11, the amount of mesne profits as appears in the Appendix A-1 referred to in the judgment of the Judge of the lower Court. But in the account taken by the officer of the High Court, and in the decree of the High Court itself which was drawn up upon that account, no allusion whatever is made to the sum of Rs. 16,324-10-15. No explanation could be given at the Bar of this omission. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the cause should be remanded to the High Court to consider and determine whether or not that sum or any part thereof should be deducted from the sum decreed to the respondents.

In adjusting the accounts between the parties, the High Court has calculated interest on the Rs. 291-7 allowed for the Amin's fees from the 28th September 1828, whereas interest on that [121] account should have been calculated only from the 25th June 1844. It is a very small matter, but their Lordships think that the decree ought to be amended in that respect by deducting from the amount decreed to the respondents the excess of interest so allowed.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree be varied to that extent, and that the case be remanded to the High Court for the purpose of considering and determining whether the sum of Rs. 16,324-10-15, or any part thereof, should or should not be deducted from the sum decreed to the respondents, and that in all other respects the decree ought to be affirmed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 118, 119—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 191.

Neither the words "shall answer all questions" in s. 118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor the words "shall be bound to answer all questions" in s. 119 of the same Code, constitute "an express provision of the law to state the truth" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code.

[122] Sections 118 and 119 are merely intended to oblige persons to give such information as they can to the police, in answer to the questions which may be put to them, and they impose no legal obligation on those persons to speak the truth.

[N.F., 10 C. 405 (406), (F.B.) ; Appl., 23 M. 544 (546) = 1 Weir 112.]

IN Kassim Khan's case it appeared that the accused was a witness for the prosecution in a criminal trespass case tried by the Deputy Magistrate of the Sudder Sub-division of Midnapore, and he there stated on oath that some previous information which he had given to the Police was false. The Police officer, who conducted the case for the prosecution, applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the witness under s. 193 of the Penal Code. The accused witness was tried by the Joint Magistrate, who discharged him on the ground, that the statement made by him on oath could not be used against him as a defendant, and that there was no prospect of proving that the accused's statement to the police was actually false. The Magistrate of the District referred the case to the Court, under s. 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in order that the proceedings of the Joint Magistrate should be quashed and a retrial of the accused ordered. The reference came on before Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field, who referred the matter to a Full Bench in the following terms:

"FIELD, J.—The question submitted to the Full Bench I understand to be this: Can a person be convicted under s. 193 of the Penal Code for giving false evidence, the words alleged to be false having been spoken to a Police officer engaged in making an investigation under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure?

"The definition of giving false evidence (s. 191) is,—

* Full Bench References made by Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field, in Criminal Reference, No. 36 of 1881, and by Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Maclean, in Criminal, Appeal, No. 790 of 1880.

'Whoever—

(1) being legally bound by an oath,

(2) or by any express provision of law, to state the truth, or

(3) being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject, makes any statement which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, is said to give false evidence.'

"It will probably be admitted that (3) has no application to [123] the present case, and that it is concerned only with that class of cases, of which the declaration to be made by a person obtaining a marriage license is an example.

"Sections 118 and 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empower a Police officer making an investigation to examine persons acquainted with the facts of the case under inquiry, and enact that such persons shall answer all questions relating to such case, put by such officer, except criminal questions. Such answers may be reduced to writing, but they are not to be signed by the person making them, nor are they to form part of the record, or be used as evidence.

"These provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure require the persons examined to answer the questions put to them, but they contain no express provision that such persons shall state the truth. This seems to take the case at once out of (2).

"Then as to (1), can a Police officer administer an oath? The Code of Criminal Procedure does not provide for the administration of an oath by a Police officer, but does not expressly prohibit it. In the case of accused persons, an oath is expressly prohibited. It has never been usual for Police officers to administer an oath. Then were ss. 4 and 5 of The Indian Oaths Act, X of 1873, intended to alter this practice? Consider the words 'who may lawfully be examined.....before any person having by law.....authority to examine such persons.' in s. 5. My own view is, that the practice was not meant to be altered.

"If, as a matter of fact, no oath was administered by the Police officer, I think there is an end of the question.

"The accused in this case gave certain information to the Police. Before the Magistrate, he swore that this information was false. The District Magistrate desired to have him punished under s. 193 of the Penal Code for giving false evidence in his statement made to the Police. It is suggested that he can be convicted on an alternative charge of giving false evidence either in his statement made to the Police or in that made to the Magistrate.

"The Joint Magistrate discharged the accused without drawing up a charge or calling upon him to plead to it, on the [124] ground, as it would seem, that there was no other evidence besides these two contradictory statements. The Magistrate of the District asks us to quash the Joint Magistrate's proceedings and order a retrial.

"I do not concur with the case of Nim Chand Mookerjee (1). There is, as I have above pointed out, no provision of law which binds a person to state the truth in answer to a question put by a Police officer, and unless a person is legally bound by an oath or by an express provision of law to state the truth, the offence of giving false evidence cannot be committed."

"PONTIFEX, J.—I agree. The man might possibly be tried for making a false charge, or giving false information to a Public officer."

The Empress v. Mussamut Dahia and Chedee Dhanuk was an appeal from a judgment and sentence passed upon them by the Sessions Judge of Tirhoot. The facts of the case are set out in the Reference to the Full Bench made by Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Maclean, the terms of which are as follows:—

"A woman of thirty years of age, called Guniya, was drowned in a well; she was the daughter of the appellant, Dahia.

"Information was given at the thana by a chowkidar on the 8th September, that Guniya had accidentally fallen into the well. The head constable enquired into the case, and the appellant, Dahia, made a statement that her daughter had fallen into the well.

"On the 12th September, the same chowkidar reported that there was a rumour that the deceased had been pushed into the well by a boy called Mahadeo; and on the 13th September, Dahia made another statement to the head constable, which is marked B on the record. In this statement she distinctly stated that she had seen Mahadeo push her daughter into the well.

"Mahadeo was sent up on a charge of murder, but it was found to be false. In those proceedings Dahia gave evidence before the Magistrate to the effect that her daughter fell into the well accidentally. Mahadeo was discharged, and proceedings taken against Dahia and three others. They were committed on charges under s. 211, but the Judge added charges under s. 193, and, in concurrence with the assessors, has convicted Dahia and her relative Chedee under that section.

"We think it is sufficiently proved that Guniya fell into the well, and that Mahadeo did not intentionally push her in. It is also, we think, clear, that Dahia falsely told the head constable that she had seen Mahadeo push her daughter into the well. The head constable proves her statement to him. The case against the appellant Chedee is similar, except that the head constable proves only the record he made of Chedee's statement, and not the words of that statement.

"We entertain considerable doubts whether, on the facts stated above, a conviction for an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code can be sustained. The Judge relies upon the decision of this Court in Nim Chand Mookerjee's case (1), in which this passage occurs at page 43:—

"But it is not necessary under s. 194 that the false evidence which is given should be the evidence given in a Court of Justice. Section 191 provides that whoever is bound by any express provision of law to state the truth upon any subject, and makes any statement which is false, and which he knows or believes to be false, is said to give false evidence. Now, under s. 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Police officer making an investigation may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and such person shall be bound to answer all questions put to him by such officer; and it would be a complete offence of giving false evidence as defined by s. 191, taking into consideration the provisions of s. 118 of the Code, if a false statement had been made by such person."

"As we are not prepared to follow this decision we should be glad to have an authoritative ruling on the point, which we would put in the form of this question—

"Whether the words 'shall answer all questions' in s. 118, or the words 'shall be bound to answer all questions' in s. 119, Criminal Procedure Code, constitute an express provision of law to state the truth within the meaning of s. 191, Penal Code?"

[126] Mr. G. C. Kilby for the Crown.—Under s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the accused was bound to answer all questions put to him. If he refuses to answer, he may be punished under s. 179 of the Penal Code, and the accused cannot be said to have answered the questions put to him within the meaning of the section if he gives answers which are intentionally false. Besides, being "bound to answer" in s. 119 of the Criminal Procedure Code, must mean bound to answer truly. He is legally bound to speak the truth, and if he does not, he is punishable under s. 191 of the Penal Code. A person who gives information, or who is examined under ss. 118 and 119 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is a witness. He is called so in the marginal notes to those sections. [PONTIFEX, J.—I see no reason why he should be called so.] He is punishable under s. 193 for giving false evidence.

Cur. ad. vult.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—We think it plain that, neither the words "shall answer all questions" in s. 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code, nor the words "shall be bound to answer all questions" in s. 119 of the same Code, constitute "an express provision of law to state the truth" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Penal Code.

Sections 118 and 119 are, in our opinion, merely intended to oblige persons to give such information as they can to the Police in answer to questions which may be put to them, and they impose no legal obligation on those persons to speak the truth, unless we import the word "truly" in each section after the word "questions," which we clearly have no right to do.

Investigations in a Police Court are not, as a rule, conducted with the same care and accuracy as proceedings in a Court of Justice; and we think that it would be extremely dangerous to the liberty of the subject, if information thus loosely taken by a Police officer could be made the subject of a prosecution for giving false evidence.

It may be that, in some cases, the giving of false information may be made the subject of a different charge under other sections of the Penal Code; but this is a matter upon which we are not now called upon to give an opinion.

Before Sir Richard Garth, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Morris and Mr. Justice Prinsep.

GUREEBULLAH SIRCAR (Judgment-debtor) v. MOHUN LALL SHAHA

Limitation—Instalments—Decree Payable by Instalments—Rent Decree—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 58—Construction of Statutes.

Per GARTH, C.J., and MORRIS, J. (PRINSEP, J., dissenting).—The words "from the date of such judgment" in s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, should be read as if they were, "from the date when the rent is adjudged to be payable."

Per PRINSEP, J.—The "date of such judgment" in s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, means the date on which the judgment was delivered.

Where the terms of an Act are clear and plain, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to it as it stands.

[Diss., 9 C. 711 (715) (F.B.)=12 C.L.R. 318.]

THIS was an application for execution of a money-decree for Rs. 100, which was passed against the defendant, under s. 30 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, on the 24th of January 1876. The decree directed the payment of the money by seven instalments, the first to be paid on the 12th of February 1876, and the last on the 12th of August 1879. A previous application, which was made on the 10th of January 1879 was struck off on the 7th of March 1879. The present application was made on the 5th of April 1879.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, but this decision was reversed on appeal by the Judge of Rungpore, who held, first, that the application of the 5th of April was not a substantive application for execution, but merely a continuation of the application of the 10th of January 1876, which had been struck off improperly; and [128] secondly, that, notwithstanding the terms of s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, limitation ran from the default in payment of the instalments, and not from the date of the judgment, citing the case of Bhari Lall Mookerjee v. Mungola Nath Mookerjee (1).

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard by Morris and Prinsep, JJ., who differed in opinion, in consequence of which, the case was again argued before the same learned Judges and the Chief Justice.

Baboo Bhoirub Chunder Banerjee for the appellant.

Baboo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the respondent.

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C. J.—The Judges of the Division Bench having differed in opinion, this case has been referred to me as a third Judge, and we have heard the point in difference again argued before us.

The suit was brought under s. 30 of the Rent Law, and a decree was made in the Court of first instance by consent of the parties

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 32 of 1880, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of Rungpore, dated the 15th September, 1879, reversing the order of Baboo Gopee Mohun Mookerjee, Munsif of Gaibandha, dated the 5th July 1879.

(1) 4 C. L. R. 371.

on the 24th January 1876, for the sum of Rs. 100, payable by instalments. The first instalment of Rs. 10 was payable in January 1876, and the remaining instalments of Rs. 15 each were payable respectively, in January and August of the years 1877, 1878, and 1879, the last becoming due in August 1879, or upwards of three years from the date of the decree. On non-payment of any one of these instalments, the whole sum decreed became due.

The two first instalments were not paid in due course, and the whole amount thus became payable.

An application for execution was made on the 10th of January 1879, which was struck off on the 7th of March following, in consequence of no one appearing in support of it. Another application was made on the 5th of April following, and an objection was then taken, that by the terms of s. 58 of the Rent Law (Beng. Act VIII of 1869) no execution could legally be issued upon the judgment, inasmuch as more than three years had elapsed from the date of the decree.

[129] The answer to this objection was two-fold:—

1st.—That the application on the 5th of April was only a continuation of the former application of the 10th of January; and

2nd.—That, in a case like the present, the language of s. 58 ought not to be construed literally, but that the three years' limitation ought to be reckoned, not from the date of the judgment itself, but from the day when the sum decreed was adjudged to be payable.

It was argued, and argued truly, that if the three years' limitation was to be reckoned from the date of the judgment, any decree, although obtained by consent, by which the amount payable would become due by instalments or otherwise at a date more than three years subsequent to the judgment, would be absolutely useless; and consequently that it would be impossible for any Court to make a valid decree for a sum payable by instalments at a time more than three years from the making of it.

This would, of course, be materially limiting the power, which is given to the Courts by s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, to make any sum decreed payable by instalments.

On the other hand, it is argued that the very object of s. 58 was, in the first place, to prevent the Courts from postponing the payment of rent for more than three years; and in the next place, to oblige decree-holders to enforce their decrees within that period, on pain of losing their money altogether. The intention was to prevent ryots being harassed and oppressed by rent decrees being kept hanging over their heads for a lengthened period.

I confess I have had great difficulty in coming to a conclusion upon the point, and I am not at all sure that I have at last arrived at the correct one.

On the one hand, the language of the section appears to be very plain, and there is no doubt much reason in the argument, that the sooner these rent claims are finally settled, the better it is for the interests of agriculture.

On the other hand, it seems hardly reasonable, that when a ryot is really unable, from poverty or otherwise, to pay the [130] whole rent within three years, a Civil Court should be positively disabled (even at the instance of the ryot himself, and out of consideration for his poverty, for, from making a decree payable by instalments extending over more than three years.

Most of the authorities which have been cited appear to me to render us little or no assistance; but it was decided in the case of Goloke Money Dabia v. Mohesh Chunder Mosa (1) that the words "no process of execution shall be issued on a judgment after the 'lapse of three years' in s. 58" mean, that execution shall not issue unless a proper application is made for it within three years. In this the Court seems to have adopted the view taken by the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Ridoy Krishna Ghose v. Kailas Chunder Bose (2).

These cases certainly serve to show no more than this, that the Court will put a reasonable construction upon Acts of the Legislature, and will not allow the strict language of a section to prevent their giving it such a construction. Authority is scarcely needed for such an elementary principle.

The question with me has been, whether we ought to extend that principle to the present case; and I have come to the conclusion that we ought. We must, I think, read s. 58 of the Rent Law with s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, and it seems to me manifestly for the benefit of ryots, that full powers should be given to the Courts to make rent decrees payable by instalments.

If I am right in this, I think it almost follows as a matter of course, that it would be a great injustice to a decree-holder, whose rent is thus made payable by instalments, to give him a shorter time for executing his decree than one whose rent is made payable at once.

I therefore think, that the reasonable construction of the two sections taken together is this, that the words "from the date of such judgment" in s. 58 should be read as if they were "from the date when the rent is adjudged to be payable."

If I am wrong in putting this somewhat liberal construction upon the words of the section, I hope I may be set right either by a Full Bench or by the Legislature.

[131] The result of this decision will be, that the appeal will be dismissed with the costs of both hearings in this Court.

MORRIS, J.—I concur. It seems to me that, in the absence of express provision, a local Rent Law cannot, by implication only, be understood to restrict the general right possessed by Civil Courts to give decrees for amounts payable by instalments over a period exceeding three years.

PRINSEP, J.—I regret to be unable to concur in the opinion expressed by my learned colleagues in this case. In my opinion the terms of s. 58 of the Rent Law prevent the further execution of this decree.

Section 34 of the Rent Law declares, that the Code of Civil Procedure shall regulate all proceedings in suits of this description, save as in that Act is otherwise provided. The Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859), s. 194, declares, that in all decrees for the payment of money, the Court may, for any sufficient reason, order that the amount shall be paid by instalments; but s. 58 of the Rent Law provides, that "no process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued on any judgment in any suit" (for arrears of rent) "after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment, unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding five hundred rupees." In my opinion the date of the judgment is the date on which it is delivered (3), for s. 185 of Act VIII of 1859 provides, that

(1) 3 C. 547.

(2) 4 B.L.R. F.B. 82.

(3) See the judgment of Lord Westbury, in In re Risca Coal and Iron Co., 4 D. F. and J. 456; and of Bacon, J., in Ex parte Whitton, In re Greaves, L.R. 13 Ch. D. 881.

"the judgment shall be dated by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it;" and s. 189 adds, "the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was passed." Further, I am of opinion, that the intention of the Legislature in enacting s. 58 was to insist on the early realization of all decrees for small amounts of rent, by withholding any action of the Court towards obtaining payment by means of its processes. If acting under s. 194 a Court fixes an instalment beyond the term of three years from the date of its judgment so as not to come within the terms of s. 58 of the Rent law, in my opinion that decree is, in that respect, a bad decree, and incapable of being put into execution. With [132] the terms of s. 58 of the Rent Law so clearly expressed, the Court could have no sufficient reason for passing such an order. The consent of the parties would not affect the operation of the law as has been held by Peacock, C.J., in the case of Krishna Kamal Sing v. Hiru Sirdar (1).

I am, therefore, of opinion, that we should read s. 58 of the Rent Law according to the plain sense of the words, it being our duty to expound it as it stands. I would, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court.

Appeal dismissed.

KOYLASH CHUNDER GHOSE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. SONATUN CHUNG BAROOIE AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [13th April, 1881.]

Easement—Right of Way—Prescription—Effect of Illustrations—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26 and illus. [b]

On the 6th of April 1878, the plaintiffs sued for obstructing a right of way for boats in the rainy season. The defendants admitted the obstruction but denied the right of way. The plaintiffs proved that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed, and actually used by them, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right without interruption, from before 1855 down to November 1875, since when no actual user of the way by the plaintiffs had taken place. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff had made no actual use of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that notwithstanding Act XV of 1877, s. 26, illus. (b), actual user within two years previous to the institution of the suit is not necessary, in order that the right claimed may be acquired under Act XV of 1877, s. 26.

Illustrations in Acts of the Legislature ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section to which they are appended, especially when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer.

for upwards of twenty years prior to the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs had enjoyed, during the rainy season, a right of way for boats, to and from their house, through certain channels cut in the defendants' land. That the defendants had, on the 1st of June 1876, obstructed the way by filling up the channels, and they claimed to have their right declared and the obstructions removed. The defendants admitted the obstruction, but denied the right of way. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a decree, which was reversed on appeal, the Subordinate Judge holding that, as the last instance of actual user by the plaintiffs was in the rainy season of 1282 (June to November 1875), the suit was barred by s. 26 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. The Subordinate Judge also referred to Gopee Chand Setia v. Bhoobun Mohun Sen (1) and Baboo Luchmee Pershad Narain Singh v. Tiluckdharee Singh (2). The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Hurry Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the appellants.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—The plaintiffs in this suit claim a prescriptive right of passage for boats over the defendants' land, when it becomes covered with water during the rainy season.

The first Court found that the plaintiffs had enjoyed this right for upwards of twenty years; and accordingly made a decree for the removal of certain obstructions which were put up by the defendants in June 1876 for the purpose of preventing the plaintiffs from exercising their right.

The lower Appellate Court does not expressly negative the finding of the lower Court upon the facts, although it throws some doubt upon its correctness. But it has decided against the plaintiffs upon the preliminary ground, that as no actual exercise of the right had taken place within two years before suit, the plaintiffs are barred by limitation.

[134] From this judgment the plaintiffs have appealed; and we have, therefore, to consider the true meaning of the last clause of s. 26 of the Limitation Act, more especially when applied to the particular kind of easement with which we are now dealing. And in order to see precisely how the question arises in the present instance, it will be well to take the facts as found by the first Court.

The plaintiffs have enjoyed for upwards of twenty years this right of passage for their boats over the defendants' land, when that land is flooded in the rainy season.

The first interruption of the plaintiffs' right occurred in June 1876, before the rains had commenced; when the defendants, with a view of preventing the plaintiffs from exercising their right, put up the obstructions, which are the subject of complaint.

On the 6th of April 1878, or about one year and ten months after the interruption, this suit was brought.

Now, if the right was enjoyed by the plaintiffs for twenty years before the interruption, and the interruption itself was the first breach of enjoyment, it is obvious that the enjoyment must have continued up to a time within two years before suit, in which case there would be no bar.

(1) 23 W. R. 401.

(2) 24 W. R. 295.

But the Subordinate Judge considers that because there was no actual exercise of the right within the two years, the suit is barred.

He relies upon two decisions of this Court,—one in the case of Baboo Luchmee Pershad Narain Singh v. Tiluckdharee Singh (1), which does not support him at all as there the alleged right was interrupted more than two years before suit and the other, the case of Gopee Chund Setia v. Bhoobun Mohun Sen (2), which only supports him to this extent, that the learned Judge in that case refers to illus. (b) of s. 26 as showing that there should be some actual user of the right within two years before suit. It is no doubt, upon the strength of illus. (b) that the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit, and we cannot blame him; for when the language of a section points to one view of the law, and one of the illustrations of [135] the section points to another, it is a very difficult thing for the subordinate judiciary to decide which view to adopt.

Indeed it is very difficult for the High Court, whose duty it is to construe recent Acts of the Legislature, to say what precise weight ought to be attached to these illustrations. So far as they merely serve to explain the meaning of the section, we have no doubt that they may often be found useful, especially amongst a class of judicial officers who are not very conversant with the meaning or working of the section itself.

We have already decided, however, more than once in this Court, that the illustrations ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section itself, and certainly they ought not to do so, when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer.

It will be sufficient to say no more than this for our present purpose.

The 26th section of the Limitation Act only renders it necessary, as far as we can see, that the enjoyment of the right claimed should have continued till within two years before suit. The section says not a word as to any actual user or exercise of the right within the two years. It is obvious to us, that the enjoyment intended by the section means something very different from actual user. In order to establish the right, the enjoyment of it must continue for twenty years; but in the case of discontinuous easements, this does not mean that actual user is to continue for the whole period of twenty years. On the contrary, there may be days and weeks and months, during which the right may not be exercised at all, and yet during all those days and weeks and months, the person claiming the right may have been in full enjoyment of it.

The easement with which we have to deal in the present case affords a remarkable illustration of this.

The right which the plaintiffs claim can only be used by them during the two or three months of the year when the defendants' land is flooded; and if there were a lack of rain, it is probable, that even for twenty or twenty-one months, the right might not be exercised at all; and yet, so long as the plaintiffs' right was not interfered with, whenever they had [136] occasion to use it, their enjoyment must, we conceive, be considered as continuing during all the year round.

Unless this were so, a person in the plaintiffs' position, who could only use his right during a short period of the year, could never gain a prescriptive right at all.

Illustration (b), therefore, which would seem to make "enjoyment" equivalent to "actual user" must, we think, be rejected, especially as the latter clause, which follows the words "The suit shall be dismissed," is obviously quite unnecessary for the purposes of the illustration.

If the view which we take in this respect is not the right one the only way for persons in the plaintiffs' position to establish their rights by prescription, would be to claim, not under the Limitation Act, but by immemorial user, and get the Court to presume their rights after a twenty-five or thirty years' enjoyment, unless the defendants could show anything to the contrary. Their Lordships in the Privy Council have lately held that it is not necessary that such rights should be claimed under the Limitation Act; see Rajrup Koer v. Abul Hossein (1).

The case must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court to try the question, whether the plaintiffs have enjoyed (in the sense which we attribute to the word "enjoy") the right which they claim for twenty years before the obstructions were put up in June 1876.

The cost in this Court and in the Court below will abide the result.

Case remanded.

KHODABUX (Defendant) v. BUDREE NARAIN SINGH AND ANOTHER
(Plaintiffs). [13th April, 1881.]

Limitation—Minor's Right to Sue—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 7.

A suit by a guardian on behalf of a minor is that of the minor, and is governed by the law of limitation applicable to the minor.

So, where a minor had been dispossessed of his share in certain property, which had been sold in execution of a decree, and where an application under s. 268 of Act VIII of 1859 to obtain possession of the share was made by the then guardian of the minor, and disallowed, and subsequently, but beyond the period of one year from the date of the application, a suit was brought to obtain possession by another guardian of the infant, who had been duly appointed,—

Held, that such suit was not barred by limitation, the right to sue being that of the minor, and that it might be exercised by any one duly appointed on his behalf during his minority, or by the infant himself, within the time limited by s. 7 of Act XV of 1877, after attaining his majority.

Sreemutty Suffuroonnissa Bibee v. Moonshee Noorul Hossein (2) and Huro Soondree Chowdhraiz v. Annund Nath Roy Chowdhry (3), followed.

IN this case the two plaintiffs, who were minors, sued the defendant, through their mother and guardian as next friend, to obtain a declaration of their title to, and for possession of, a 2-anna share in certain plots of land. It appeared that a 4-anna share in these lands had belonged to their father Bhimraj Singh Sudia, who died in 1277 M. S., corresponding with the year 1870, leaving as heirs his sons Pahulwan Singh, Zemindar Singh, and the two plaintiffs. On the 18th May 1877, the interest of Pahulwan Singh in this 4-anna share was sold in execution of a decree against him alone, and in due course the sale was confirmed on the 18th June 1877; and the defendant, who was the auction-purchaser, obtained possession of the whole 4-anna share. On the 21st September 1877, [138] Zemindar Singh made an application to the Subordinate Judge under Act VIII of 1859, with respect to three out of the four annas share, on behalf of himself and the present plaintiffs, alleging that they had been dispossessed of their share in the property by the auction-purchaser, and praying that his possession over their 3-anna share might be set aside; but, on the 9th November 1877, this application was rejected. Subsequently the plaint in the present suit was filed on the 22nd January 1879, the mother of the two minor plaintiffs having been duly appointed their guardian. The defendant, in his written statement, contended, that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within one year of the date of the order of the 9th November 1877; and also that the debt, for which the property was attached and sold under the decree against Pahulwan Singh, was contracted for the benefit of the joint family and that, therefore, the whole of the joint family property was liable. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred by limitation, and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to go into the merits. From that decree the plaintiffs appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed it, and remanded the case under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the purpose of its being disposed of on the merits.

The defendant then specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Taruck Nath Paulit, for the appellant.

Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by

CUNNINGHAM, J.—In execution of a decree obtained against Pahulwan Singh the eldest of four brothers, Zemindar the second brother, as guardian of the two youngest minors intervened under s. 269 Act VIII of 1859; but his opposition was disallowed on the 9th November 1877.

On 22nd January 1879, Pryabuttee, the mother of these minors, who has since been appointed guardian in the place of Zemindar, instituted the present suit on their behalf to set [139] aside the order of the 9th November 1877, and to recover possession of the minor's property.

The only point for our decision in special appeal is, whether this suit is barred by limitation, inasmuch as it has been brought more than one year from the date of the order passed under s. 269. The first Court dismissed the suit as barred, but on appeal the District Judge has set aside this order, and remanded the suit for trial, holding that as the plaintiffs are still minors, no limitation would apply to this suit.

We are of opinion, that this view of the law is correct. The right to sue is that of the minors, and can, under s. 7, Act XV of 1877, be exercised by them within a certain time from their attaining majority. They are, no doubt, bound by any act lawfully done on their behalf by a properly appointed guardian, but if they have a right to sue, and that right has not been exercised on their behalf by their guardian, it exists until they are qualified to act for themselves.

The special appellant's pleader argues, that Zemindar having failed to sue within one year, any suit by him would be barred; and that, consequently, the present guardian, his successor, would also be barred, though probably the minors might themselves sue after attaining majority.

The guardian, however, is no party to a suit. The parties are the minors, and he is only their representative. The law of limitation for suits only applies to the parties themselves. The law may be different as regards appeals, because a minor's rights are not specially excepted in this respect. If, therefore, the minor's right to sue is not affected by the law of limitation, it may be exercised on their behalf by any person empowered by law so to act, so long as they are incapable, by reason of minority, from acting for themselves. The cases of Sreemutty Suffuroonnissa Bibee v. Moonshee Noorul Hossein (1) and Huro Soonduree Chowdhraïn v. Annund Nath Roy Chowdhry (2) are in point.

We, therefore, dismiss this special appeal with costs.

WATKINS v. DHUNNOO BABOO. [4th May, 1881.]

Infant—Minor—Next Friend—Costs of Minor—Necessaries—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 68.

Where a suit has been brought against a minor, the effect of which, if successful, would be to deprive the minor of his property, the costs of successfully defending that suit on his behalf may, when his property is in the hands of the Receiver of the Court, be recovered from the minor as necessaries, in an action brought against him by his attorney.

[F., 21 C. 872 (880); Cons., 13 C.W.N. 643 (647) = 36 C. 768 = 1 Ind. Cas. 724; R., 22 M. 314 (317); D., 17 M. 257 (259).]

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiff, an attorney of the High Court, for the recovery of Rs. 1,469-4 from the defendant who is a minor, an account of work done and money paid for the defendant as his solicitor. It appeared from the plaint and the evidence in the cause, that, on the 8th of April 1876, the defendant, by his mother and next friend Champa Beebee, brought a suit against his paternal uncle, one Chunnoololl Johurry, seeking for an account and partition of the estate of his grandfather, Inder Chunder Johurry. Shortly after the institution of the suit, Champa Beebee was removed, and Mr. C. F. Pittar, an attorney of the High Court, was appointed next friend of the minor in her place.

On the 28th of July 1876, a decree was made in the above suit, whereby it was ordered that the partition asked for should be carried out, and that the share of the plaintiff should be handed over to the Receiver of the Court, to be retained and managed by him for the plaintiff until the latter should attain his majority. A commission of partition was issued out, and on its return it was found that the value of the minor's share was about a lakh of rupees.

On the 20th of March 1877, one Paunch Cowrie Mull and others instituted a suit in the High Court, against Chunnoololl Johurry, Champa Beebee, and the minor, claiming that the property, the subject of the partition suit, was not the property [141] of the defendants, but belonged to Paunch Cowrie Mull and his co-plaintiffs, who claimed to be trustees thereof for the purpose of carrying out certain religious trusts. Mr. Pittar was appointed next friend of the infant in that suit also, and the plaintiff in the present case was the infant's attorney. The suit was dismissed with costs on the 20th of August, and this decree having been appealed from, the suit was finally dismissed on the 21st of March 1879. On the 25th of September 1879, a writ of attachment was issued out against Paunch Cowrie Mull and others for the recovery of the taxed costs as between party and party, but the writ was not executed, as the plaintiff could not be found. The plaintiff, Mr. Watkins, who had paid all the costs of the infant both in the Court of first instance and in the Court of Appeal, then instituted the present suit to recover them from the minor's estate.

Mr. Trevelyan, for the plaintiff, contended, that the costs paid by the plaintiff, and incurred in the suit and appeal, were necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act; see Collins v. Brook (1), Brown v. Ackroyd (2), and Wilson v. Ford (3).

Mr. T. A. Apar, for the defendant.—The case is covered by Radhanauth Bose v. Suttoprosono Ghose (4) and Denonauth Bose v. Ruggoobardial Singh (5), Collins v. Brook (1) has nothing to do with this case. The other cases cited have no reference to infants.

Mr. Trevelyan, in reply, said, that the question as to whether costs are "necessaries" was not entered into in the cases cited by Mr. Apar.

JUDGMENT.

BROUGHTON, J.—The plaintiff, an attorney of this Court, seeks to recover Rs. 1,469-4, with interest, on account of certain costs incurred by him in defending a suit for the present defendant, who was, and still is, an infant under age.

[142] He contends, that these costs are "necessaries" within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act, s. 68, which enacts, that "if a person incapable of entering into a contract, &c., is supplied by another person with necessities suited to his condition in life, the person who has furnished such supplies is entitled to be reimbursed from the property of such incapable person."

The infant, on the 8th of April 1876 through his mother and next friend, sued his uncle for an account and partition of the estate of his grandfather, and a decree was made by consent, on the 28th of July 1876, for partition. It was directed that the infant's share should be delivered to the Receiver of this Court. Mr. C. F. Pittar, an attorney of this Court, was substituted for the mother as the next friend of the infant. The partition was made, and the property allotted to the defendant is now in the hands of the Receiver.

Afterwards, on the 20th of March 1877, one Paunch Cowrie Mull and others sued the infant and others, praying that the will of one Hoolassee Lall might be construed; and that the rights of the plaintiffs, as members of a certain Punch and the other religious trusts under this will, might be ascertained, and that, if necessary, this suit might be treated as supplemental to the former suit.

In this second suit also Mr. Pittar was appointed guardian ad litem for the infant.

This second suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiffs appealed, and ultimately the appeal also was dismissed with costs.

Attempts have been made to execute these decrees for costs, but the persons against whom this execution was sought cannot be found, and have no property.

If Paunch Cowrie Mull had succeeded in his suit, the property adjudged to the infant in the first suit would have been swept away.

There was, however, a good defence to the suit; and it was therefore necessary, in the ordinary acceptance of the term, that proceedings should be taken to protect the interests of the infant from this attack which was made on his property.

A proper and responsible person was appointed to act as [143] guardian to the infant, and to see that no unnecessary proceedings should be taken on his behalf; and the guardian protected himself from personal liability by an agreement with the present plaintiff, who was retained by him to act as attorney for the infant defendant.

It is contended upon the authority of a case decided by Mr. Justice Phear--Radhanauth Bose v. Suttoproson Ghose (1), and a late case decided by Mr. Justice White on the 8th of June, 1880—Denonauth Bose v. Ruggobardial Singh (2), that these costs, although they have been properly incurred in defending an action which ought to have been defended, are, nevertheless, not recoverable.

In the first case Mr. Justice Phear held, that there was no contract by or on behalf of the infant, and the reasons are given why an infant is not permitted to enter into this particular contract, but must act vicariously under the established rules of Court. These rules are now embodied in the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877, and the Contract Act, s. 11, does not allow an infant to enter into any contract.

In the case decided by Mr. Justice White, it appears that the guardian was also a party to the suit, and that the infant's estate was in his hands.

The notes of the judgment are very short, and as I understand them, it was held that the decree should be against the guardian, and that he could recoup himself out of the infant's estate.

The infant in this case comes within the description of a person incapable of entering into a contract, and the question is, whether the work done for him by the plaintiff comes under the head of "necessaries."

It has been decided in the case of Collins v. Brook (3), cited by Mr. Trevelyan, that payment made to avoid arrest is a necessary. In Brown v. Ackroyd (4), a suit to protect the person from violence was considered in the same way necessary.

In Wilson v. Ford (5) it was contended, that Brown v. Ackroyd (4) went as far as the laws allowed in this direction; [144] but it was considered by the Barons of the Exchequer, who were unanimous, that where a wife had been deserted by her husband, who had deprived her of her property, and when she had failed in her endeavours to persuade him to return to her, and had instituted proceedings for the restitution of conjugal rights, the costs of all reasonable proceedings incurred in this manner were necessaries, including the expenses of taking counsel's opinion upon the construction of a settlement and expenses incurred by her to protect the husband's property from a distraint. If an infant is liable for necessary food and raiment suitable to his condition in life, on the ground that they are necessaries, it would be strangely anomalous if the law were to hold that proceedings properly taken to preserve him from complete ruin and destitution must be taken at the risk and expense of those persons who act for his benefit, and who may or may not, recover the money so spent, as the infant, on coming of age, may chance to approve of or repudiate the arrangements, and be willing or unwilling to re-pay them. I think that the case of Wood v. Ford (1) is sufficient authority for the proposition that the costs of a proper suit or defence of a suit in which property is involved are recoverable from the infant's estate, and as the costs appear to have been taxed and to be reasonable in the present instance, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. It was, however, very right that the question should have been discussed. The costs of both parties must be paid out of the estate of the infant (2).

Easement—Right of Way—Right of Passage for Boats in the Rainy Season—Water.

A right of passage for boats in the rainy season over a channel wholly in another man's land, is, in respect of extent, analogous to an ordinary right of way; and the dominant owner cannot complain of the servient owner's narrowing the channel, so long as the latter, by so doing, does not prevent the former from passing and repassing as conveniently as he has always been accustomed to do.

A right of passage for boats in the rainy season over another person's tank must be claimed in a particular direction in order to be valid.

[R., 14 C.W.N. 15 = 5 Ind. Cas. 23.]

IN this case the plaintiffs alleged that there was a permanent passage for boats, in the rainy season, over the defendant's land, within which it was wholly included; that the way was through a gar, or ditch, opposite the defendant's house, and thence (after passing in various directions) through the defendant's tank. The plaintiffs claimed a right of way over this passage as an easement, and they alleged that the defendant had narrowed the gar and closed up the tank. The lower Appellate Court found, that though the defendant had narrowed the gar, he had not interfered with the plaintiffs' coming and going as they had been accustomed to do; and he dismissed this portion of the plaintiffs' claim, citing Goddard on Easements, 2nd Ed., pp. 256-7. With regard to the way claimed by the plaintiffs over the defendant's tank, the Judge said: "It appears from the evidence that there was no particular road, and that plaintiffs' boats used to pass all over defendant's pond. JUDGMENT.

 8 C.L.R. 375.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—The plaintiffs claim a prescriptive right of passage for boats over a certain water-channel belonging to the defendant; and they say that the defendant has wrongfully obstructed that passage.

The Courts below have divided the plaintiffs' claim into two portions. As to the first, the lower Appellate Court has found it to be perfectly true, that the plaintiffs have a right of passage for their boats over that part of the defendant's channel; but then it has also found, that what the defendant has done has not interfered with the plaintiffs' right.

The defendant has merely raised an embankment and done certain other acts which have confined the width of the channel by a few feet; but this admittedly leaves ample room for the passage for the plaintiffs' boats, even those of the largest size.

With regard to the other portion of the claim, the lower Courts find, that the plaintiffs have not proved any right of passage. Their evidence, if it proves anything, goes to show, that the plaintiffs' boats used to traverse the defendant's water in all directions, and in no particular line; and the lower Court therefore finds, that the right of passage is not proved in the particular direction indicated by the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs complain before us of both these findings.

As regards the first part of the claim, they contend that, if they have been exercising a right of passage over a channel of a particular breadth, and that breadth is interfered with by the defendant even by a single foot, they have a right to have the whole breadth restored, though the channel that remains [147] is amply sufficient for all their requirements. We think it clear that this is not the law. A right of passage for boats over another man's channel is analogous to a right of way claimed over another man's road. And we believe that the law upon the subject is thus correctly laid down in Goddard on Easements :

"It may be mentioned here, that a right of way along a private road belonging to another person does not give the dominant owner a right, that the road shall, in no respect, be altered, or the width decreased; for his right does not entitle him to the use of the whole of the road, unless the whole width of the road is necessary for his purpose; but it is merely a right to pass with the convenience to which he has been accustomed. The right, therefore, merely extends to that portion of the centre of the road, which is necessary for the due exercise of the right of passage. The only obligation upon the servient owner is, that he shall not unreasonably contract the width of the road, or render the exercise of the right of passing less easy than it was at the time of the grant."

We consider, therefore, that the lower Court has taken a correct view of this part of the case.

(2) 15 W. R. 295.

Then, with regard to the second point, we think it clear, that the Court below was right in holding, that the plaintiffs could not claim a right of way in every direction over the defendant's water. They could claim such a right only in a particular direction, and this they have not proved.

We think, therefore, that the judgment of the lower Court was right, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Rent Suit—Adding Plaintiff—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 32, 591.

In a suit for rent, where the defendant alleged that a person not on the record had a joint interest with the plaintiff in the property in respect of which the rent was due,—

Held, where the plaintiff disputed this and objected to such course being taken, that it was improper to add such person as co-plaintiff, and that if added at all it should be as defendant, in order that the issue between him and the plaintiff might be properly tried.

Held, also, that in such a case an appeal lies under s. 591 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[R., 14 B. 232 (234); 9 A. 447 (451); 6 Ind. Cas. 239 = 8 M.L.T. 72; U.B.R. (1897-1901), Vol. II, 310.]

IN this suit the plaintiff alleged himself to be the proprietor of a 5-anna 2-pie share in a certain mouza, and sued the defendant, his tenant, for Rs. 4-5-6, being arrears of rent due by him on that share. The defendant, while admitting the rate at which the plaintiff claimed the rent to be correctly stated, pleaded payment of certain sums, and alleged that the plaintiff was not solely entitled to it by reason of his brother Prem Sahoo, having a joint undivided share in the property. The Munsif made Prem Sahoo a co-plaintiff in the suit although the plaintiff objected, and finding that both the plaintiff and Prem Sahoo were members of a joint Hindu family when the property was acquired, gave a decree for the amount claimed, to the plaintiff and his brother jointly. The plaintiff then appealed, on the ground that the decree should have been in his favour alone, and that the Munsif was wrong in adding his brother as a co-plaintiff, and should have left the question as between them to be decided in a separate suit. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal, and consequently the [149] plaintiff now specially appealed to the High Court against these two decrees.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by

CUNNINGHAM, J.—The plaintiff sues Raghoonath, his tenant, for the rent due on a 5-anna 2-pie share amounting to 4 rupees 5 annas. The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the whole of this share, and stated that the plaintiff's brother was a co-sharer, and he asked that the brother might be made a defendant.

The Munsif, instead of making the brother a defendant, added him as a co-plaintiff, notwithstanding the protest of the original plaintiff. He has dealt with the matter in dispute between the two brothers in a very summary way, and has refused to determine the issues which would necessarily arise between them if they complained an antagonism; but he has, nevertheless, given the two brothers, plaintiffs, a decree.

The Subordinate Judge has affirmed this decision.

A preliminary objection is raised to the hearing of this special appeal. It is urged that the matter for our decision is really an appeal against an order passed under s. 32, and therefore cannot be brought before this Court on second appeal.

The present case, however, is one provided for by s. 591, and can be dealt with in special appeal against the decree passed. The objection, therefore, is disallowed.

As regards the particular order complained of, we think that the Court, in acting under s. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is bound to exercise its discretion in a reasonable manner; and that, in a case like the present, where the original plaintiff disputes the right of any one to be joined with him in the suit, any party intervening should, if made a party at all, be more properly joined as a defendant.

[150] The effect of the brother being joined with the original plaintiff is, that the issues as between them cannot properly be tried, and must be made the subject of a separate suit. The first Court, it is true, has drawn an issue, which would determine the dispute between these two brothers, supposing them to be plaintiff and defendant; and if the Courts had proceeded to decide this issue on the evidence offered, we should probably not feel inclined to interfere, because, then the error would be an error in form rather than in substance; but when we find that both the lower Courts have not tried the issue as between the two brothers, we have no course left open to us but to set aside the judgment of the Court below, and to remand the case in order that it may be properly tried in the manner stated above. The brother Prem Lall must be removed from the record as a plaintiff and be made a defendant, and the case must then be tried, both as between them, and between the plaintiff and the ryot-defendant.

The case must, therefore, be remanded to the lower Appellate Court, either to try the case itself on the evidence on the record, or otherwise to deal with it in accordance with law.

Costs will follow the result.

Case remanded.

Where one of a number of co-sharers of certain property, the rent of which was paid by the tenants to a person acting as agent of the co-sharers, from whom they received it in proportion to their respective shares, brought a suit against the tenants for arrears of rent, and it appeared that the agent had been dismissed by the other co-sharers without the consent of the plain-[151]tiff, and contrary to her wish, and that she had given notice to the tenant to continue the payment of her share as before and not to pay any newly appointed agent, and it also appeared that the other co-sharers were colluding with the tenants, and the plaintiff made them parties defendants with the tenants.—

Held, that such a suit would not lie, and that the proper course to pursue was that pointed out in Tara Chunder Banerjee v. Ameer Mundle (1).

THE cases out of which these two appeals arose were suits for arrears of rent, the plaintiff being an eight-anna shareholder in the mouzas in which the defendants were tenants. It appeared that the plaintiff had been in the habit of receiving her share of the rent through a gomastah who was employed to collect the whole rent on behalf of her and the other co-sharers. Sometime prior to these suits being instituted, this gomastah having been dismissed by the other co-sharers without her consent and against her will, the plaintiff gave notice to the tenants not to make any payments of her share of the rent to any newly appointed gomastah, but to continue the payment of it as before, and subsequently she called upon them to pay her her share of the rent, but they refused to do so. She thereupon instituted these suits and joined her co-sharers as parties defendants, alleging that they had colluded with the tenants in order to deprive her of the rent due to her.

The Munsif, in the first instance, holding that the facts were similar to those in the case decided by the Full Bench—Doorga Churn Surma v. Jampa Dassee (2), and following that decision, gave the plaintiff decrees for the full amount claimed. From those decrees the defendants appealed, and urged that no suit for rent under the circumstances would lie—Ahamuldeen v. Grish Chunder Shamunt (3); but the Judge, in distinguishing that case, followed the decision of the Full Bench in Doorga Churn Surma v. Jampa Dassee (2), and dismissed the appeals. The defendants then specially appealed to the High Court.

CIVIL.7 C. 150=

CUNNINGHAM, J.—The plaintiff in this case, on behalf of her minor daughter-in-law, along with other co-owners, was in the habit of receiving rent jointly through a common agent. The other co-owners dismissed this agent and appointed another, and thereupon the plaintiff gave notice to the tenants not to pay her share of the rent, and she now seeks to enforce payment against them. This it appears to me is contrary to the law laid down in a series of decisions, and especially in the Full Bench decision—Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1).

I think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court must be set aside, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with all costs.

The judgment will govern appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 115 of 1880.

PRINSEP, J.—The decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point is clearly wrong, for, as pointed out in the Full Bench decision, Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1), "it has been constantly held in this Court, and must be considered now as well established law, that each co-sharer may bring a separate suit against the tenant for his share of the rent. But in the absence of such an arrangement (that is, an arrangement between the tenant and the co-sharers) under which the tenant agrees to pay a portion of the rent to each co-sharer in respect of this separate share, it is equally clear that no such suit can be maintained."

In the present case the plaintiff, having hitherto realized rent jointly with other co-sharers, seeks to realize it separately from the tenant on her alleged specific share without any such arrangement. She clearly could not do so, and should follow the course laid down in Tara Chunder Banerjee v. Ameer Mundul (2).

I, therefore, agree in dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in all the Courts.

Partition—Butwara—Revenue paying Estate—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 11, 265.

Where one of several co-sharers, owners of a piece of land defined by metes and bounds and forming part of a revenue paying estate, brings a suit for partition, in which he does not seek to have his joint liability for the whole of the Government revenue annulled, such suit is cognizable by the Civil Courts which have jurisdiction to determine the plaintiff's right to have his share divided and to make a decree accordingly.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1632 of 1879, against the decree of H. Muspratt, Esq., District Judge of Sylhet, dated the 20th May 1879, modifying the decree of Baboo Ram Coomar Pal Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 3rd of September, 1878.

(1) 4 C. 99=2 C.L.R. 373.

(2) 22 W.R. 394.

IN this case the plaintiff, who claimed a twelve-anna share in certain land, defined by metes and bounds, forming part of a revenue-paying estate, sued the defendant, whom he alleged to be the owner of the remaining four annas, for partition praying for "a decree awarding him distinct possession, not by the partition of rent according to his share, but by partition of the land." The plaint stated that, by a solenamah, or deed of compromise, dated the 8th of July, 1874, between the plaintiff and the defendant, it was agreed that the parties thereto should hold the land in question in the abovementioned shares, and that the defendant had agreed to an amicable partition, but had refused to carry it out. The defence was, that there were other parties interested in the land who were not joined as parties, and that there were other lands in joint possession, of which the plaintiff sought no partition.

The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court.

Mr. H. Bell, Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy, and Baboo Joy Gobind Shome, for the appellant.

[154] Baboo Sreenath Dass and Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

Mr. H. Bell, for the appellant.—In all cases of joint ownership, each party has a right to demand and enforce partition—Shama Soonduree Debia v. Jardine, Skinner & Co. (1). Partition may be had of a revenue-paying estate where, as in this case, the partition may be carried out without apportioning the revenue—Ranee Shama Soonduree Debia v. Kooer Puresh Narain Roy (2). The parties themselves may make an amicable partition binding on themselves, though not on the Collector—Tripoorah Soonduree Chowdhranee v. Kali Chunder Chowdhry (3); and what the parties may do without suit, the Civil Court may do on suit being brought. The Collector has nothing to do with such a partition—Ajoodhia Lall v. Gumani Lall (4). This is a suit of a civil nature which the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to try—see Civil Procedure Code, ss. 11 and 16; and when such a suit is brought and a decree given, s. 265 of the same Code shows how it is to be executed. I admit that all the persons interested should have been made parties to the suit.

Baboo Sreenath Dass, for the respondent.—A suit will not lie for the partition of a revenue-paying estate—Mohsun Ali v. Nuzum Ali (5), Ruttonmonee Dutt v. Brojomohun Dutt (6) and Shaw Khairuddin v. Sheikh Abdul Saki (7). Section 265 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply, for here the suit is not for partition of a revenue-paying estate, but for the partition of a block of land within the estate, for which the Code makes no provision, and which, therefore, impliedly cannot be brought. [MORRIS, J.—The implication from the section is the other way. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court to carry out the partition seems to be taken away, only in case of a co-sharer in the whole of a revenue-paying estate who requires partition of it.] The plaintiff is seeking [155] possession of a portion only of the lands held in joint possession. Such a suit will not lie.—Special Appeal, No. 2134 of 1879, decided by Prinsep and Cunningham, JJ., March 11th, 1881.

The following judgments were delivered :

JUDGMENTS.

TOTTENHAM, J.—It appears to me that the reasons given by the lower Courts for entirely dismissing the plaintiff's suit are not sound in law. It may be that, as observed by the District Judge, the power to make partition of lands paying revenue to Government (that is, as between persons by whom the revenue is payable) is restricted to the Collector; but that restriction does not exclude the Civil Court from determining the right of one of such persons to have his share divided, and from making a decree accordingly, in a suit in which the plaintiff does not seek to have his joint liability for the whole of the Government revenue annulled. In the present case Mr. Bell for the appellant has expressly deprecated any partition of the Government revenue, and points to the sixth paragraph of the plaint as showing that plaintiff never intended to demand it.

There can be no doubt that a right to partition is inherent in owners of joint property; and s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the Courts shall, subject to certain provisions, which do not apply to the present case, have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, excepting suits of which their cognizance is barred by any enactment for the time being in force.

Thus it appears to me impossible to say, that the present suit will not lie in the Civil Court, and the fact noticed by the lower Courts that the plaintiff's share in the estate exists only in a portion of it, and not in all the lands comprised in it, seems to me to afford no reason why he should be barred from obtaining a partition of his share such as it is. The Court might hesitate to allow him a decree for the severance of a portion only of his share, or of his proportionate shares of particular [156] plots; but if he claims to have his whole share divided, as Mr. Bell states that he does, and disclaims any share in lands not included in this suit, I see no reason why he should not obtain what he claims: and it appears from the written statement of the defendant that he has no real objection to a partition of the plaintiff's just share. As to certain portions of the lands of which a share is claimed, the Courts have found as a fact, that the plaintiff has no right in them. This will not prevent his obtaining his share of what does really belong to him.

As to the alleged misjoinder and nonjoinder of proper parties, the suit cannot fail on that account. If the lower Appellate Court thinks it necessary that other parties be joined in the suit, it is open to it to so order.

The decree of the lower Court must be set aside with costs, and the case must go back for a fresh trial with reference to the observations above made.

MORRIS, J.—I understand the plaintiff to be a fractional shareholder of a revenue-paying estate called Chota Hissa, No. 24, and to possess an interest in only one village, by name Kharki, of this estate. The lands of this village, so far as they appertain to this estate, are held in joint tenancy by the plaintiff and the defendant in the proportion of twelve annas and four annas respectively, under a certain deed of solehnamah.

By the present suit the plaintiff asks the Court to direct partition by metes and bounds of the lands constituting his twelve annas share. To this, two objections are raised; first, that the plaintiff has not asked for the partition of all the lands which formed the subject of the solehnamah; and second, that, on the principle laid down in the case of Ruttonmonee Dutt

v. Brojo Mohun Dutt (1), the Civil Court cannot direct the partition of a block or small quantity of revenue-paying land of a joint estate. On the first point, however, it is clear that the plaintiff disclaims possession or ownership of the plots referred to, and only asks for partition of those lands which are held by him jointly with the defendant. In connection with this estate he denies that he is in possession of any other lands.

[157] This being so, his case appears to come entirely within the provisions of s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the second objection fails. The plaintiff, by this suit, substantially asks for the partition of his entire share in this undivided estate. I agree, therefore, in thinking that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to give him the relief he seeks, and, setting aside the order of the District Judge, direct that the case be returned to him to be dealt with on the merits. Appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Jurisdiction—Winding up Partnership—Subordinate Court—District Court—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 265—Civil Courts Act (Act VI of 1871), s. 11.

The Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the meaning of s. 11 of the Civil Courts Act.

The word "may" in s. 265 of the Contract Act has a somewhat similar force to the words "it shall be lawful" in a Statute, which merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. And the words "may apply" in the section create a new jurisdiction which must be exercised strictly in accordance with the Statute which creates it,—that is to say, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge, within the local limit of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm which it is sought to wind up is situated.

It was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting s. 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives, cannot obtain the relief mentioned in the section except by resorting to that Court.

plaint, that the plaintiffs and the defendants carried on business in rice at Chandbally, Hooghly, and other places from Joysti 1276 (1869) to 22nd Falgoon 1282 (5th March 1878); and that the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 3, Kali Doss Mullick, had an eight-anna share in this business, the other moiety or eight-anna share belonging to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Kedar Nath Mullick and Russick Lall Mullick; that, on the 5th March 1878, the defendant No. 3, Kali Doss Mullick, went out of the business, and the partnership was therefore dissolved; and that the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 3, Kali Doss Mullick, as between themselves were entitled to a six-anna and a two-anna share respectively. The plaint prayed that the accounts might be adjusted and the partnership wound up, and that Rs. 5,500, or whatever larger sum might be found to be their share of the profits, might be awarded to them by the Court. They further prayed for a sum of Rs. 1,000 as damages incurred in consequence of the defendants having withdrawn the sum of Rs. 13,000 from the business and so crippled it.

The second case related to the second business conducted by the same persons. It was alleged that this business was commenced on the 23rd Falgoon 1284 (6th March 1878); that the plaintiffs and the defendants were partners therein, and that the plaintiffs had an eight-anna share, and the defendants, Kedar Nath Mullick and Russick Lall Mullick, the other eight-anna share. It was not distinctly alleged that this second business had been closed, but the cause of action was dated from Bysack 1285, when certain arbitrators were appointed to settle disputes between the parties, and it appeared that this was a virtual dissolution of the partnership. The plaintiffs prayed, first, that the accounts might be settled and the partnership [159] wound up; and secondly, that Rs. 1,100, or whatever larger sum might be found to be their share of the profits, might be awarded to them by the Court. To this case also belonged the further claim for Rs. 1,000 as damages incurred in consequence of the withdrawal of Rs. 13,000 from the business, and these damages were claimed as compensation for the probable profits which the plaintiffs would have obtained from the continued employment of this amount of capital. The Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain and decide these suits, and that, with reference to s. 265 of the Contract Act, the Court of the District Judge had exclusive jurisdiction to deal with the questions raised. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J. (who, after stating the facts of the case as above, continued):

—Section 265 of the Contract Act is as follows: "In the absence of any contract to the contrary, after the termination of a partnership, each partner or his representatives may apply to the Court to wind up the business of the firm, to provide for the payment of its debts, and to distribute the surplus according to the shares of the partners respectively." Then comes the following explanation:—"The 'Court' in this section means a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm is situated."

Now, the first question which has been argued before us is, that the Court of the Subordinate Judge is not a Court inferior to the Court of the District Judge; but we think, with reference to the Bengal Civil Courts Act, VI of 1871, that this contention is wholly untenable. The Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge, at least in two [160] important particulars. So far as regards suits of a certain value, that is suits not exceeding Rs. 5,000, the Court of the District Judge has an appellate jurisdiction over the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Then by the express provisions of the Civil Courts Act, s. 11, all the Civil Courts in the District, and therefore, the Court of the Subordinate Judge, are subject to the control of the District Judge. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Court of a Subordinate Judge is inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the meaning of the above explanation.

Then it is argued, that the words "may apply" are permissive only, and that their effect is to give to the District Judge a concurrent jurisdiction merely; but this argument assumes that, before the passing of the Contract Act, the jurisdiction provided by s. 265 of that Act existed, and could be exercised by some other Court or Courts than that of the District Judge; but we think that this was not the case.

Undoubtedly the reports of cases decided before the passing of the Contract Act do show many instances in which members of business partnerships resorted to the Civil Courts, in order to have accounts and other matters settled between them by judicial decision; and in this, as in other matters, the selection of the Court was regulated by the pecuniary value of the subject-matter of dispute; but we apprehend, that no tribunal existed out of the Presidency-towns which was capable of exercising the exact jurisdiction conferred by s. 265 of the Contract Act; capable, in other words, of dealing with partnership matters for all purposes contemplated by this section. In the case of Julius v. The Lord Bishop of Oxford (1), it was held, that the words in a Statute "it shall be lawful," of themselves merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do; that their natural meaning is permissive and enabling only; a somewhat similar force may be given to the word "may"; and in this view the words "may apply" in s. 265 of the Contract Act create a new jurisdiction; and if this is so, according to the usual rule, that jurisdiction must be exercised strictly in [161] accordance with the provisions of the Statute which creates it. In other words, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm is situated. Let us then see what is the jurisdiction conferred by s. 265. It is a jurisdiction, first, to wind up the business of the firm; secondly, to provide for the payments of its debts; and thirdly, to distribute the surplus according to the shares of the partners respectively.

The next question which arises is this. If, before the passing of the Contract Act, the Civil Courts other than the Courts of the District Judge had jurisdiction to deal with any one of these matters, has that jurisdiction been taken away in those cases in which the parties, who seek the assistance of the Courts, do not desire a settlement of all these matters?

In the present cases there are distinct prayers that the first and third of the above objects may be carried out by the Court; and it is argued, that inasmuch as the plaintiffs do not ask that any provision be made for the payment of debts, the case does not require the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by the Act; and there is, therefore, nothing to prevent the ordinary Courts, according to their respective limits of pecuniary jurisdiction, from entertaining and dealing with questions of accounts or other questions, arising between partners, for the settlement of which it is not necessary to carry out the whole of the three objects contemplated by the section of the Contract Act.

Now, in the first place, it is a settled principle that a separate action by one partner against another partner will not lie unless the cause of action is so distinct from the partnership accounts as not to involve their consideration. In the present cases it is clear that the plaintiffs can have no relief without an adjustment of the accounts. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the sum of money claimed by them as a share of the profits or to any sum of money as profits, cannot be known until the whole of the partnership concerns and accounts have been fully examined. Even if there are no debts to be paid, it is necessary to consider the agreement under which the partnership was entered into, the amount of capital contributed by each partner, the share of the profits to which each is entitled, the sums which he has received, the losses and expenses, and other matters, before it can be settled what any member is entitled to have from the surplus. Then suppose that there are debts, it is true that the plaintiffs have not expressly asked that the debts of the firm may be discharged; but until these debts have been paid it is impossible to say that any portion of the money which may be found to be to the credit of the firm can be handed over to the partners as profits. It may well have been the intention of the Legislature that any remedy which the members of a dissolved partnership are entitled to claim through the medium of the Courts of Justice, should be subject to this condition, that all persons having just claims upon the partnership should have those claims fairly discharged.

With respect to the claim for damages, which is a very unusual claim, until the partnership accounts have been settled, it is impossible to know whether the Rs. 13,000, alleged to have been withdrawn from the business, was an unreasonably large sum to take in the shape of profits at the time when the amounts which make up this sum were withdrawn.

After the best consideration that we can give the subject, it appears to us, that it was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting s. 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction, to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives, can have no remedy such as is asked in the present case, except by resorting to that Court, which is by the section of the Act authorized to deal fully and finally with all questions, the settlement of which is necessary in order to the complete winding up of the business of the firm.

We may observe in conclusion, that the presumption that the existing jurisdiction of a Court is not intended to be taken away unless express words have been used for that purpose usually applies only to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts. Unless the jurisdiction of a superior Court is expressly and clearly taken away, such jurisdiction will be presumed to continue. In the present case, the jurisdiction, which will be ousted if the Court of the District Judge is held to have exclusive jurisdiction in partnership matters, is the jurisdiction of Courts inferior to that of the District Judge; and, as far as we are aware, the presumption to which we have above referred, is not usually applied in the case of such inferior Court.

Having regard to all the circumstances of this case, and to the fact that the provisions of the section of the Contract Act are new, and of not unmistakably clear meaning, we think that the plaintiffs in these cases should be returned for the purpose of being presented to the District Judge. The Subordinate Judge will follow the provisions of s. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure in carrying out this order. The plaintiffs must pay the costs of the defendants in this and the Subordinate Courts.

Sale of Undertenure—Setting aside Sale—Material irregularities—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), Chap. XIX, ss. 311, 647—Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

The procedure to be followed upon the sale of an undertenure is that prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. Section 311 does not apply only to sales made under chap. xix of the Code, and the sale of an undertenure may be set aside upon any of the grounds mentioned in that section.

IN this case the appellant, a judgment-debtor, sought to set aside the sale of certain undertenures in execution of a decree, on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, and of resulting substantial injury.

[164] The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application, holding that the provisions of s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to the sale of an undertenure, and that the Rent Act does not contain any procedure for setting aside sales of this kind.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by PONTIFEX, J.—We think that the order of the Subordinate Judge in these three cases is an erroneous one. It appears that a certain undertenure was sold in execution of a decree for rent, and after this sale, an application was made to the Subordinate Judge under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting it, together with substantial injury caused by reason of such irregularity.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the provisions of s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply to the sale of an undertenure, to a sale held, as he puts it, under the provisions of ss. 59 and

He says, that s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure can only apply to sales made under chap. xix of the same Code, and that, inasmuch as the sale of the undertenure was made under the provisions of the Rent Law, it was not a sale made under the provisions of chap. xix of the Code of Civil Procedure.

APPEL-

CIVIL. Now ss. 59 and 60 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 do not contain any sale procedure. Section 59 provides that, when an undertenure is ordered to be sold, a notice of such sale shall be hung up in certain places and shall otherwise be notified in a particular manner. The mode of notification differs in some respects from the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure on the same subject. Section 60 contains instructions as to the contents of such notice, and here also there is a difference between these provisions, and the corresponding provisions of the Code of Civil [165] Procedure. These two sections or any other portions of the Rent Act of 1869 do not, however, contain any provisions as to the manner in which the sale is to be conducted, the person by whom the property is to be sold, the manner in which the biddings are to be made, the amount to be deposited by the purchaser, and all those other matters which taken together constitute the sale-procedure? The question then is, where are we to look for this sale-procedure? Before the passing of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, this sale-procedure was contained in the Beng. Council's Act VIII of 1865. That Act has not been incorporated in Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and it appears to us that there can be no doubt that the sale-procedure in the case of an undertenure must be sought for in the Code of Civil Procedure. This seems to follow from the provisions of s. 34 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, which directs that, "save as in this Act is otherwise provided, suits of every description brought for any cause of action arising under this Act, and all proceedings thereon, shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure." If there can be any possible doubt as to these words being sufficiently wide to include proceedings such as those in the case now before us, that doubt is removed by the provisions of s. 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which enacts, that "the procedure herein prescribed shall be followed in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals." It is, therefore, clear that the sale-procedure, under which an undertenure is sold, is to be sought for in the Code of Civil Procedure, and it follows with reference to the special language of s. 311, that an undertenure is really sold under chap. xix, that is, in accordance with those provisions as made applicable to rent suits by the sections above quoted. We think, therefore, that the order of the Subordinate Judge in these cases must be set aside, and that he must be directed to entertain and proceed with the petition of objection made under s. 311. Costs will abide the ultimate result of the proceedings.

Arbitration—Award—Finality of Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 318, 323, 324, 325. 8 C.L.R. 505.

A case was referred by consent to arbitration, and after having been recalled into Court was again referred. An award was made by the arbitrator and filed in Court. The defendants then objected, on the ground that they had no notice after the second reference, and that they were not heard, and that the arbitrator had otherwise misconducted himself. These objections were disallowed by the Subordinate Judge, who gave a decree in the terms of the award. This decree was upheld by the Judge, on appeal, who, however, found that the arbitrator had been guilty of misconduct.

Held, that if the decree of the first Court was not final under s. 325, Act VIII of 1859, all that the lower appellate Court could do, was to remand the case to be dealt with on its merits; but inasmuch as there had been an award and a decree thereon, which was final within the terms of that section, the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal or to express any opinion on what had passed in the first Court.

THIS was a suit to recover Rs. 1,811-4-9, the value, with interest, of the produce of 49 bigas 12 cottas of land, appropriated by the defendants from the commencement of the year 1281, to the end of the year 1283 F., corresponding with the years 1873 to 1875, after deducting the ryot's share.

The case was referred to arbitration at the request of both parties, on the 17th September, 1877, the arbitrator being selected by them, and the Subordinate Judge fixed a week as the time within which the record with the award was to be brought into Court. On the 26th September, however, the record was recalled, and on the 28th it was brought in by the arbitrator, no award having been made, and the 15th November was fixed for hearing the case. Before any order to that effect was drawn up or signed by the Subordinate Judge, a second order [167] was passed at the request of both parties, sending the record back to the arbitrator and directing him to complete his award and bring it into Court within the Dussehra vacation. The award was accordingly submitted on the 12th November, and on the 16th, the defendants filed a petition, protesting against it, on among other grounds, that the issues had been altered by the arbitrator, and neither they nor their witnesses heard. The Subordinate Judge, on the 19th December, holding that the arbitrator had power to alter or amend the issues, that the allegation as to the award being made without his having heard the defendants or their witnesses, was false, and that, consequently, there was no misconduct on his part, rejected the application, and passed judgment according to the terms of the award.

From that decree the defendants appealed to the Judge, who found, as a fact, that the arbitrator had not given notice to the defendants on

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by MITTER, J.—This is a second appeal against a decree in conformity with an award made by an arbitrator. The first Court held that the objections raised by the defendants should be dis-[168]allowed, and passed a decree in conformity with the award. The second Court expressed its opinion that the faults, which it found with the award, were not such as would allow it to disturb the judgment.

It has been strenuously contended before us, that the proceedings in the first Court were such as to make it incumbent on the lower Court to hear the appeal on the merits. This objection, we may say at once, cannot be supported. If the decision of the first Court, for any reason, was not final, the second Court could do no more than remand the case to that Court for disposal on the merits.

The case being governed by the old Code of Civil Procedure, we have to determine whether there was an award and a judgment in conformity therewith. If so, by s. 325 of that Code, the second Court had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal or to express any opinion on what had passed in the first Court.

It has been contended that there was no award at all, on the ground that the Court in which the suit was pending superseded the award and recalled the suit under s. 318, Act VIII of 1859. Apparently such an order was made on the 26th September, 1877, but it did not take effect, because, as we understand the proceedings, the case was again returned to the arbitrator at the request of the parties expressed through their pleaders on the 28th September. Moreover, this objection, if it was taken, was not one of those urged before the first Court, and although it was taken in the second Court, no opinion seems to have been given upon it.

We must, we think, take it that the case was duly left in the hands of the arbitrator, who made an award on the 12th November, 1877.

Objections were urged to the award, which, in the opinion of the Court, did not justify it in remitting it under s. 323, or in setting it aside under s. 324, Act VIII of 1859. Judgment was, therefore, given according to the award.

A number of cases have been referred to, as supporting the appellants' contention, that an appeal will lie, notwithstanding the provision of s. 325 that a judgment according to an award shall be final.

But the only cases in which an appeal has been allowed are [169] 1881

In the other two cases there were such irregularities patent on the face of the proceedings in the case, that the judgments were held not to be judgments under s. 325.

In the present case we are not able to say that there are any grounds for holding that there has not been an award and a judgment in conformity therewith. We, therefore, think that no appeal lay to the second Court, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Discussion as to form of plaint in suits for an account.

IN this case the plaintiff, who had been manager of an indigo factory at Balleakandi, in the District of Furriddpore, employed the defendant, in January, 1873, to collect certain debts due to the [170] firm, which debts had been assigned to the plaintiff by the proprietors of the indigo concern. The defendant's term of service terminated in November, 1874, and as he refused to render any accounts, the plaintiff, in 1875, brought a suit against the defendant for the delivery over of the account papers, and obtained a decree. In execution of this decree, the plaintiff obtained the account papers on the 11th of June, 1877, and after examining them, he, in July, 1877, found that the defendant had misappropriated a sum of Rs. 500, for which he instituted the present suit in the month of September, 1877. The plaintiff also prayed for a decree for whatever sum might be found due on taking the accounts, undertaking to affix the proper additional stamp on his plaint.

The defendant contended, that the suit was barred by ss. 2 and 7 of Act VIII of 1859, because the plaintiff had prayed for the same relief, and a commissioner, appointed by the Court, had found to be due to the plaintiff only Rs. 83. He also contended the suit was barred by limitation.

8 C.L.R. 357 GARTH, C. J.—We think that this appeal must be dismissed. [The

The only ground of defence which has been relied upon is, that, in the former suit, which was brought in 1275, although the decree of the Court was merely for rendering an account, a commissioner was appointed to adjust the accounts between the parties, and to ascertain what sum was due from the defendant; that the commissioner found Rs. 82-3-11 only to be due; and that the plaintiff in this suit is bound by that finding.

Now although it certainly does appear, that, in the former [171] suit, a commissioner was appointed for some purpose or other, we do not find that he had any authority to go into the account, or to ascertain what was due. The decree merely orders the defendant to render proper accounts to the plaintiff; and it has not been proved how or why the commissioner was appointed, nor that the report of the commissioner was in any way confirmed by the Court.

It was, therefore, competent for the plaintiff, after the accounts had been filed by the defendant, and adjusted by the commissioner, either to accept the money found by the commissioner to be due to him, or to sue the defendant in a fresh suit for the sums which he now claims.

We have been referred to Luchmeeput Singh Bahadur v. Nund Coomar Goopto (1), a case decided by Kemp and Ainslie, JJ., in which those learned Judges considered, that in that suit the lower Courts did not do their duty by merely ordering that accounts should be rendered; that the proper order was that the accounts should be examined and adjusted; and that it should be ascertained what was due from the defendant to the plaintiff; and as this had not been done, the case was remanded.

It may be that the nature of the suit perfectly justified the learned Judges in making the remand; but in the generality of suits in the mofussil, the plaint merely prays for an account. I remember a case in this Court (though I cannot say whether it was reported) in which Markby, J., explained very clearly the usual difference in the procedure between suits for an account brought on the Original Side of this Court, and similar suits brought in the mofussil.

On the Original Side the prayer of the plaint is not only for an account, but to have the account adjusted, and the balance ordered to be paid to the party entitled to it. The case is referred to the Registrar for this purpose; and after the account has been taken and the balance ascertained by the Registrar, the case comes again before the Court, and a final decree is made. Both parties have a full opportunity, if they please, of going into evidence before the Registrar, and afterwards objecting to [172] the Registrar's findings; and the whole matter is thus adjusted finally in one suit.

In the mofussil, however, this is generally done by means of two suits. The first is brought to compel the rendering of an account, and then, when the account has been rendered, and the plaintiff has had an opportunity of examining it and testing its correctness, he may sue in a second suit for the amount which he considers to be now due.

Of course it is far more convenient, and a saving of time and expense, to have the whole matter settled in one suit instead of two; but the reason why two suits are generally brought in the mofussil is, because the Courts there have no officer like the Registrar to whom the account can be referred for adjustment.

In this particular case the plaintiff was of course unwilling to be bound by any account furnished by the defendant, considering the dishonest manner in which the latter had dealt with him. His claim in this suit embraces several sums which were not entered in the account rendered by the defendant, and we see no reason for saying that the plaintiff's claim is barred by anything that occurred in the former suit.

Another point raised here, (I can scarcely say that it has been argued), is, that the defendant is wrongly found to be indebted to the plaintiff in a sum of Rs. 333-7-9, which was said to be due to the plaintiff on certain decrees. It does not very clearly appear how or why this sum is found due from the defendant; but we rather gather that the defendant must have received that sum, and did not pay it over. This is quite immaterial, however, for the purpose of the suit, because the plaintiff is found to be entitled to Rs. 837 altogether, and the decree is only for 500 rupees; so that the sum due for rents received is amply sufficient to support the decree, quite irrespective of the Rs. 333-7-9 said to be due as the amount of the decrees.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The same patnidar afterwards mortgaged the patni talook to the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree on their mortgage on the 28th September, 1874. The patni was sold for its own arrears on the 17th November, 1876; and after payment of rent and all expenses, there remained a surplus in the hands of the Collector, which was attached by the plaintiffs in execution of their decree on the 9th of November, 1876. On the 12th January, 1877, the defendants instituted a suit against the patnidar, under cl. 5, s. 17, Reg. THIS suit was brought by the Land Mortgage Bank against the defendants to establish their right to a sum of Rs. 865-5-9, which had been obtained by the defendants, Nos. 1 and 2, under these circumstances.

The patnidar of a talook had granted a durpatni of it to the defendant No. 1 on the 10th of February, 1869.

The same patnidar then mortgaged to the Land Mortgage Bank this talook and other properties on the 8th of March, 1872, for a sum of Rs. 45,000. On the 28th September, 1874, the Bank obtained a decree for the sum due to them upon this mortgage, and declaring their rights under it.

[174] The patnidar having then made default in payment of his rent, the talook was put up and sold by auction for its own arrears on the 17th of November, 1876; and after paying the rent and all expenses, there remained a surplus of the sale-proceeds in the hands of the Collector of Rs. 2,138-1-5.

By means of this sale the durpatnidar, the defendant No. 1, lost his durpatni; and, therefore, on the 12th of January, 1877, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the latter being the wife of the defendant No. 1) brought a suit against the patnidar (under the provisions of cl. 5 of s. 17 of Reg. VIII of 1819) to recover compensation for the loss of the durpatni, and to have the amount of the compensation paid to them out of the surplus proceeds, it being alleged that the durpatni was purchased with the money of the defendant No. 2.

In this suit the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 obtained a decree for the sum of Rs. 865-5-9, by way of compensation, and the Munsif ordered that sum to be paid to them out of the surplus proceeds.

Meanwhile, immediately after the sale of the patni, the Land Mortgage Bank, on the 9th of December, 1876, placed an attachment upon the sum of Rs. 2,133-1-5, the surplus proceeds; but the Collector, notwithstanding this attachment, allowed the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to obtain the Rs. 865-5-9 out of the surplus proceeds, in accordance with the Munsif's order.

This suit was then brought, on the 28th of March, 1878, by the Bank, for the purpose of recovering the Rs. 865-5-9 from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; and they contended, that as their attachment was prior to the suit of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, they were entitled to the whole surplus proceeds to the exclusion of the defendants' claim.

The view of the Subordinate Judge was, that the two defendants had a right to bring their suit for the sum which they obtained, and that it was properly paid over to them out of the surplus proceeds. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The District Judge took a different view. He considered that the case came within the provisions of s. 17 of the Regulation; but he thought that the plaintiffs had an equal right with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the surplus proceeds, as being assignees [175] of a valuable interest in the talook; but that as the sum was not sufficient to satisfy both, he decided that the surplus proceeds ought to be divided between the parties rateably in proportion to the value of their respective interests in it. Putting, therefore, the value of the plaintiffs' interest at Rs. 2,000 and that of the defendants at Rs. 865-5-9, he held that the defendants were entitled to Rs. 550 out of the surplus, and the plaintiffs to the residue. He therefore gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 315, and ordered each of the parties to pay their own costs.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—We think that the District Judge has taken an erroneous view of this case. [His Lordship then stated the facts as above, and continued.]

Both parties complain of this decision, the plaintiffs (by way of appeal), on the ground, that the defendants were not entitled to any part of the surplus proceeds; and the defendants (by way of cross objection) on the ground, that they are entitled to the whole of the Rs. 865-5-9, and that the Court below was wrong in directing them to restore Rs. 315 to the plaintiffs.

It is strange that, during the whole of the argument in this Court, we have been allowed to remain under a wrong impression as to a point upon which, as it seems to us, the whole case turns. We were led to suppose, that the suit brought by the defendants, in which they recovered the Rs. 865-5-9, was not brought within two months from the time of the sale of the patni; and if that had been so, we think that the Munsif would have had no power to order that sum to be paid out of the surplus proceeds.

The words of cl. 5 of s. 17 are: "It shall be competent to any one conceiving himself to possess such an interest, &c., to bring forward his claim to the price he may have paid for the same, or for a just compensation for the loss sustained by him in consequence of the sale, by instituting a regular suit at any time within two months from the date of sale."

If, therefore, the suit of the defendants had not been brought within two months from the date of sale, the Munsif, although he might have given them a decree enforceable in the ordinary way, could not have decreed the amount out of the surplus proceeds.

It now turns out, however, that the suit was brought duly within the two months, and that, therefore, the Munsif's decree was quite regular.

That being so, the only question is, whether the plaintiffs, who had placed an attachment upon the surplus proceeds immediately after the sale, are entitled to recover from the defendants the whole or any part of the sum which has been awarded them out of those surplus proceeds by the Munsif.

It has been suggested to us, that although the plaintiffs did not bring any suit under cl. 5 of s. 17, yet they must be considered as having made a claim to the surplus proceeds by placing an attachment upon them. But that is a course, which appears to us not to be warranted by cl. 5. The only claim which can be made under cl. 5 is by a regular suit, and the decree which is to be made in that suit is of a special nature, enforceable only as against the sale-proceeds; and if the plaintiffs in this suit had intended to proceed against those proceeds under cl. 5, they could only have done so by instituting a regular suit.

This they have not done; and as the defendants have taken the proper course, and have obtained a judgment, we think that they have secured

Practice—Failure to procure sufficient Evidence—Adjournment—Costs.

A plaintiff failed in an ex parte suit to bring forward sufficient evidence to entitle him to a decree, and asked for an adjournment in order to obtain further evidence; the Court granted an adjournment on the terms that the plaintiff should bear the whole costs of the hearing.

THIS was an ex parte action brought for work and labor done, in which the plaintiffs failed to give sufficient proof as to certain work done to a steam-boiler.

Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the plaintiffs.—After partly proving his case, and on finding that the evidence given was not sufficient to entitle him to a decree, asked the Court for an adjournment in order to procure the attendance of other witnesses, he agreeing to bear the costs of the day.

ORDER.

WILSON, J.—Such adjournments are most inconvenient, and would not be listened to for a moment in England. I will grant an adjournment for a fortnight, on condition that the plaintiffs bear the whole costs of the hearing.

NILCOMUL LAHURI (Defendant) v. JOTENDRO MOHUN
LAHURI (Plaintiff).^{*} [25th March, 1881.]

Adoption—Fraud—Adopted Son claiming Share in Estates already vested in another before the Date of the Adoption.

Shortly before his death in 1862, A, by his will, gave his widow power to adopt a son. In consequence of fraud on the part of B, the son of a brother of A, in suppressing this will and setting up another, the will was not proved until 1874, when the widow exercised the power. C, the widow of another brother, had died in 1867, and B had succeeded to her estate. The adopted son now sued by his mother to recover a half share in C's estate, alleging that his adoptive mother, in consequence of the fraudulent act of B in suppressing the will under which the power of adoption was given, and in setting up a false one, was unable to exercise the power of adoption before the death of C, and that thus he had been deprived of the opportunity of succeeding to C's estate.

Held, that although B had committed fraud in suppressing the will and setting up a false one, and had so placed obstacles in the way of the adoptive mother of the plaintiff taking a son in adoption earlier, yet that, as the plaintiff was not in existence at the time the fraud was committed, such fraud was too remote so far as it affected him, and that the Court as a Court of Equity could not disturb the estate which had already vested in B.

The right to succession is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property, and cannot, under any circumstances, remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir not conceived at the time of the owner's death.

Keshub Chunder Ghose v. Bishnu Pershad Bose (1) and Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj (2) followed.

THIS was a suit brought by one Bhbonessury Dabia, as adoptive mother and guardian (leave to bring the suit having been granted her by the Court) of her adopted son, Jotendro [179] Mohun Lahuri, to recover an eight-anna share in one Chandmoni's husband's estate to which the defendant had succeeded.

The following is the genealogical tree of the family:—

The plaintiff, Jotendro Mohun, stated, that Shibnath, by his will, dated 22nd May, 1862, gave to Bhbonessury power to adopt, and that, after Shibnath's death, Nilcomul managed Bhbonessury's estate; that, during such management, he obtained Shibnath's will, suppressed it, and set up another, which contained no such power of adoption; that a suit had been brought on the second will, but the Privy Council, in March, 1874, eventually held, that the will containing the power of adoption was the genuine one; that, in 1865 and 1866, Shibnath's two sons died; that, since the latter date, Bhbonessury had repeatedly endeavoured to adopt a son, but had always been presented, because she was unable to produce the original will giving her power to adopt, and that although she possessed copies of the will, people always refused to give their sons in adoption without the production of the original, more especially pending the litigation which was being carried on concerning the two wills; that, in 1867, Chandmoni, the widow of Ram Mohun, died, and Nilcomul, the son of Kally Mohun, succeeded to Chandmoni's estate; that, subsequently in January 1874, Bhbonessury adopted him (Jotendro Mohun, the plaintiff, an infant of the age of five years at the time), and on the 29th September 1877, his adoptive mother brought this present suit on his behalf, claiming a half share with the defendant in Chandmoni's husband's estate, on the ground that the defendant Nilcomul, had, by suppressing Shibnath's will containing the power of adoption, fraudulently prevented Bhubonessury from adopting a son, who would, if the adoption had been made in time, have succeeded to a half share in the estate of Chandmoni's husband; and that, [180] notwithstanding the fact that he had been adopted subsequently to the defendant's succession, he was entitled to a share in Chandmoni's husband's estate. The defendant contended that the suit was barred, it not having been brought within three years either from the time the alleged fraud became known, or from the time of the adoption; that the estate once having vested in him could not be divested by reason of the subsequent adoption; that he had not fraudulently prevented the widow from adopting; that he had committed no fraud, inasmuch as Chandmoni was alive at the time when fraud was alleged.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred, that the defendant had through fraud prevented the adoption from taking place during the lifetime of Chandmoni, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to recover.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. M. Ghose and Baboo Isen Chunder Chuckerbutty), for the appellant.—As regards limitation.—Supposing the decision of the Privy Council in 1874 were taken to be the starting point of limitation, the suit is barred, as only three years is allowed from the time when the fraud is discovered. The widow does not say, it does not matter when I adopted, I have still a right to adopt, but says, the original will was suppressed, and that she was prevented through the defendant's fraud from adopting before, and that, in consequence of that fraud, he is estopped from disputing the adoption. As to whether the estate could divest.—An adoption cannot operate to open out the estate after it has once vested in any person. Kally Prosonno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (1). This case is supported by Mayne, 2nd ed., s. 176, p. 166.

Mr. M. Ghose on the same side.—An estate once vested cannot be divested, see Gobind Chundra Sarma Mazoomdar v. Anand Mohan Sarma Mazoomdar (2), and Moniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani (3). The plaintiff, in order to say that he has a right of suit because he was not adopted earlier through the [181] defendant's fraud, must, inasmuch as an adopted son is in the same position as a natural son, go so far as to say that a natural son would have a right of suit against a person who had fraudulently prevented his (the plaintiff's) father and mother from living together for a long period, and so prevented the plaintiff from being born during the time of such separation, at which time the person, so fraudulently acting, had succeeded to an estate to which, had the plaintiff been born, he would have been entitled to succeed. Such a suit has never been attempted, and would not lie, the fraud alleged being too remote. The adoption in this case took place six years after Chandmoni's death. Fraud is not a sufficient reason for a suit to recover property which has already vested in somebody else. On whom does the plaintiff allege the fraud to have been practised, if it is against himself, he was not alive at the time, and no fraud can be perpetrated against a person not in existence. The rule of equity that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong, does not extend to cases of this kind. The lower Court has given a decree to the plaintiff for half of the property claimed, at all events he can only claim a fourth.

(3) 5 C. 776.

The defendant cannot be considered to have held as trustee for the plaintiff, and the suit is therefore barred—Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (1). 1881 MARCH 25.

Mr. H. Bell (with him Mr. Doss, Baboo Sreenath Doss, and Baboo Bungshee Dhur Sen) for the respondent.—There can be no question of limitation in this case. The plaintiff claims as the adopted son of Shibnath, to succeed to a moiety of the estate of his uncle Ram Mohun. Ram Mohun's widow died on the 15th June, 1867, and the plaintiff has twelve years to sue in from that date. The main fact of the defendant having committed a fraud cannot reduce the period of limitation to three years—Chunder Nath Chowdhry v. Tirthanund Thakoor (2). APPEL-LATE CIVIL. 7 C. 178= 8 C.L.R. 401.

On the merits there are two main points for consideration :—First.—Is the plaintiff, as the adopted son of Shibnath, entitled to a share of Ram Mohun's estate, his adoption having taken place after the death of Chandmoni, the widow of Ram Mohun, [182] and after the defendant had succeeded to the inheritance? Secondly.—Can the judgment of the lower Court be supported on the ground of the defendant's fraud? Upon the first point it is contended that we are concluded by the case of Kally Prosonno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (3). This case will be found to rest entirely on previous decisions, none of which, when examined, will be found to support the proposition there broadly laid down, that "an estate once vested cannot be divested." The Privy Council case of Sri Raghunada v. Sri Brozo Kishore (4), which was referred to in the decision, is directly to the contrary. In that case an undivided brother succeeded to an impartible zemindari to the exclusion of the widow of the last owner, but after some two years, the widow adopted a son, and the brother's estate was divested. This case, therefore, so far from supporting the decision in Kally Prosonno's case (3), is distinctly opposed to it. The other cases referred to are, Bamundoss Mookerjee v. Mussanutt Tarinee (5), which merely decides that a widow with a power of adoption can sue in her own name to recover property belonging to the estate of her late husband. The next case—Dukhina Dossee v. Rash Behari Mojoondar (6)—is so obscurely reported, that it is impossible to say what the facts were. Gobind Chandra Sarma v. Anand Mohan Sarma (7) merely decides that, in litigation, a widow represents the estate. The Full Bench case of Kali Das Das v. Krishna Chundra Das (8) turned upon the doctrine of Hindu law with regard to persons excluded from inheritance. The case of Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj (9) merely decided that an adopted son was in no better position than a natural son, and as a natural son could not in that case have succeeded as heir, so neither could an adopted son. See remarks on this case in Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 170.—Kakmabai v. Radhabai (10). The case of Gobindo Nath Roy v. Ram Kanay Chowdhry (11) (alluded to in [183] I. L. R., 2 Cal., 307) stands alone, and is questioned in Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 178, and is opposed to the case of Bamundoss Mookerjee v. M. S. Tarinee (5), and was not followed in the recent case of Prosononath Roy Chowdhry v. Afzolonnessa Begum (12). The right of a preferential heir to divest an estate which had already vested was never questioned until recent years. When a preferential heir came into existence, he was allowed as of right his inheritance. Take the case of a sister. A sister is MARCH 25. not an heir by Hindu law, but a sister's son is an heir; and there is of necessity a suspension of the inheritance until his birth.—Macnaughten's Hindu Law, Vol. II, p. 98, Prec. xiv., Inheritance; Mussamut Solukhna v. Ram Dolal Pande (1), Karuna Mai v. Jai Chandra Ghose (2), and Lakhi Priya v. Bhairab Chandra Chaudhuri (3). The case of a posthumous or of an adopted son is far stronger. Where the father's inheritance has been distributed among the heirs, if a posthumous son is born, a redistribution has to be made: Dayabhaga, Chap. I, sec. 45; Dayakrama Sangraha, VI, 21—24. The whole question was most fully considered by the late Supreme Court in Gourbullub v. Juggernath Pershad Mitter (4). In that case A was adopted by the widow of B, who had predeceased his father C. On the death of C, C's estate passed to his sister's son. Some two years after C's death, A was adopted, and it was held that he was entitled to the estate of C to the exclusion of the nephews who had already succeeded. In Shamchunder v. Rooderchunder (5), A left two widows, one of whom adopted a son B, and died after the death of the adopted son B. The estate passed to A's brother's sons; when the second widow adopted C, and it was held that C was entitled to succeed to his brother B's estate to the exclusion of A's nephews. This, therefore, is an instance of an estate being divested in favour of a collateral.

With regard to the question of fraud, it was contended that there was no fraud practised on the present adopted son, [184] that, on the contrary, if there had been no fraud, some one else would have been adopted; and therefore, if there was fraud, the present adopted son has been the gainer by it. But the fraud was against Shibnath's heir. It is not necessary that it should have been against any particular person. Suppose that a child had been ready for the adoption before Chandmoni's death, and the defendant, knowing that she could not survive, had forcibly carried off the son to be adopted, and kept him in confinement till Chandmoni's death,—it cannot be contended that such son when adopted would not have been entitled to his share in his uncle's estate; or suppose that, instead of carrying off the boy, he had hired assassins to kill him,—can it be contended that the next adopted son would not be entitled to all the rights to which the first boy would have succeeded, if his adoption had not been fraudulently frustrated? So far, therefore, as the defendant is concerned, the adoption must be considered to have taken place at the time the defendant prevented it.—Story's Equity Jurisprudence, p. 256, Phillimore on Jurisprudence, p. 226; Mestier v. Gillespie (6), Luttrell v. Lord Waltham (7) cited, Huguenin v. Baseley (8), Middleton v. Middleton (9), Burkley v. Wilford (10), Segrave v. Kriwan (11); where the fraud was not against any particular person, but against the next-of-kin. With regard to the share to which an adopted son is entitled, Mayne's Hindu Law, ss. 148 and 49 and Tara Mohun Bhattacharjee v. Kirpa Moyee Debia (12) were referred to.

Mr. M. Ghose in reply:—The case of Kally Prosonno Ghose is not opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Sri Raghunada v. Sri Brozo Kishoro (13). No doubt, as pointed out by Mr. Mayne (Note c, art. 170, Hindu Law), Mr. Justice Mitter was in error in supposing that, in the case before the Privy Council, the property was not joint family property; but that error does not in any way affect the [185] soundness of his decision. We do not go the length of saying that in no case will a subsequent adoption divest an estate once vested, for it is a well-known rule of Hindu law that the widow herself divests her own estate by adopting a son. But that is an exception, and persons who are in the position of the widow, by operation of the Hindu law, will also come within the exception. The Madras case before the Privy Council referred to an impartible zemindari, and the widow could not possibly have succeeded. Hence the adoption by the widow had the effect of divesting an estate which, under the Bengal school, the widow would ordinarily have taken. It was also a case of lineal succession. This probably accounts for the question not having been raised in the Privy Council case. Mr. Mayne himself, while pointing out the error above-mentioned, approves of the principle laid down in Kally Prosonno Ghose's case (1). The distinction between lineal and collateral successions in the case of an adopted son is a distinction founded upon reason and Hindu law. The case in 7 Moore decides in the negative the question as to whether a woman, having power to adopt, is in the position of a woman enccinte. Keshub Chunder Ghose v. Bishnu Pershad Bose (2) overrules all the cases in the Select Reports cited by the respondents. The same principle has been laid down in the case of Rash Beharee Roy v. Nimaye Churn (3). The case further says, that Sumboo Chunder Roy v. Gunga Churn Sein (4) has been overruled, and further shows that a Hindu widow is not a trustee for unborn children. The case of Gourbullub v. Juggernath Pershad Mitter (5) was a case of lineal and not collateral succession; the question of vesting and divesting was not touched upon. The defendants there were sister's sons, and therefore, we may take the principle, that sister's sons should have preference to grandsons, to be overruled by the latter cases; the case was not even opposed by the sister's sons, and it comes within the exception quoted by Mayne in art. 176. The case of Dukhina Dossee v. Rash Beharee Mojomdar (6) [186] directly decides the question whether succession could be suspended until the adoption. The Judges there do not mean that a widow loses all right to property after twelve years, but that if a widow is dispossessed and chooses to adopt after twelve years have passed, her power to adopt is lost. I say that if the widow is in possession, she can adopt at any time during possession. Kali Das Das v. Krishna Chundra Das (7) supports my argument, that a widow having a power to adopt does not hold as trustee for the son who might be adopted. The case of Gobindonath Roy v. Ram Kunay Chowdhry (8), alluded to in I.L.R., 2 Calc., 307, was referred to as an authority, that a Hindu widow succeeds, and not as trustee for anybody. The allegation of fraud has no bearing on the case; the fraud alleged is against Shibnath's estate in the lifetime of Chandmoni. Fraud must be committed against a person and not an estate, and the person must be in existence at the time; but even allowing it to be possible to commit fraud against an estate, Shibnath had no estate during the lifetime of Chandmoni. The distinction between the English cases and the present is, that (i) those cases refer to fraud against individuals in existence, (ii) that such individuals were deceived by the fraud, and with the immediate view of obtaining the object required, the fraud must lead to a deception; but here the widow knew she had power to adopt, therefore it could not be fraud as against her. Before it can be said that we cannot take advantage of our own wrong, it must be shown, that this was a fraud against Chandmoni, and that Chandmoni was prevented from doing a particular act by our fraud, which otherwise she would have done. It cannot be a fraud against the widow, as the widow's estate remained intact; and it could not be a fraud against the adopted son, as he was not at the time in existence. Even if there was fraud, it is too remote.

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—We understand the real plaintiff in this suit to be a minor, one Jotendro Mohun Lahuri, represented by [187] his mother and guardian, Bhubonessury Dabia—otherwise the suit would not lie. The plaintiff lays claim to the share of the estate left by Chandmoni Dabia, widow of Ram Mohan Lahuri, the uterine brother of his adoptive father, the late Shibnath Lahuri.

Chandmoni Dabia died on the 2nd Assar 1274, which corresponds with the 15th June 1867. The plaintiff was adopted on the 10th Magh 1280, which corresponds with 27th January 1874, by Bhubonessury Dabia, under permission granted to her under the will of her late husband; and though the defendant was the sole heir, at the time of her death, to the entire estate left by Chandmoni Dabia, his succession to one-half thereof is contested by the plaintiff in this suit on the ground, that his adoptive mother was unable, in consequence of the fraudulent acts of the defendant, to exercise, before the death of Chandmoni Dabia, the power of adoption which was granted to her by her husband.

The Subordinate Judge of the Court below has given the plaintiff a decree. In his judgment he recites certain facts, which he says are "sufficient in themselves to bring home to the conviction of the Court that plaintiff exerted all her available means to adopt a child while Chandmoni was living, but that the intrigues played by the defendant stood in the way and prevented the adoption taking place till after the death of Chandmoni, in Magh 1280, when she succeeded in adopting the minor Jotendro Mohun." He holds, that the principles of equity should interfere in such a case to deprive the wrong-doer of the rights which he has acquired by the wrongful acts committed by him, and that the effect of the fraud perpetrated by the defendant entitles the plaintiff in equity to obtain the relief which he seeks. Against this decision the defendant appeals. He contends, first, that no such act of fraud on his part has been established in evidence as goes to show that Bhubonessury Dabia was prevented from adopting any boy, much less the present plaintiff, prior to the death of Chandmoni Dabia; and secondly, that even if it be held that he committed a fraud on Bhubonessury Dabia in suppressing the will of her husband, that fraud is too remote [188] to enable the Court to divest in favour of the plaintiff an estate which has already vested for a long time past in him, the natural heir.

Before entering into the question of fraud, it is necessary to notice an argument which has been much insisted on by the respondent's counsel, to the effect that fraud or no fraud, the plaintiff, as adopted son of Shibnath Lahuri, is entitled to his share of the family estate left by Chandmoni Dabia; in other words, the plaintiff, as heir of Shibnath Lahuri, is entitled to succeed both lineally and collaterally to any estate to which Shibnath Lahuri, if alive, could lay claim. This argument has been noticed by the lower Court, and overruled by it on the authority of the case of Kally Prosonno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (1), in which it was decided that a subsequent adoption, after the succession has opened out, cannot confer on the adopted son the right to succeed collaterally and to divest the person in whom the property has already vested as heir to the deceased. Several cases have been cited to us as authority to the contrary, but no single instance has been adduced in which, in a case of collateral succession, an estate once vested has been divested by reason of a person being brought into existence subsequently, who, if he had been in existence at the time when the succession opened out, would have been a preferable heir. The general rule, that the right to succession is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property, and cannot, under any circumstances, remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir not conceived at the time of the owner's death, was declared by the late Sudder Dewani Adawlut in the case of Keshub Chunder Ghose v. Bishnu Pershad Bose (2), and since that date this ruling has been universally followed. The Privy Council recognize it in the case of Bhoobun Moyee Dabia v. Ram Kishore Acharj (3), and declare the ordinary rule to be, that in no case can the estate of the heir of a deceased person vested in possession be defeated and divested in favour of a subsequently adopted son, unless the [189] adoption is effected by the direct agency of the former heir with his or her express consent. The cases of Gourbullab v. Juggernath Pershad Mitter (4) and Sri Raghunada v. Sri Brozo Kishoro (5) cannot be said to be in opposition to this rule. In the one case a grandson, and in the other case a son, took by adoption lineally the estate of the grandfather and of the father, as against a nephew and a half-brother. These cases are no authority for holding, that if succession to an estate collaterally had opened out before the adoption, either the nephew or the half-brother could have been divested in favour of the subsequently adopted grandson or son. The only ground, therefore, on which, it seems to us the plaintiff can lay claim to the property in suit, is by asking the Court as a Court of Equity to place him as heir of Shibnath Lahuri in the position which, but for the fraud of the defendant, he would have obtained. That a fraud was committed by the defendant on Bhubonessury Dabia in suppressing the will of Shibnath Lahuri and setting up a false will and thereby putting obstacles in the way of her taking a son in adoption, cannot, we think, be doubted. On this head we are disposed to agree with the finding of the lower Court. The only question is whether the present plaintiff, standing as he does in the position of heir to Shibnath Lahuri, is entitled to say that the defendant is estopped by his fraud from relying on the adoption of the plaintiff being of a date subsequent to the death of Chandmoni Dabia. Various cases, such as Luttrell v. Lord Waltham (6), Middleton v. Middleton (7), Segrave v. Kirwan (8), Burkley v. Wilford (9), have been cited to us as authority in support of the proposition that Courts of Equity will, on proof of fraud, divest property once vested in favour of the rightful heir. But none of these seems to us to meet a case like the present, where, as we judge from the evidence, the heir, that is the present plaintiff, was not even in existence when the fraud was [190] committed by the defendant. So far as the plaintiff himself is concerned, it may be said, that, but for the opposition made by the defendant to the will of Shibnath, which his widow set up, the present plaintiff would never have inherited his estate at all. If the evidence is to be believed, Bhbonessury Dabia was foiled by this opposition of the defendant from adopting in the interval between the death of her last surviving son, and the death of Chandmoni, some boy other than the plaintiff. It is also apparent that the fraud of the defendant was not concealed in any way from Bhbonessury Dabia; she was from the first, that is from the time of the death of her husband, aware of the existence of the will in her favour, which empowered her to adopt a son, and it may, with some justice, be said, that between Srabun 1273, or July 1866, the date of the death of Kally Prosonno Lahuri, her last surviving son; and Assar 1274, or June 1867, the date of the death of Chandmoni, Bhbonessury had ample opportunity to adopt a son; and that the mere circumstance of persons, who were applied to, being unwilling to give their sons in adoption by reason of the counter-will set up by the defendant, is not a sufficient ground for holding that Bhbonessury Dabia could not adopt a son. The difficulties which stood in her way were no more than natural difficulties, such as might be encountered by any one whose right to adopt was disputed bona fide, and therefore, the defendant, as sole heir of Chandmoni at the time of her death, became legally vested in her estate. It seems to us, therefore, that the fraud, committed by the defendant, so far as it affects the plaintiff, is of too remote a character for this Court, as a Court of Equity, to disturb the estate which naturally vested in the defendant as sole heir of Chandmoni at the time of her death.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff, Jotendro Mohun Lahuri, with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

SIBBOSOONDERY DABIA v. BUSROOMUTTY DABIA AND OTHERS.
[3rd May, 1881.]

Hindu Law—Partition—Grandchildren—Right of Grandmother to Share.

In a suit for partition among the members of a joint Hindu family consisting of the heirs in different degrees of five brothers, a decree for partition according to certain proportions was made, subject, so far as the decree affected property derived through the eldest brother, to maintenance for his widow A. Among other parties to the suit were B, the grand-daughter by the eldest son of A, and C, her second son. C died in 1880, leaving a widow D and four infant sons.

A, who was not party to the partition suit, now sued B and D and the infant sons of C for a declaration that she, as such widow and mother, was entitled to a share in the partitioned properties equal to those of her grand-daughter B, and her grandsons, the infant sons of C.

Held, that such a suit would lie, it not being a suit for partition exclusively among grandsons, and that A was entitled to an equal share with her grand-daughter and grandsons in the properties which, under the partition decree, had been allotted to the representatives of her husband, and to a life-interest in the income of the property remaining unpartitioned.

[Appr., 8 C. 649 (652); R., 31 C. 1065 (1076) = 8 C.W.N. 763.]

THIS was a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to share in the property of her deceased husband, which had been partitioned in a suit to which she was not a party.

The plaintiff stated that she was the sole widow of one Cowar Suttia Prosunno Ghosal, who died on the 15th July 1851, intestate, leaving him surviving the plaintiff, and two sons by her, Suttia Runjun Ghosal and Suttia Krishna Ghosal, both of whom had since died.

At the time of his death, Cowar Suttia Prosunno Ghosal was entitled to a fifth share in certain properties. His brothers, Suttia Churn Ghosal and Suttia Shurn Ghosal, his nephew Suttia Jeebun Ghosal, and his sister-in-law Sreemutty Tarrasoondery Dabia, the widow of a brother Suttia Bhuckto Ghosal, were each entitled to a fifth share in these properties. [192] Suttia Churn Ghosal died on the 21st January 1855, intestate, leaving a widow, Rani Bissomoyee Dabia, and two sons by her, Suttia Nundo Ghosal and Suttia Suttia Ghosal, his heirs and representatives.

The plaintiff's eldest son, Suttia Runjun Ghosal, died intestate, on the 15th of November 1857, without male issue, but leaving a widow, Sreemutty Soorosoondery Dabia, who subsequently gave birth to a daughter, Sreemutty Busroomutty Dabia, and died shortly afterwards. Suttia Jeebun Ghosal died on the 29th July 1856, intestate, and without issue, leaving a widow Sreemutty Surbomungola Dabia, his sole heiress. Suttia Churn Ghosal died on the 16th August 1869, intestate, without issue, leaving his nephews Suttia Nundo Ghosal, Suttia Suttia Ghosal, and Suttia Krishna Ghosal his heirs and representatives.

In 1871, Suttia Suttia Ghosal instituted a suit for partition against Suttia Nundo Ghosal, Suttia Krishna Ghosal, Sreemutty Surbomungola Dabia, Sreemutty Tarrasoondery Dabia, and Sreemutty Busroomutty Dabia, and from that time the family separated in food. In 1872 a decree for partition was made, and it was (among other things) declared, that Suttia Krishna Ghosal was (subject to the right of the present plaintiff as the widow of Suttia Prosunno Ghosal, to maintenance out of such portion of his share as was derived from Suttia Prosunno Ghosal) entitled to five equal thirtieth parts or shares of the property to be partitioned, and that Sreemutty Busroomutty Dabia, as the only daughter and sole heiress of Suttia Runjun Ghosal, was (subject to the rights of the present plaintiff as such widow to maintenance out of such portion of the share of Sreemutty Busroomutty Dabia as was derived from Suttia Prosunno Ghosal) entitled to three equal thirtieth parts or shares. The decree directed a partition to be made, subject to the rights of the present plaintiff to maintenance, and a Receiver was appointed. The plaintiff's younger son, Suttia Krishna Ghosal, died on the 20th August 1880, intestate, leaving him surviving his widow, Sreemutty Soudamini Dabia, and four infant sons, Suttia Bhoosun Ghosal, Suttiesur Ghosal, Suttia Nundo Ghosal, and Suttiajeet Ghosal. The plaintiff now instituted a suit against Sreemutty Busroomutty Dabia, and [193] the infant sons of Suttia Krishna Ghosal, and Sreemutty Soudamini Dabia, and the Receiver, praying, that it might be declared that, upon the events which had happened, the plaintiff, as such widow and mother, was entitled to a share equal to that which was allotted to the infant defendants, and a moiety of that property which was allotted to Busroomutty, and also a one-fifth share in the properties which remained unpartitioned, for partition; and that the Receiver might be restrained from parting with the property in his hands.

Bussoomutty, in her written statement, contended, that the plaintiff was not entitled to participate in the property left by her father and uncle; that the plaintiff had notice of the partition suit, and had been maintained as therein was provided; that not having intervened and having accepted maintenance, she was precluded from questioning the validity of the decree, or from reopening the same. Soudaminee and the Receiver also put in written statements.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with whom was Mr. Branson), for the plaintiff, cited the case of Bilaso v. Dina Nath (1) and the unreported case of Sreemutty Dossee v. Kumall Deb (2) in support of the claims put forward by his client.

Mr. Sale (with whom was Mr. Jackson), for the defendant Bussoomutty, contended, that the frame of the suit was improper. It was a suit wherein it was sought by an outsider to vary a decree made in a former suit to which she was not a party. The proper remedy was, either to be made a party in the original suit, or to wait until the partition proceedings already directed had been fully carried out, and then to bring separate suits against the parties against whom she claimed partition. Whatever right a widow might have to partition her husband's estate, so long as it remained joint and undivided, there was nothing to show that the right to partition remained when that estate had been divided and the shares allotted separately to the sons. It is submitted that the widow's right to maintenance alone remains. But in this case a grandmother claims partition as [194] against her grandchildren, and it is submitted that it is concluded by authority that she has no such right. See Puddum Mookee Dossee v. Rayee Monee Dossee (3); same case considered on review (4); Mayne's Hindu Law, 417, 2nd edition. The grandmother only takes a grandchild's share.

Mr. Stokoe and Mr. Henderson for Soudaminee and the infants.

Mr. J. G. Apcar for the Receiver, contended, that he was not a necessary party, and cited Hem Chunder Chunder v. Prankristo Chunder (5).

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This is a suit by a widow to enforce her claim to a share in certain properties of her deceased husband, which are being partitioned between her husband's descendants. The husband was one of five brothers, and those five brothers and their descendants continued to live jointly till the partition in question; he died leaving a widow (the plaintiff) and two sons. The first son was Suttia Runjun, who died before the partition decree, leaving his daughter Bussoomutty (the first defendant) his only daughter and heiress. The second son, Suttia Krishna, was alive at the date of the passing of the partition decree; he has since died, leaving four sons, the infant defendants, his heirs, Suttia Bhoosun, Suttessur, Suttia Nundo and Suttiajeet. The partition suit was instituted some years ago for the partition of the whole family property, and the decree in that suit was made on the 28th November, 1872. That decree gave Suttia Krishna, the son of Suttia Prosunno, five-thirtieths, and Bussoomutty Dabia, three-thirtieths, of the family property in their character as heirs to Suttia Prosunno. Suttia Krishna also took a share in some property of another member of the family, but that is not in question in this suit. The partition decree having been made, the partition was proceeded with; but by a certain order made in the suit, a particular portion of the immoveable property was directed to remain unpartitioned, and these properties are now in the hands of the Receiver. Under [195] these circumstances, the plaintiff claims a share in the partitioned property equal to that which was allotted to the infant defendants, and a moiety of that property which was allotted to Bussoomutty, and also a one-fifth share in the properties which remain unpartitioned. The suit came on for settlement of issues, and the only question which arises is, whether such a suit will lie under the circumstances. It appears to me that the whole weight of authority, is in favour of the plaintiff. The earlier cases cited in Mayne, s. 404, and in I. L. R., 3 All., 88, and an unreported case, No. 235 of 1877, Sreemutty Dossee v. Kumall Deb, delivered by Pontifex, J., are on all fours with the present case; whilst, on the other hand, there are the cases reported in 12 and 13 W. R., pp. 409 and 66, of Puddum Mookce Dossee v. Rayee Monce Dossee. It is not necessary to say, whether this can, or cannot, be reconciled with the other authorities,—it is sufficient to say that it is distinguishable: in that case the partition was exclusively amongst the grandsons, and the grandmother was not entitled to a share. The present case, as also the case before Pontifex, J., is not a partition amongst grandsons. The decree will, therefore, direct that the plaintiff is entitled to an equal share with the defendant Bussoomutty and the infant defendants, in the properties which, under the partition decree, have been allotted to the representatives of Suttia Prosunno, and to a life-interest in the income of the property remaining unpartitioned. The Receiver's costs will come out of the estate.

Bond—Description of Property—General Words—Registration.

In consideration of a loan, A gave a bond, by which he covenanted "not to alienate the property of himself and his daughter or the rest of his own property, until the loan secured by the bond was paid." The bond was recorded under the Registration Act in the book numbered "four" required to be kept by the Act. A subsequently sold his immoveable property, and the conveyance was recorded in the book numbered "one," in which documents relating to immoveable property have to be recorded. Held, that the general words used in the bond were not sufficient to give a lien upon any specific property, and that the fact that the bond had been recorded in book "four" showed that it was not the intention of the parties that the immoveable property of the debtor should be charged.

THE plaintiff in this case was a bond-creditor of one Kamaruddi Sheikh. The defendant, subsequently to the date of the bond, purchased certain property from Kamaruddi Sheikh. The plaintiff having obtained a money-decree against Kamaruddi Sheikh, instituted the present suit against the defendant in order to establish a lien on what he claimed to be his mortgaged-bond against the land purchased by the defendant. The defendant denied that the plaintiff's bond gave him any lien whatever, and insisted that it was a mere money-bond, and that his purchase, therefore, was not affected by the bond. [197] The words of the bond were, "Kamaruddi Sheikh engaged not to alienate the property of himself and his daughter for which he was about to sue or the rest of his own property, until the loan secured by the bond was paid off." The plaintiff insisted that these words gave him a charge or a lien on the whole of Sheikh Kamaruddi's property, as also the property which he might recover in the suit referred to in the bond.

Both the lower Courts decided in favour of the plaintiff, that, under these words in the bond, he had a lien on Sheikh Kamaruddi's property, and on the specific property which had been purchased by the defendant.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, for the appellant.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

PONTIFEX, J. (who, after stating the facts of the case as above, continued):—Before the District Judge two authorities were cited; one of them—Doss Money Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (1)—is an authority to show that general words like these used in this bond would be insufficient to give a creditor a lien upon any specific property. The other is a Full Bench case, Rajkumar Ramgopal Narain Singh v. Ram Dutt Chowdhry (2) and is relied upon by the plaintiff to show that, in this particular case, there was sufficient mention of property in the bond to give him a lien. Now the construction that ought to be put upon documents of this nature is stated very plainly in Sugden on "Vendors and Purchasers," page 711, 14th edition. It is there laid down that it is a general rule, although it may not hold universally true, that "a covenant to convey and settle lands will not be a specific lien on the lands of the covenantor, but the covenantee will be a creditor by specialty." That accords with the decision in Doss Money Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (1), to which I have referred, and it also accords with common sense and reason.

[198] Even without these authorities, we should be of opinion that the words used in this bond are too vague and uncertain to pass any lien.

(1) 3 C. 363.

(2) 5 B.L.R. 264.

In fact, no specific property whatever is mentioned by situation. In the case of Rajkumar Ramgopal Narayan Sing v. Ram Dutt Chowdhry (1), referred to, property situate in certain specific mouzas is mentioned, and therefore that case is distinguishable from the case now before us.

On the ground, therefore, that the words of this bond are too vague and general to give any specific lien, we think that the decisions of the Courts below should be reversed; and in addition to the authorities above referred to, we find it laid down in Macpherson's book on Mortgages, page 64, that "the property intended to be mortgaged should be described, so that it may be readily recognized and identified, and so as to meet the requirements of the Registration Act."

Now we find from section 21 of the Registration Act, that "no non-testamentary document relating to immovable property shall be accepted for registration, unless it contains a description of such property sufficient to identify the same." We also find that this particular bond was recorded under the Registration Act in the book numbered "four" required to be kept by the Act; but by the provisions of the Registration Act, all documents which relate to immovable property, and which are not wills, are to be recorded in book "one," while in book "four" are to be entered documents which do not relate to immovable property. We think, therefore, that this bond having been entered in book "four," shows pretty plainly what the intention of the parties themselves was, when this instrument was registered. If they had supposed that it gave a lien upon specific immovable property, it would have been their duty to have it recorded in book "one," and unless it was recorded in book "one," there would be no protection for a purchaser buying from a bond-debtor, for no search of the indexes required to be kept by the Act would give him notice that land belonging to the bond-debtor had been hypothecated. Putting it at the highest, the parties before us stand in precisely the same position. Even if the plaintiff intended to obtain a lien on his debtor's land, [199] he would only be in the same position as the defendant, viz., a purchaser for valuable consideration. But the defendant, being in this position, has taken the precaution to register his conveyance as a conveyance of immovable property, whereas the plaintiff has only taken under a bond in these vague and uncertain words, and has failed to register it properly as a document relating to immovable property.

We think that the decision of the Courts below must be reversed, and this appeal decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

When a person is proved to have had a knowledge of certain facts, or to have been in a position, the reasonable consequence of which knowledge or position would be, that he would have been led to make further enquiry, which would have disclosed a particular fact, the law fixes him with having himself had notice of that particular fact. There may be such wilful negligence in abstaining from enquiry into facts which would convey actual notice, as may properly be held to have the consequences of notice actually obtained. But if there is not actual notice, and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an enquiry into, and consequent knowledge of, facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied.

Constructive notice may apply as against third persons from a neglect to call for deeds and documents of title; but not to the same extent where a Registration Act is in operation, as it would where no Registration Act prevails.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of certain property known as Chur Guptiparra. It appeared that the defendant Baney Madhub Mozoomdar was convicted of an offence under the Penal Code, and was imprisoned. At the date of his conviction, he was the owner of Chur Guptiparra under two leases from the two zemindars, who were proprietors of the Chur. One of these leases was in his own name, and the other was in the name of his cousin, named Bara Rakhal Das Mozoomdar. On the 29th October, 1869, upon his imprisonment, Baney Madhub gave a power-of-attorney to Bara Rakhal Das Mozoomdar and to Dindyal Mozoomdar and Radha Gobind Mullick, which power contained an authority to any two of the attorneys to sell his property "if occasion arose." Previous to his conviction and imprisonment, the zemindar, under whom the second of these leases was held, had instituted a suit for arrears of rent. That suit was pending when Baney Madhub was convicted. A decree was made in the suit, and a sale of the tenure created by that lease was directed; and on the 5th November, 1869, it was purchased in execution of that decree in the name of Baney Madhub's cousin, Gopal Das. Subsequently in August, 1870, two of the persons named in the power-of-attorney, viz., Bara Rakhal Das and Radha Gobind Mullick, conveyed the other lease of eight annas to Gopal Das and Chota Rakhal Das, Baney Madhub's brother, ostensibly for valuable consideration. Afterwards, about Christmas 1875, the plaintiff purchased both these leases. They were conveyed to him by a kobala executed by Gopal Das and Chota Rakhal Das. When Baney Madhub was discharged from prison, he took proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code to obtain possession of these properties; and an order was passed in his favour, whereupon the plaintiff instituted this suit to recover possession, as a purchaser for value without notice, of the two properties from Gopal Das Mozoomdar and Chota Rakhal Das Mozoomdar. The lower Courts [201] holding that the transactions were benami, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX, J.—We are of opinion that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed, as we think that the learned District Judge has unduly stretched the doctrine of constructive notice against the plaintiff, appellant. That doctrine, so far as we have to consider it in this case, may be stated as follows: When a person is proved to have had a knowledge of certain facts, or to have been in a position, the reasonable consequence of which knowledge or position would be that he would have been led to make further enquiry which would have disclosed a particular fact, the law fixes him with having himself had notice of that particular fact. For there may be such wilful negligence in abstaining from enquiring into facts which would convey actual notice as may properly be held to have the consequences of notice actually obtained. But if there is not actual notice, and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an enquiry into, and consequent knowledge of, facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied. Constructive notice may apply as against third persons from a neglect to call for deeds and documents of title; but not to anything like the same extent where a Registration Act is in operation, as it would where no Registration Act prevails—Agra Bank v. Barry (1). Even in England, where conveyancing is a science, and title is deduced by an abstract and production of deeds, it has been considered that the doctrine of constructive notice has been pushed to its extreme limit, and with the much laxer practice in this country it requires even more careful application against a purchaser for value. (His Lordship then stated the facts of the case as above, and continued.) Both of the Courts below have held, that the sales or conveyances to Gopal Das under the zemindar's decree, and to Gopal Das and Chota Rakhal Das from the two attorneys, were benami transactions for Baney Madhub; and that finding binds us on this appeal. Perhaps the evidence as it now stands may be sufficient to support such finding that these two sales or conveyances were actually benami; but speaking for myself, I must say that I am by no means fully satisfied that they were benami. But whether they were benami or not, does not appear to us to affect the present question. The question which we have to decide is, whether the plaintiff in this case is a purchaser for value without notice. In dealing with that question the District Judge has considered that the plaintiff had notice, at the time of his purchase, of all the circumstances which have been subsequently proved in evidence in this case—of all the circumstances which led both the Courts below to hold that the two original transactions were merely benami transactions. Now, what are these circumstances? Firstly, with regard to the first sale under the zemindar's decree, the learned District Judge has expressed his opinion that the rent was purposely allowed to fall into arrears. But he was hardly justified in pressing that against the plaintiff, because the rent-suit instituted by the zemindar was instituted previously to Baney Madhub's conviction, and therefore, if rent had been allowed to fall into arrears, it had been so allowed by Baney Madhub himself. Secondly, the learned Judge next relies upon the fact, as found by him, that Gopal Das, the ostensible purchaser at the sale, had no funds with which he could make the purchase. But though that may have been proved in this suit, it does not necessarily follow that the plaintiff was aware of it at the date of his purchase. Indeed, Gopal Das was entitled to a share in family property; and, from the circumstance that the plaintiff, on his purchase, took from Gopal Das a guarantee to which I shall refer presently, it might be inferred, that the plaintiff considered Gopal Das as a person not without means. Thirdly, the learned Judge relied on the fact proved [203] in this suit, that, after the purchase by Gopal Das, the rents of the property were paid out of the funds of Baney Madhub, and not out of the funds of Gopal Das; but the knowledge of this fact does not appear to have been brought home to the plaintiff. These circumstances might have been sufficient to support the findings of the Courts below, as between Baney Madhub and Gopal Das, but it by no means follows, that the purchaser had any knowledge, at the time he purchased, of the circumstances which have been proved at the hearing of this case; and if he was in honest ignorance at the time of his purchase, of course he ought not to be bound by any of such circumstances. With respect to the second conveyance by the two attorneys, the learned Judge considered that it was benami, because there was no proof of any pressure of liabilities which would justify the sale. But in reality there was then a debt due from Baney Madhub to one Deno Nath Mondul of Rs. 2,400. The conveyance to Gopal Das and Chota Rakhal Das was alleged to have been made in order to pay off that debt; and it is found by the Courts below, that that debt was paid off in the following manner, viz., a kistbundi was taken by the creditor from Gopal Das and Chota Rakhal Das for the precise amount of Rs. 2,400, and Baney Madhub was released from his personal liability. Therefore, there was in this transaction a complete change of debtors to the creditor, and a discharge of the original debtor. One would have thought, if this was a benami purchase, that it would be a most unusual proceeding for mere benamidars to take upon themselves, by this kistbundi, the absolute liability for a debt of Rs. 2,400 to Deno Nath Mondul, and it would at least seem that Dino Nath Mondul must have considered the transaction a bona fide one; and that he was content to accept Gopal Das as a sufficiently responsible person for one of his sureties. The learned Judge had also relied upon the fact that there was no change of management on the occasion of these first conveyances; but he is scarcely justified in coming to that conclusion, for in a different part of his judgment, he also finds that the ryot's rents were paid in the name of the ostensible purchasers, and therefore, there was, to that extent at least, a change in the management.

Next, with respect [204] to the subsequent sale to the plaintiff, it seems to us that the Court below started on a somewhat wrong principle. The learned Judge says, that the plaintiff's case was, that he had acquired by his purchase the rights of his vendors. We are unable to find that that was the case made by his plaint. The plaintiff's case really was, that he had acquired by his purchase a title to the property as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. But upon the principle assumed by the learned Judge, he considered that the plaintiff was bound to prove that his vendors were the real owners, which he, in the opinion of the lower Courts, failed to do. It appears to us, that the plaintiff was only bound at the outside, to prove that he had given full value for his purchase, and that the persons, purporting to have sold to him, were honestly considered by him as the true owners. Then the learned Judge takes the following circumstances as fixing the plaintiff with constructive notice. He says, that the plaintiff and the defendant resided in the same village; that the properties purchased were adjacent to the place where both lived; that the plaintiff was intimate with the defendant and his family; and that he was also connected by marriage with the defendant. Now it is true that the plaintiff was connected by marriage with the defendant, and it was also proved that he was intimate with the defendant's family; but it appears from the defendant's own evidence that there was enmity between himself and the plaintiff. The learned Judge next relies upon the recitals in the conveyances to the plaintiff as being sufficient to put him upon enquiry. These recitals set out that the property had belonged to Baney Madhub, who was in jail; that Baney Madhub had given a power or authority to his attorneys to deal with that property; and that those attorneys had sold to the plaintiff's ostensible vendors. Then the learned Judge proceeds to say, that, notwithstanding these recitals, the plaintiff admits that he made no enquiry. Now it is difficult to understand how the learned Judge came to that conclusion, because he afterwards finds that "the only enquiry, plaintiff says, he made, was a question to Dindyal, one of the defendant's attorneys, whether there was any harm in buying—a question which Dindyal admits he answered in the negative." Now [205] Dindyal was the attorney who did not join in the conveyance of August, 1870. But he admits that this enquiry was made of him, and that he made that answer; and it further appears that another of the attorneys was an attesting witness to the plaintiff's conveyance. We think, therefore, that the learned Judge was not justified in finding that the plaintiff made no enquiry; and it is difficult for us to say how he could make any other or more satisfactory enquiry than he actually did, from the authorized agents of the defendant. The defendant was himself in jail; and it was scarcely to be expected that the plaintiff would go and enquire of the defendant himself in the jail; the plaintiff in fact did the next best thing. He went to the authorized and trusted agents of the defendant and made enquiry of them, and the result of that enquiry was to the effect, that "there was no harm in buying," in other words, that he would be safe in purchasing from the ostensible vendors. Then the learned Judge further finds that the plaintiff must be fixed with constructive notice, because he did not ask for the accounts or zemindary papers, and did not obtain the deeds; but with respect to the papers, we understand that the zemindary papers were given up to the plaintiff on his purchase, and with respect to not obtaining the deeds, such negligence might be important as against a third person with whom they might have been deposited for value; but is of comparative unimportance as against Baney Madhub, who has placed his affairs in the hands of attorneys, one at least of whom had assured the plaintiff that he was safe in purchasing. Moreover the neglect to ask for deeds, in a country where registration prevails, applies with but slight force as already explained. But what the learned Judge seems principally to have relied upon, is the fact, that, in the conveyance to the purchaser from the ostensible vendors, there is a covenant or guarantee of title from them to him, to this effect, that they undertake or guarantee, that there is no other person having any right in the property. Now, the same observation applies to this guarantee as applies to the kistbundi, viz., it is certainly unusual, and not to be expected that mere benamidars who have no interest whatever in the property, should take upon themselves the personal liabilities [206] and responsibilities of a guarantee; and, if it is an unusual thing to have such guarantee in a deed of conveyance, the reason for its insertion may have been, that the plaintiff did make enquiries for the deeds, and with respect to the title, before he completed his purchase. He in fact made enquiries of the agents of the defendant. The agents of the defendant allowed him to believe that the sale was a proper one, and upon that he completed his purchase. We, therefore, think that there is no ground in this case for fixing the plaintiff with constructive notice of any of the circumstances, which, as the Courts below have held, prove that the conveyance to the ostensible vendors of the plaintiff were benami transactions; and this being so, and the first Court having held that he paid full value on his purchase, and the District Judge not having come to any contrary finding, we think he must be treated as a purchaser for value without notice, and that therefore his title is good, and that he is entitled to recover as against the defendant. It may be that there has been a fraud committed against the defendant by his agents, but if that is so, the principal is the person who ought to suffer for the fraud of the agent, and not a stranger—Hunter v. Walters (1), which case also shows how the doctrine of constructive notice may be attempted to be pushed to an almost absurd extent. This case in fact falls within the language of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Coomar Koondoo v. McQueen (2), which case no doubt was very much stronger in its circumstances than the present case. But the language which I am about to quote is appropriate to the present case: "It is a principle of natural equity which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself out as the owner of an estate, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner, in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out, shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title, unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing, either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to constructive notice of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an enquiry that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it." Now neither of the Courts below in this case have held that there was actual notice; and we are of opinion that the circumstances stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court are not sufficient to fix the plaintiff with constructive notice, or ought to have put him upon an enquiry which, if prosecuted, would have led to the discovery that his ostensible vendors were benamidars.

One other question has arisen in this case which was not raised at the bar, and which certainly did not arise in the Courts below. No certificate having been granted in the sale to Gopal Das of the eight annas under the zemindar's decree, whether even an ostensible title would pass to Gopal Das which he could convey to the plaintiff. That question, as I have said, was not raised in the Courts below; and in fact it was admitted by the defendant in the pleadings that there was a sale under the zemindar's decree to Gopal Das. We think, therefore, it is too late now to raise any objection on that point. Upon the question being started by the Court, it was pointed out, that s. 259 of the former Code of Civil Procedure directs that, after the sale of immoveable property shall have become absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate, which is to be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right, title and interest. Even if any objection could now be taken on this point, we do not think these words contemplate that nothing would pass to a purchaser unless a certificate were issued; for we are of opinion that the order affirming the sale would be sufficient to pass a title to the purchaser; and the certificate, which might afterwards be obtained by him, would be merely evidence that the property so passed. The appellant will be entitled to his costs of this appeal and of the Courts below.

After this decision, no order will be necessary in Rule No. 1343 of 1880, which will drop of itself.

Appeal allowed.

dismissed the complaint under s. 147. A fortnight later, the person accused applied to the Magistrate, and obtained sanction to prosecute the complainant for having falsely charged him. Proceedings were thereupon commenced before another Magistrate, who, on the 20th December, committed the petitioner to the Court of Session. The petitioner then applied to the High Court to have the order, dismissing his complaint, set aside, and the order sanctioning the criminal prosecution and the proceedings [209] taken thereunder, quashed, on the ground that the Magistrate was not competent to dismiss the complaint or to sanction the prosecution [under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code] without first examining all the witnesses offered to prove it.

A rule was accordingly issued, calling on the opposite party to show cause why these orders should not be set aside.

Mr. M. Ghose, Mr. Evans, Baboo Doorga Mohun Dass, and Baboo Lall Mohun Dass, in support of the rule.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr. Branson, and Baboo Baikunt Nath Dass showed cause.

The judgments of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) were as follows :

JUDGMENT.

CUNNINGHAM, J.—The question raised in this case is the competence of a Magistrate, under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to dismiss a complaint; and, under s. 468 of the Code, to sanction the prosecution of the complainant for making a false charge, without hearing the complainant's evidence. I see no reason to question the legality of the Magistrate's proceeding. Section 147 empowers the Magistrate to dismiss the complaint, if, after examining the complainant, there is, in his judgment, no sufficient ground for proceeding; and there is nothing in s. 468 to indicate that any particular proceeding on the part of the Court giving the sanction is essential to its validity,—such as, for instance, is necessary in the case of a Court committing a case or sending it for enquiry under s. 471. I am unable to concur in the opinion expressed on this point in Syed Nissar Hossein v. Ramgolam Sing (1). The application must be rejected.

PRINSEP, J. (after stating the facts as above, continued):—Several cases decided by this Court have been cited by Mr. M. Ghose in support of his contention; but it appears to me that, with the exception of one case, Syed Nissar Hossein v. Ramgolam Sing (1), none of them are precisely in point.

There is clearly a distinction between a sanction given under [210] s. 470 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the institution of proceedings by a Court of its own motion, which is provided for by s. 471. The case now before us is one coming under s. 470, which refers to private prosecutions, under leave obtained, for certain offences specified in ss. 467, 468, and 469. Before sanction to prosecute can properly be given, it is necessary that the proceedings on the original complaint should have terminated in a regular manner. The Court should then consider, as has been pointed out in the cases of The Queen v. Mahomed Hossein (2) and Radha Nauth Banerjee v. Kangalee Mollah (3), whether there are good grounds for the application made to it, or whether it has been made solely for the purpose of oppressing and harassing an adversary and preventing him from taking any further legal steps to which he may be entitled, as has been pointed out also in the case of The Queen v. Baijoo Lal (1): "It is by no means, in every instance in which a party fails to prove his case, that the Judge, who has decided against such party, is justified in exercising the power given him by this section. So long as it is a case as to which there is any possible doubt, or in which it is not perfectly certain that the Judge's decision must be upheld in the event of there being an appeal in the civil suit, the Judge acts indiscreetly and wrongly, if, the moment he has given his judgment in the civil suit, he exercises the power given him by this section. At the same time if, in the course of the civil trial, the Judge has before him clear and unmistakable proof of a criminal offence, and if, after the trial is over, he, on consideration, thinks it necessary to proceed at once, of course it may be right to do so. Judges should, however, bear in mind that criminal prosecutions are frequently suggested by successful litigants merely to prevent an appeal in the civil suit; and they should be careful not to lend themselves to such suggestions too readily. They should also recollect that when they proceed under s. 471, the responsibility for the prosecution rests upon the Judge entirely; such a prosecution being a very different thing from a prosecution instituted on the complaint of a private party and merely sanctioned by the Court under s. 468." In the cases cited before us,—that is to say, The Queen v. Gour Mohun Singh (2), Ashrof Ali v. The Empress (3), and In re Russick Lall Mullick (4),—prosecutions were ordered simply on the report of the police that the complaints made had, on investigation, been found to be false. In all these cases, and also in the case of The Empress v. Karimdad (5), recently decided by Garth, C.J., and Field, J., on the 9th December 1880, the Court has pointed out the impropriety of acting solely on the report of the police, and without having considered the statement of the complainant or the evidence tendered by him. In the case of The Queen v. Heera Lall Ghose (6) and In re Gangoo Singh (7), the Magistrate had commenced to hear the evidence tendered by the complainant and closed the proceedings summarily without hearing all the witnesses cited, so as to make the order of discharge an improper order within the terms of s. 215, expl. iii of the Code of Criminal Procedure. These are cases very different from the case now before us, in which, after hearing the complainant, the Magistrate was fully competent to dismiss the complaint, and so put an end to all proceedings before him.

(1) 25 W.R. Cr. Rul. 10.

(2) 16 W.R. Cr. Rul. 37.

(3) Marsh 407.

In In re Choolhaie Telee (8), the Magistrate ordered a prosecution for a false complaint after he had passed an order of dismissal under s. 147; but in that case he took upon himself to direct the institution of a prosecution acting under s. 471, and he was, therefore, under the terms of that section, bound to make such preliminary enquiry as might be necessary before directing a prosecution to be instituted; and the Court there held that he was bound to give the complainant an opportunity of showing that there were no grounds for instituting such a prosecution. That, however, is a very different case from the present one, in which the responsibility of instituting a criminal prosecution was accepted by a private party, [212] the proceedings on the original complaint had regularly terminated, and from what had already taken place before him, the Magistrate was satisfied that the leave asked for should be granted.

I concur in the view of the law expressed by Jackson, J., in In re Biyogi Bhagut (1). In that case, however, the order was set aside on the ground that the order of dismissal under s. 147 had not been properly passed, because the complainant had not been examined.

It was certainly open to the complainant in the case now before us, if he thought proper, to apply for an order under s. 298, that a further inquiry into his complaint might be made, notwithstanding the order of dismissal; but he did not think it proper to do so, nor has he at any time, until the lapse of some six weeks, and after, on proceedings taken against him, he has been committed to the Court of Session for making a false complaint, thought proper to take any steps to have his complaint retried, or to have any witnesses examined.

The fact that he has taken no action in the matter seems to me to distinguish the present case from Syed Nissur Hossein v. Ramgolum Sing (2). But even if this were not so, I am not disposed to concur in the view laid down by the learned Judges in that case when they say that it was "clearly illegal on the part of the Assistant Magistrate and Magistrate to give sanction under s. 211 of the Penal Code without giving the petitioner an opportunity of adducing evidence to prove that the charge which he made was a true one."

On these grounds I am unable to find anything illegal in the proceedings which have already taken place; and I accordingly concur in discharging this rule.

judgment-debtors under a vesting order of Court made before the order for attachment in question was passed. The District Judge comes to the opposite conclusion on the authority of the case of Anand Chandra Pal v. Panchilal Sarma (1). But that case differs in two material respects from the present case. In it the question was, whether attachment after judgment shall have priority over the vesting order, and not, as here, attachment before judgment; and secondly, that case was governed by the procedure prescribed in Act VIII of 1859, under which the first attaching-creditor had priority over other [214] judgment-creditors. But no such priority is allowed under the present Procedure Code, Act X of 1877. It seems to us that this point, viz., that attachment before judgment does not take priority over the vesting order, has been distinctly ruled in In the matter of Gocool Doss Soonderjee, an Insolvent (2), Bank of Bengal v. Newton (3), and Gamble v. Bholagir (4). In the last case Sir Richard Couch says distinctly, that an attachment before judgment "cannot be regarded as the inception of an execution, or as binding the goods in such a manner as to exclude the right of the Official Assignee accruing after such attachment, but before judgment and warrant for execution."

PONTIFEX, J.—We think the decision of the lower Appellate Court in this case must be reversed. It appears that the defendant in the present suit instituted a suit, No. 43 of 1877, against the present plaintiffs, claiming that rent to the amount of Rs. 272-3-2-2 was due to him, in respect of former years on account of a certain quantity of land. The present plaintiffs, who were defendants in that suit, alleged that the amount of rent and the extent of land, had both been overstated by the plaintiffs. In deciding that suit the Subordinate Judge held, that the present plaintiffs, who were defendants in that case, were bound by a jumma bundi which they had signed, and which stated the amount of rent as claimed in that plaint, and being so bound, the Subordinate Judge refused to try whether the extent of land had been overstated or not by the then plaintiffs. After the decision of that case the present suit was instituted, in which the plaintiffs pray, notwithstanding the former decision, that their land may be measured, and that their rent may be charged according to the strict measurement of the land.

Both the Courts below have held that this suit is barred, the previous decision being res judicata. Now, if a measurement had been ordered in the former suit, and if upon such measurement it had been found that the present plaintiffs held the quantity of land which they were alleged to have held in the former suit, that would have been a res judicata, unless the plaintiffs proved subsequent relinquishment of part of the land. Speaking for myself, I think it doubtful whether, in the former suit, which was for arrears of rent, the present plaintiffs, as defendants, were entitled to insist that a measurement of land should be had. They, it seems to me, were bound to pay, for the past years, the rent which they were accustomed to pay until [216] they took proceedings to get the rent adjusted according to the actual quantity of land in their holding. But whether that is so or not, we think, according to the proper construction of s. 13 of the new Procedure Code, that the former decree cannot be treated as res judicata, for, admitting for the sake of argument that the measurement of the land had been a matter directly and substantially in issue in that suit under explanation 2, yet it cannot be said that such matter was heard and finally decided by the Judge in the former suit, and not having been heard and finally decided, the decree in the former suit would not affect this suit as res judicata under s. 13. I think, therefore, that the case should go back to the Court of first instance to proceed with the case. The costs in this appeal will be costs in the cause.

FIELD, J. —I am of the same opinion. The question of the quantity of land in the ryots' possession was determined in the former suit upon a jumma bundi signed by the ryots. The entry in this jumma bundi so signed by them, had merely the effect of an admission of the quantity of land in their possession at that particular time. It seems clear to my mind, that that admission as to the quantity of land then in their possession, cannot estop them from showing in the present case the quantity of land which they now occupy. The former suit was brought to recover rent which had fallen due before its institution. The present suit (although the plaint contains much that might well have been omitted) is substantially a suit for abatement. It is a suit which has no concern with rent which has already fallen due; but seeks to have it determined, for the purposes of the future, what rent the ryots is bound to pay to his landlord. Section 19 of the Rent Law provides, that a ryot having a right of occupancy shall be entitled to claim an abatement of the rent previously paid by him, if the quantity of land held by the ryot has been proved by measurement to be less than the quantity for which rent has been previously paid by him. The provisions of this sections are peculiarly applicable to a case in which rent is paid at so much per bigha, kani, or other local unit of measurement. Where rent is computed and paid in this manner, the ryot is entitled to have a measurement at any time; and if the result [217] of such measurement shows that he holds less land than he has been paying rent for, he is entitled to an order for abatement, which will have prospective effect. In the present case the jumma bundi signed by the ryots, and upon which the previous suit for rent was decreed, contains the daghs comprising the ryot's jumma and the rent of each particular dagh. The ryots called upon their landlord to produce another jumma bundi, which contains further the area of each dagh, and the rate of rent payable therefor. I think that these two jumma bundis may fairly be taken together, and, taking them together, it is clear that the ryots pay their rent in this case at a certain rate per kani, and this being so, it is clear that the quantity of land in each dagh, and the total quantity of land in the occupation of the ryots, is an essential factor in determining the rent to be paid by them; in other words, that the rent previously paid by them has been adjusted with reference to the quantity of land held by them. They now seek to show, for the purpose of future years, and the rent to be paid by them hereafter, that the quantity of land held by them can be proved by measurement to be less than the quantity for which rent has been previously paid by them. Section 19 of the Rent Act clearly gives them the right to have this question determined; and in seeking to have this question determined, they are not attempting to adjudicate over again the question determined in the former rent suit which was concerned only with the quantity of land in their possession during the years for the rent of which that suit was brought.

Appeal allowed.

BALLIN v. BALLIN AND OTHERS. [3rd May, 1881.]

Will—Gift to Children on their attaining twenty-one—Contingent Gift.

Where words of contingency form part of the description of the class of persons to take, as in the case of a gift to those "who shall attain the age of twenty-one," the words must receive their natural construction, and no estate vests in any one till he attains the prescribed age. In such a case there must be something in the context pointing to a different construction or something in the will inconsistent with the literal construction, to justify a Court in adopting any but the literal construction.

In the case of words of contingency occurring in the description of the class of persons to take, a mere gift over is not sufficient to change their meaning.

THIS was a suit brought on the 17th February 1879 for the construction of the will of one Anna Maria Ballin.

It appeared from the plaint that the testatrix died on the 18th July 1863, having made a will bearing date the 19th May 1863, and that her will was proved by the Administrator-General of Bengal, and contained, amongst other directions, the following clause providing for setting apart a portion of the rents of No. 30, Theatre Road, towards satisfying a mortgage, and "after satisfaction thereof upon trust to pay the rents to my daughter Mary Margaret for life, with remainder to the use of the children of my said daughter, who being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters shall attain that age or marry, in equal shares in fee-simple. But in the event of there being no child of my said daughter Mary Margaret, or no such child being a son or sons who shall attain the said age, or being a daughter or daughters who shall attain that age or marry and leave issue, to the use of the children of my daughter Esther Handley Eliza, the wife of William Hamilton Bartlett, hereinafter named, and the children of my son John James Graham Ballin, who being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being [219] a daughter or daughters shall attain that age or marry, in equal shares in fee-simple." Mary Margaret Ballin, the tenant-for-life, died unmarried on the 13th March 1867, leaving the defendant Samuel H. G. Ballin (a lunatic), the plaintiff, and the defendant E. H. E. Bartlett, then the wife of the said William H. Bartlett, her next-of-kin, her surviving. At the time of the death of the tenant-for-life, the plaintiff had one child alive. Two others were born subsequently, and these children represented three of the infant defendants. Esther Handley Eliza Bartlett had two children, both alive on the date of the death of the tenant-for-life, viz., the two remaining infant defendants.

Since the death of the tenant-for-life the Administrator-General had received the rents of the house No. 30, Theatre Road, and applied part of such rents to the maintenance of the children of the plaintiff and of Mrs. Bartlett, leaving the remaining portion to accumulate.

The plaintiff then brought this present suit against S. H. G. Ballin (the lunatic), Esther H. E. Bartlett and her infant children, one of whom had married in 1881, and his own infant children and the Administrator-General of Bengal, for the construction of the will, alleging an intestacy in respect of the rents of the said house between the date of the death of the testatrix and the date at which it might be held that the house became vested in any of the devisees under the will.

The lunatic defendant, by his guardian ad litem, alleged the intestacy before mentioned, and submitted his rights to the Court.

The defendant E. H. E. Bartlett, for herself and her children, alleged, that, on the death of the tenant-for-life, all the infant defendants took vested interests under the will, subject to their interests being divested, should they or neither of them being a son attain the age of twenty-one, or being a daughter attain that age or marry, and submitted that there was no such intestacy as alleged.

The children of the plaintiff, by their next friend, submitted their rights to the Court. The Administrator-General stated that his predecessor in office had applied the rents to the maintenance of the infant children as alleged, and that no other [220] claim had been advanced, and submitted the construction of the will to the Court.

Mr. Trevelyan for the plaintiff stated, that the plaintiff was only interested as far as his children were concerned, and cited the following case—Festing v. Allen (1)—to show that the gift was contingent [WILSON, J.—The judgment in Festing v. Allen (1) does not mean that the children must attain twenty-one during the lifetime of the tenant-for-life.] He further cited Browne v. Browne (1), Brackenbury v. Gibbons (2), Muakett v. Eaton (3), and Newman (4).

Mr. Allen for the lunatic, the heir-at-law.—The gift is to a contingent class, and is very near to Festing v. Allen (5). Where the time of payment is the essence of the gift, the bequest is contingent; he also cited Hanson v. Graham (6), Lloyd v. Lloyd (7), and 2 Jarman, pages 149, 157, as showing the construction to be given where the period of vesting is the period of distribution; and Haughton v. Harrison (8), as to the disposition of income before the contingent legacy vests; and Shawe v. Curcliffe (9), as showing that where a legacy depends on a contingency, the intermediate interest between the death of the tenant-for-life, and the contingency happening, does not follow the principal, but falls into the residue, and if there is no residuary legatee as in the present case, then the heir-at-law will take.

Mr. T. A. Apcar for Mr. Bartlett and children.—These children were all born during the lifetime of the tenant-for-life, the class was therefore ascertained at the death of the tenant-for-life, but the distribution was postponed. Festing v. Allen (5) is now no authority; it has been disapproved of in Jull v. [221] Jacobs (10) and in Browne v. Browne (1). In Reley v. Garnett (11), the children were held to take vested equitable estates subject to be divested. This was long after Festing v. Allen (5). See also Phipps v. Ackers (12) and 2 Jarman, page 143, to show that children born before period of distribution are let in; and page 148, as to children born after that period. I submit that the interests were vested at the time of the death of the tenant-for-life.

Mr. Sale for the children of the plaintiff.—One of my clients was born before the death of the tenant-for-life, the other two after. I rely on the rule laid down in Maseyk v. Fergusson (13). That case was decided under the Succession Act; but Pontifex, J., held, that the Succession Act was nothing but English law codified. He further cited Leake v. Robinson (14), Whitbread v. Lord St. John (15), Hoste v. Pratt (16), Gilmore v. Severn (17), as showing that all the children were entitled.

Mr. Stokoe (with him Mr. Collinson), for the Administrator-General, cited Bullock v. Stones (18), Glanvill v. Glanvill (19), as to whether a future general devise carries income—Gibson v. Montfort (20), and contended that the implied trust was in favour of the children.

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This is a suit brought to determine the construction of the will of Mrs. Anna Maria Ballin.

The will is prior to the Succession Act; and has, therefore, to be construed according to the rules of English law without reference to that Act.

The will is somewhat informally framed. It commences by [222] certain specific bequests and devises. It proceeds:—"I bequeath the residue of my personal estate to the Administrator-General, upon trust, to stand possessed of my dwelling-house and premises situate No. 30

Theatre Road," and another dwelling-house, and the residue of the personal estate, upon trust, till a mortgage-debt was paid off, to pay a monthly sum to the testatrix's daughter Mary Margaret, and subject to that payment to apply the rents and profits in satisfaction of the mortgage. "And after satisfaction of the said mortgage-debt as to my said house and premises situate No. 30 Theatre Road, upon trust, to pay the rents and profits thereof to my said daughter Mary Margaret during her life, with remainder to the use of the children of my said daughter Mary Margaret, who being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters shall attain that age or marry, in equal shares in fee-simple. But in the event of there being no child of my said daughter Mary Margaret, or no such child being a son or sons who shall attain that age, or being a daughter or daughters who shall attain that age or marry and have issue, to the use of the children of my daughter Esther Handley Eliza, the wife of William Hamilton Bartlett, and the children of my son John Graham Ballin, who being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter, or daughters shall attain that age or marry, in equal shares in fee-simple." Mary Margaret, the testatrix's daughter, died about 1860 unmarried. Mrs. Bartlett has had two children, both still living: William Pigott, born the 8th of February 1860; and Maud Mary, born the 23rd February 1862, and married the 26th January 1881.

John Ballin has had three children who are still living: Florence, born the 5th December 1865; Herbert Askin, born the 1st June 1867; and Cecil James, born the 18th October 1868.

The heir-at-law of the testatrix was her eldest son, the defendant Samuel Ballin, a lunatic. The plaint in this suit was filed on the 17th of February 1879.

The points for decision are, whether the gifts to the children of Mr. Bartlett and John Ballin were vested or contingent [223] upon their attaining twenty-one; and in the latter case, who is entitled to the rents and profits in the meantime.

A number of cases were referred to, in which words apparently importing a contingency have been held not to prevent the vesting of the estate; cases of gifts to a class of persons "on their attaining twenty-one," or when they shall attain twenty-one, or "if they shall attain twenty-one," in which, by reason of the context, the words, apparently of contingency, have been held only to apply to the period of enjoyment, not to the vesting, or, else to create a condition subsequent, divesting the estate if the age be not reached. The earliest of these was Boraston's case (1). Among the latest are Andrew v. Andrew (2), and Muskett v. Eaton (3).

On the other hand, a series of cases have decided that where the words of contingency form part of the description of the class of persons to take, where, as in this case, the gift is to those "who shall attain the age of twenty-one," the words must receive their natural construction, and no estate vests in any one till he attains the prescribed age. Of this class of cases, Festing v. Allen (4) and Bull v. Pritchard (5) are leading cases. It is true that in Browne v. Browne (6), Stuart, V. C., refused to follow Festing v. Allen (4), and in Jull v. Jacobs (7), Malins V. C., expresses disapproval of the same case. I think it clear, however, upon all the authorities, that in such cases there must, at any rate, be something in the context pointing to a different construction, or something in the will inconsistent with the literal construction, to justify a Court in adopting any but the literal construction. This seems to be the view taken by Lord Hatherley in interpreting analogous words in Williams v. Haythorne (1). In the present case, looking only at the actual devise in question, that to the children of Mrs. Bartlett and of John Ballin, there is no gift over, and nothing in the context which can in any way control the natural meaning of the words of contingency.

The only doubt I felt during the argument arose in this way. [224] The prior gift to the children of Mary Margaret Ballin is in the same terms. And in the case of that devise there is a gift over, which, it was argued on the authority of Browne v. Browne (2) is sufficient to vest the prior gift. And it was argued that the testatrix, using the same words twice in her will, must be presumed to use them in the same sense. I do not think this reasoning sound. If words acquire a special meaning by reason of their context, I do not think that meaning can safely be given them when used in a different context. Moreover, in my judgment the foundation of the reasoning fails. For I think the weight of authority is strongly in favour of the proposition, that in the case of words of contingency occurring in the description of the persons to take, a mere gift over is not sufficient to change their meaning.

I hold, therefore, that the gift to the children of Mrs. Bartlett and John Ballin was contingent, and that no son takes any interest till he attains twenty-one, and no daughter till she attains that age or marries. That being so, it is clear that, after the death of Mary Margaret Ballin, and so long as no child had reached twenty-one and no daughter was married, the rents and profits of the house in question belonged to the heir-at-law by reason of intestacy. The rule is clearly laid down by the House of Lords in Countess of Bective v. Hodson (3). Upon Mr. Bartlett's daughter marrying, she became entitled to the rent. On the son attaining twenty-one, he became entitled to an equal share, and each of the children of John Ballin who reaches twenty-one, or in the case of a daughter, who marries, will become entitled to share equally with those already in enjoyment.

The costs of all parties will come out of the estate; and may be paid out of the estate which has been accumulated.

[225] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Field.

MONO MOHUN GHOSE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. MOTHURA MOHUN ROY AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [10th February, 1881.]

Limitation—Possession—Onus of Proof—Alluvion—Dispossession—Acts of Ownership.

In a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, alluvial lands, which had been diluviated more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs proved their title and possession up to the time of diluviation, and alleged that the lands had re-formed within twelve years, without alleging or proving possession during that period. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged, that the re-formation had taken place more than twelve years before suit, and that they had acquired a title to the lands by adverse possession for that period.

Held, that in such a case the submergence of the lands after diluvion ought to be presumed until the contrary was shown, and that the onus of proving re-formation before twelve years and adverse possession, was shifted to the defendants.

Per WILSON, J.—As a general rule, where a plaintiff claims land from which he alleges he has been dispossessed, the burden is upon him to show possession and dispossession within twelve years.

Proof of possession within twelve years does not necessarily mean proof of acts of ownership within that time. The nature of the proof of possession must depend on the nature of the case.

There are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies, may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour.

In the case of lands gradually diluviated and gradually re-formed, if the diluviation has been more than twelve years before suit, the claimant, unless he can show possession since the re-formation, must at least show that he was in possession down to the date of the diluviation.

Where the true owner is in possession at the time of diluviation, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the land continues submerged: probably also afterwards, until he is dispossessed.

[226] Per FIELD, J.—Although, according to the general rule, it lies upon the plaintiff, who is met with the plea of limitation, to show his own possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit, when the property in dispute is capable of actual and visible possession, yet, in the case of property which is not susceptible of actual and visible possession, an exception from the nature of the thing must be made to the general rule. In such cases, when the title and possession have been proved to be in a certain person up to a certain point of time,—when there has been no transfer of the title to any third person,—and there is no evidence that possession was exercised by a person other than the person having the title, so long as actual visible possession was possible, the possession of the person having the title will be presumed to continue until the property has again become susceptible of actual visible possession. Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property which they possess. And if the ownership of property is proved, and there is nothing to show that the possession of such property is with any person other than the owner, it may fairly be presumed to be with the owner. Such a presumption then takes the place of evidence to show the plaintiff's possession within twelve years before suit, of a property in which, from the nature of the thing evidence of actual possession is impossible.

[F., 9 Ind. Cas. 554; Appr., 6 B. 508 (511); R., 9 M. 175 (182); 9 C. 744 (751); 12 C.W.N. 24 N.]

THIS was a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, 3,250 bighas of land formed by alluvion on the original site of, and by accretion to, among others, a certain chur known as Chur Rajapore. During the lifetime of the plaintiffs' father, the lands commenced to be diluviated; and, in the rainy season of the year 1866, were wholly submerged. Subsequently, when the rainy season of the year 1871 was over, the disputed land again began to form by alluvion on the original site of the mouzas, and almost all the land had re-appeared. The plaintiffs continued to pay the fixed sadr jama, although the land was submerged. On attempting to take possession of the newly-formed lands, the plaintiffs were resisted by the defendants, and proceedings were commenced under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and on the 30th June 1875, the Magistrate attached the lands under s. 531. The defendants contended that the boundaries were not correctly stated; that the plaintiffs had sued not only for the attached land, but also for lands which were not included in the attachment; that the suit was bad by reason of misjoinder; and that it was barred by limitation. The Civil Court Amin made [227] a local investigation, and prepared a map, on which the land claimed by the plaintiffs was marked A and B. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for the land marked A, but dismissed the suit as to the land marked B on the ground of limitation, holding that, although the plot was a part of the re-formed land of which the plaintiffs' father held possession until it was diluviated, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove that the land was thrown up by the river within twelve years preceding the date of the suit, or that they held possession at any time within that period.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed.

The following judgments were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

WILSON, J.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca. The suit was brought by the appellants to recover certain chur lands, as being a re-formation on the side of their Chur Rajapore. There is no question that the plaintiffs' father (whose heirs they are) was the owner and in possession of Chur Rajapore until it was diluviated; that the various defendants, or their predecessors in title, were interested in various churs adjacent to Chur Rajapore; that Rajapore and other adjacent churs were, at dates which are disputed, diluviated; that re-formations have subsequently taken place; that, from time to time, as re-formation took place, attempts have been made by the parties interested to show that portions of the re-formations were on the site of their own churs; and that, in 1875, disputes having arisen about some re-formed land, the Deputy Magistrate attached certain lands, the extent of which is disputed, leaving the parties interested to sue in a Civil Court. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought this suit, joining as parties all the parties to the attachment-proceedings.

[228] The land claimed in the suit consisted of two plots, marked in the Amin's map A and B. As to plot A, the plaintiffs have obtained a decree, and that decree is not appealed against. As to plot B, two principal groups of defendants resisted the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants Nos. 4, 17, and 18, as interested in a chur known as Adma Munirabad, claimed so much of plot B as lies to the south of a done, indicated in the Amin's map as No. 1.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 claimed so much of plot B as lies to the north of that done as belonging to the chur Baboo Chur. The main defences were the same in both cases :

1st. It was denied that the lands in question were re-formations on the site of Rajapore.

2nd. It was alleged that, in the year 1869, the present plaintiffs, had, in a summary proceeding under s. 318 of the former Criminal Procedure Code, claimed these same lands, and their claim had been disallowed. And it was said that as they had not brought a suit within three years, their right was barred.

3rd. Each of these groups of defendants set up a title by adverse possession for more than twelve years under the ordinary law of limitation.

The lower Court held in favour of the plaintiffs upon each of the first two questions ; but, upon the third question, held in each case in favour of the defendants ; and accordingly dismissed the suit so far as it related to plot B.

The appellants dispute the finding of the lower Court upon the third question. The respondents support that finding. They also seek to support the decree of the Court below, on the ground that its findings upon the first and second questions were wrong.

The main questions for our decision are, whether the findings of the lower Court upon these questions are correct. Some other minor points have been raised which I shall notice subsequently.

Upon the first question, whether the lands in dispute are a re-formation on the site of Rajapore, I agree with the Court below. The survey map of 1859-60 shows at once that the plaintiffs' view of the position of Rajapore is approximately [229] correct. And the report and map of the Amin place the matter beyond doubt, if they can be trusted. But it is said that they are not to be trusted. I agree that the reports and maps of Amins in such cases should be examined with caution. In the present case, the work of the Amin bears marks of care and intelligence. He had with him the thak maps of the several thaks in question. He began his work, quite rightly, on the undiluviated lands of Shibsen on the east and north-east of Rajapore, where there were permanent marks easily ascertainable. Having thus obtained trustworthy starting points, he says :—" I have accordingly duly ascertained the distance between the land and the chur from the aforesaid stations, and having successively ascertained the original site of the mouzas mentioned by the parties according to the measurement and bearing of the thak from that place, I have correctly put down the same in the proper place in the map made by me, and demarcated the different mouzas with different colours." His map is before us and he has annexed his filed-book. It is said that his field-book is defective in not giving with sufficient clearness all the details of his measurement. It may be that some points in that field-book might be the better for further explanation. If so, that would have been a good reason for applying in the Court below to have the Amin called and examined. It is no reason why we should upset the finding of the Court below, in the absence of any circumstances throwing doubt upon the correctness of the Amin's method or the accuracy of his results.

The next question is, whether the suit is barred by reason of its not having been brought within three years of the order of the Magistrate in 1869. As to this, I agree with the Court below, that the identity of the land then in dispute with that now in dispute has not been established. All that appears is that, among the attempts made by various persons to identify parts of the land gradually re-forming, one was made by persons acting for the present plaintiffs to identify some land as Rajapore. The attempt failed, and the claim was dismissed. There is no reason to think that the land then claimed was, or could be, the same as that now in dispute.

[230] The next question is, with regard to each portion of plot B, whether this suit is barred by reason of twelve years' adverse possession. As to this the plaintiffs' case is, that the diluviation of their lands began about 1860, and was completed about 1865; that the re-formation began in 1871, and was completed about 1875. The defendants throw back both events to much earlier dates, and say that they have been in actual occupation of the lands in dispute for far over twelve years.

We have first to enquire upon which side the burden of proof lies. The Subordinate Judge cast the burden upon the plaintiffs, and held that it lay upon them to show, either that the lands were re-formed within twelve years, or that they had been in actual possession within that period. In this I think that the Subordinate Judge was in error.

As it has been contended that the authorities upon this subject are in conflict, it is necessary to consider the matter both from the point of view of principle and from that of authority.

Certain propositions of law upon the subject are undoubted.

It is not disputed that, as a general rule, where a plaintiff claims land from which he alleges he has been dispossessed, the burden is upon him to show possession and dispossession within twelve years—Maharajah Koowar v. Baboo Nund Loll Singh (1).

Proof of possession within twelve years does not necessarily mean proof of acts of ownership within that time. The nature of the proof of possession must depend on the nature of the case. In the case of a house actually occupied, or land under cultivation, or yielding a rent, proof of possession is easy. In many cases, as of lands incapable of cultivation, jungle or waste lands, unenclosed plots of various kinds, all the proof that can commonly be given is to show possession taken, or acts of ownership done, at some time, which possession will, in law, continue until the possessor by his conduct shows that he means to relinquish his possession, or he is excluded by some one else. These considerations, however, affect the mode of proof, the burden of proof. The general rule still is, that the plaintiff must prove that he has been dispossessed within twelve years; see Pandurang Govind v. Balkrishna Hari (2).

[231] But there are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies, may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour. We have to consider whether the present plaintiffs have succeeded in doing so, and for that purpose it is necessary to examine the decisions as to the burden of proof in the case of lands gradually diluviated and gradually re-formed.

As to such cases, a second proposition is, I think, beyond question, that when the diluviation has been more than twelve years before suit, the claimant, unless he can show possession since the re-formation, must at least show that he was in possession down to the date of diluviation.

A third proposition is also, I think, beyond dispute, that where the true owner is in possession at the time of diluviation, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the land continues submerged: probably also afterwards until he is dispossessed.

This proposition, however, would not be sufficient to shift the burden of proof. It would leave it upon the plaintiff; but would enable him to prove his case either by showing the dispossession to have been in fact within twelve years, or that the submergence had continued down to within twelve years, so that his possession cannot have been interfered with more than twelve years ago.

But then arises the question, whether we ought not to presume something further in favour of the plaintiffs, whether, when they have proved their possession down to the period of diluviation, and have shown the diluviation to have occurred at such a date and under such circumstances as in this case, we ought not to presume the submergence and with it the plaintiffs' possession to have continued until the contrary is shown. If this presumption can properly be made, then the burden is shifted to the defendants of showing adverse possession for twelve years.

Upon principle, I think, such a presumption may properly be made. The well-known presumption in favour of the continuance of a physical condition, in the ordinary course of things likely to continue, until the contrary is shown, is embodied in s. 114 of the Evidence Act, which section is followed by illustrations [232] and explanations. In the present case it appears, that the total area diluviated was very large, and the process of diluviation and re-formation gradual; that, at the date of the thak map of 1859, the river had not touched Rajapore; and from the survey map of 1859-60, that at that date it had affected a portion of that estate. The evidence shows beyond doubt that the process of diluviation went on afterwards. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, on principle, reasonable to presume that the lands in question continued submerged in March 1865 (which is the material date) until the contrary is shown.

The weight of authority seems to me in favour of the same view.

In the case of Mohunt Chattoorbhoj Bharti v. The Government of India (1), the plaintiffs proved that they were in possession of the lands in question in 1846, and that the lands were soon after that time diluviated. The suit was brought in 1869, and the Court (Garth, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) held, that the burden lay upon the defendants of proving that the suit was barred by limitation. In another case (Reg. App. No. 280 of 1877) it appeared, that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land in dispute up to the diluviation, which took place some time after 1858. The suit was brought in 1876. Pontifex and McDonell, JJ., held, that the burden lay on the defendant to show that the claim was barred.

In Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (2) the suit was in respect of soil which had been part of the bed of a lake, but which, by the gradual drying of the lake, had become cultivable land. The defendants relied, amongst other defences, upon limitation. The Privy Council having held first, that the property in the soil, and not a mere right of fishing, was in the plaintiffs, went on to hold further that it lay upon the defendants to show an adverse title by limitation. It does not appear to me that the Privy Council intended in this case to reverse its earlier ruling in the case to which I have already referred. But that Court does appear to me to have laid down a rule applicable to cases analogous to the case before it, which we are bound to follow in the present case, if it is properly within the analogy. And [233] I am unable to see any reasonable distinction between the case of land formed by the gradual drying up of a lake and that of land diluviated and then re-formed by the gradual action of a river.

(1) Reg. App. No. 185 of 1877, unreported.

The same rule was followed in a very recent case—Kally Churn Saho v. The Secretary of State (1)—before Garth, C.J., and White and Maclean, JJ.

Two cases have been referred to as authorities to a contrary effect. In Koomar Runjit Singh v. Schoene Kilburn (2), the plaintiffs claimed 700 bighas of land, a re-formation on their site. They alleged diluviation between 1263 and 1270; re-formation between 1270 and 1273; that they had been in actual possession in 1273, and been dispossessed in 1274. The suit was brought in 1876, corresponding to 1283. The Court (Jackson and McDonnell, JJ.) held that the burden of proof was governed by the ordinary rule as laid down in the case referred to in 8 Moore's P.C. And looking at the case as put forward by the plaintiffs themselves, a case of actual possession and dispossession of cultivable lands after their re-formation, this ruling does not seem to me inconsistent with the others to which I have referred. In this case further it was found that the plaintiffs had not been in possession since re-formation, and that the bulk of the land had been re-formed for more than twelve years. But a point was raised as to some 200 bighas (the exact amount and its situation not being ascertained) which the Court below was inclined to think might probably have been re-formed within twelve years. The learned Judges in this Court held, that it lay upon the plaintiffs to show which, if any, of the lands in dispute had so re-formed within twelve years. I am not satisfied that there is necessarily any inconsistency with the authorities I have considered, in holding, that where the plaintiffs made their claims upon one ground, and having failed in establishing that case, sought to recover a portion of their claim on a wholly different ground, it lay upon them to show how much they could apply the latter ground to.

In Mahomed Ibrahim v. Morrison (3), before Birch and Mitter, JJ., the plaintiffs claimed land formed by the recession [234] of a river, and at the time of suit under cultivation, as appertaining to their patni. The Court held the burden of proving that the land formed within twelve years, to lie on the plaintiffs. There is nothing in the report to show whether the plaintiffs claimed the land as a re-formation or as an accretion. If it was accretion, then the case has no bearing upon the present, for the presumption under consideration presupposes prior possession. Whether these two cases are, or are not, in harmony with the other authorities which have been examined, I think we are bound to follow those authorities and to hold that, in this case, the burden of proving the plaintiffs' suit to be barred by limitation lay on the defendants. [His Lordship then proceeded to consider the evidence, and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge so far as it related to the plot marked B on the Amin's map.]

FIELD, J.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for declaration of title to, and for possession of certain lands, which they alleged in their plaint to be re-formation on the site of and accretion to, their estate Roy Bahadoor Chur. This chur includes Chur Rajapore, Chur Ramchunderpore, and Chur Hogla. The quantity of land claimed by the plaintiffs in their plaint as first drawn, was 1,700 bighas, more or less; but after the Amin had made a local investigation and prepared a map, they amended their claim (paying additional court-fee), and the quantity now sought to be recovered by them is 3,250 bighas.

During the proceedings in the Court of first instance, the right to recover any portion of the land as an accretion to Roy Bahadoor Chur was abandoned, and the only title upon which the plaintiffs now ask to succeed, is that of re-formation on the original site of their estate.

The Subordinate Judge, adopting the Amin's map and the accuracy of his measurement, has found that the whole of the land included within the red boundary on that map, and comprised in plots A and B, is land re-formed on the original site of Roy Bahadoor Chur. He has given the plaintiffs a decree for plot A; but as to plot B he has held, that the plaintiffs are barred by limitation; and in respect of this plot he has [235] dismissed their case. He says in his judgment at page 184 of the printed paper book,—“I am, however, of opinion that the plaintiffs' claim to plot B is barred by the general limitation of twelve years. It is true that, according to the finding arrived at by the Amin after careful investigation, the said plot is a part of the re-formed land of Mouza Rajapore, of which their father had possession until it was completely washed away by the river Pudma; still, when the defendants plead that the re-formation took place more than twelve years ago, and that they (the defendants) have since been in possession thereof, it is incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove, for the purpose of removing the plea of general limitation, that the said plot was thrown up by the river within twelve years preceding the date of the suit, or that they held its possession at any time within that period. But the plaintiffs have not been able to show, or even to allege, that, after the disputed chur had formed, it was ever held in their possession; and their endeavour to prove that the re-formation took place within twelve years preceding the date of the suit, has failed in respect of the plot B.”

Now the first question which has been raised before us, and which it is necessary for us to decide, is whether the Subordinate Judge is right in thus unreservedly placing the burden of proof upon the plaintiffs. In the case of Radha Proshad Singh v. Ram Coomar Singh (1), decided by the Privy Council on the 29th November 1877, it was held, that the principle of Lopez's case is not applicable to land in which, by long possession or otherwise, another party has acquired an indefeasible title. The plaintiffs' case is, that the land was wholly submerged in 1865 and 1866; that re-formation began in 1871; and that the whole of the land which forms the subject of this suit was completely re-formed in 1874-1875. If this contention be correct, it is evident that, at the point of time, twelve years before the institution of this suit, the land in question was wholly submerged, and was not therefore capable of actual visible possession. The chief defendants contend that the land was re-formed as far back as 1861, and that they have been in possession, if not during the whole of the period which has elapsed [236] since 1861, at least for more than twelve years before the institution of this suit. If the defendants succeed in proving the case so set up by them, it is clear that, even if plot B is a re-formation on the site of the plaintiffs' estate, the present case falls within the principle of the case of Radha Proshad Singh v. Ram Coomar Singh (1), decided by the Privy Council. If, on the other hand, the plaintiffs are correct in saying that the land did not begin to be re-formed till 1871, it is clear that the defendants cannot, by adverse possession of twelve years, have acquired a good title; and that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in respect of plot B, as well as in respect of plot A. The question then arises, upon which side, in the first instance, should be laid the burden of proof? If the usual rule,—namely, that the burden of proof lies on the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue,—be applied, it may seem that the burden of proof should be laid upon the defendants, who allege that the land was in existence twelve years before the institution of the suit, rather than upon the plaintiffs who contend that it was not in existence at that time. It will, however, be more satisfactory to examine the question from a wider position. The general rule is, that when a plaintiff sues to recover possession of property, and is met with the plea of limitation, the burden of proof is on him to show that he has been in possession at some time within the period allowed by law after the cause of action has arisen, for bringing a suit upon such cause of action. This is the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Maharajah Koowur v. Baboo Nund Loll Singh (1); they say:—"The appellant is seeking to disturb the possession, admitted to have existed for about eleven years, of defendants, who insist on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit. It clearly lies on him to remove that bar by satisfactory proof that the cause of action accrued to him (for that is the way in which the Regulation puts it) on a dispossession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit, and, therefore, that he or some person through whom he claims, was in possession during that period. No proof of anterior title, such as would [237] be involved in the decision of the boundary question in his favour, can relieve him from this burden, or shift it upon his adversaries by compelling them to prove the time and manner of dispossession." In the case of Gossain Doss Koondoo v. Seroo Koomaree Debia (2), Couch, C.J., said:—"The plaintiff must show that he, or some one through whom he claims, has had possession within twelve years before the suit. If he sues for the recovery of immoveable property on the ground of having been dispossessed from it, he must show that he has come within twelve years from the time when his cause of action arose, the time when he was dispossessed. It is not enough for him to prove his title to the property, which is the subject of the suit, and leave it to the defendant to show that the suit is barred by the law of limitation by proving when the plaintiff was last in possession." The general rule enunciated in these cases has not, so far as I am aware, been doubted or shaken by the authority of more recent decisions. But an exception appears to have been grafted upon this general rule by certain decisions which I am now about to notice. In the case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis (3), decided by the Privy Council on the 6th July 1880, the plaintiff claimed certain lands included within the limits of a beel or lake. The land so claimed had become dry and cultivable during, at least, a part of the year. The plaintiff was held to be entitled, not merely to the right of fishery in the beel, but also to the soil of the beel. The proprietor of a neighbouring talook was the defendant, and he denied the plaintiff's title to the soil of the beel, and relied on adverse possession for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said:—"The question remains, whether the disputed land had or had not been occupied by the defendant for twelve years before the suit was instituted, so as to give him a title against the plaintiff by the operation of the Statute of Limitations. On this question, undoubtedly, the issue is on the defendant. The plaintiff has proved his title; the defendant must prove that the plaintiff has lost it by reason of his (the defendant's) adverse possession. The High Court came to the [238] conclusion that the defendant had not satisfied the burden of proof thrown upon him, and their Lordships are not prepared to reverse that judgment." Here there is nothing to show that the plaintiff had at any time been in possession of the dried-up soil of the beel, and so long as the soil remained submerged, it may well be that the possession was deemed to have followed the title. In appeal from Original Decree, No. 185 of 1877, decided by Garth, C.J., and Tottenham, J., on the 21st December 1878, the facts were as follows:—A portion of the land admittedly formed part of the plaintiffs' estate Madharpore as delineated on the Government map of 1846, and the Court was of opinion, that they had made out a prima facie case of title and possession up to the year 1846 to the lands demarcated as theirs on this map, and, therefore, to this disputed portion. The next question was, whether the plaintiffs had been in possession of this portion at any time within twelve years before the commencement of the suit. The Court, observing that the onus of proving such possession was undoubtedly on the plaintiffs, held that, as they had established a prima facie case of possession in 1846, such possession must, under the circumstances, be presumed to have continued until something was proved to have happened to put an end to it. "Take for example," it was said, "the case of a large tract of jungle land granted thirty years ago to a zemindar. He takes possession in the first instance, perhaps, by putting up a few boundary posts or by sending his agent to look over the property. Nothing is done to the land for the next twenty years. It remains in its primitive state of jungle. But then some wrong-doer brings a portion of it into cultivation, and after five or six years claims that portion as his own. The true owner then brings a suit to recover his property. How is he to show his possession within twelve years? He has exercised no direct acts of ownership over the property, and unless the possession which he had at first is presumed to continue, it would be impossible for him to enforce his rights."

"Now we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are not barred by [239] limitation from enforcing their claim to this portion of plot A for this reason. The land, which was a dry chur in 1858, was gradually covered by water, and, according to the case of both parties, gradually re-formed subsequently; and in fact even during the progress of this suit, re-formation on the southern boundary has still been proceeding. The plaintiffs in their plaint allege that the re-formation commenced in 1274. No doubt the defendants (in their written statement) and their witnesses attempt to put back the re-formation to an earlier date; and they have adduced in support of their case certain kabuliats, which they say were given by tenants for the cultivation of indigo. But we are of opinion that the evidence of the defendants is not so precise that we can say that those kabuliats apply to the whole or any particular part of the re-formed lands; they may very well have included only lands within plot D; and we think, in a case like the present, where the land has formed gradually on the plaintiffs' site after an equally gradual diluvia-tion, the whole process of diluvion and alluvion occurring sometime after 1858 (the date when possession was taken under the decree in the former suit), and before 1876 (when the plaint in this suit was filed), it lay rather on the defendants, than on the plaintiffs, where the exact date of re-formation was in doubt, to show when actual possession of the various portions of these re-formed lands was taken. As the plaintiffs were actually in possession up to the diluviation, and as upon re-formation it might be doubtful how soon the land would be fit for the purpose of cultivation, which indeed might depend on the nature of the crop, and as even upon the defendants' evidence it is doubtful whether the land had been fit for cultivation more than twelve years before suit, we think that in this case it did not lie on the plaintiffs to show they had been dispossessed within twelve years: and we cannot accept as satisfactory the evidence adduced by the defendants as to their possession for twelve years before suit."

I may also refer to the recent decision of this Court in Kally Churn Sahoo v. The Secretary of State (1).

[240] It appears to me that the principle to be gathered from these cases is, that although, according to the general rule, it lies upon the plaintiffs, who are met with the plea of limitation, to show their own possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit, when the property in dispute is capable of actual and visible possession, yet that, from the nature of the thing, an exception must be made to this general rule in the case of property which is not susceptible of actual and visible possession. In respect of this latter class of cases, it appears to be only reasonable to say that, when the title and possession have been proved to be in a certain person up to a certain point of time,—when there has been no transfer of the title to any third person,—and there is no evidence that possession was exercised by a person other than the person having the title, so long as actual visible possession was possible, the possession of the person having the title will be presumed to continue until the property has again become susceptible of actual visible possession. Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property which they possess. It may with equal reason be said, that if the ownership of property is proved and there is nothing to show that the possession of such property is with any person other than the owner, it may fairly be presumed to be with the owner. A presumption dispenses with or supplies the place of evidence. If the above be a reasonable presumption, it, takes the place, in a case like the present, of evidence to show the plaintiffs' possession within twelve years before suit in a property in which, from the nature of the thing, evidence of actual possession is impossible. There are a few cases which at first sight appear to conflict with the principle which I have endeavoured to evolve from the above cases. In the case of Koomar Kunjit Singh v. Schoene Kilburn (2), the plaintiff alleged that the lands had re-formed twelve years before the institution of the suit, and that he had exercised actual possession by sowing khesari. It is clear that the plaintiff here, by his own allegation, excluded a presumption which could only arise if the lands were not susceptible of cultivation and possession. In [241] the case of Gokool Kristo Sen Moonshee v. Davil (3), the land had been submerged, and after its re-appearance in 1271 the plaintiff had never been in possession. This being so, the plaintiff's suit failed, because he did not prove secundum allegata that his vendor had been in possession before the land disappeared or was diluviated. Apparently the Court thought that, if he had succeeded in proving that he or his vendor was in possession before the diluviation, his cause of action would have arisen when, upon the re-appearance of the land, he was prevented by the defendant from resuming actual possession.

This appears to be the real point of decision in this case; and if this is so, there is nothing which conflicts with the Privy Council decision or the other cases above quoted. In the case of Mahomed Ibrahim v. Morrison (1), reference was made to a class of cases which supported the proposition that when limitation is pleaded in respect of lands, which are either in a jungly or unculturable state, it is for the defendant to establish his plea by proving adverse possession for more than twelve years; and it was held, that that proposition could not be applied to land brought under cultivation; but that, in this latter case, the plaintiff, in order to get over the plea of limitation, must at least establish, that either the land in suit formed within twelve years, or was not in a fit state of cultivation within that period. It is not very clear whether this was a re-formation on the old site, and no question appears to have arisen as to which party was entitled to the site before the formation of the chur.

It appears to me, that none of these cases are in conflict with the principle which I have above adverted to, as deducible from the Privy Council case, and the other cases bearing upon the same point. If otherwise, the decisions which are in conflict with the Privy Council case must be taken to have been overruled by it. The conclusion to which I am then led is, that the burden of proof has, in this case, been improperly laid upon the plaintiffs, and that it should have been laid upon the defendants: in other words, that it is for the defendants to show that, as alleged by them, the lands were re-formed twelve or more years [242] before the institution of this suit, and have since been in their possession. [His Lordship then discussed the evidence and concurred in reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge as to plot B.]

Under s. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no person can be added as a plaintiff, unless he has previously consented thereto; and if a person objects to be added as a plaintiff, the proper course is to make him a defendant.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent and ejectment, instituted by Uma Sundari Dasí, widow of one Nilmadhub Datta, against the defendants, for the rent of a certain jote held by them under the joint family, of which the plaintiff abovenamed was one of the members. The plaintiff prayed, (i) that a decree should be passed for the whole arrears due with interest; (ii) that the proportionate share of the plaintiff should be awarded to her, together with the costs of the suit; (iii) for ejectment and the recovery of khas possession. The plaint also prayed that, as the defendants did not pay rent separately to the co-sharers, the other co-sharers might be joined as co-plaintiffs; and an application to that effect was made to the Court. Notice of this application was given to all the co-sharers, but only one of them, Nogendro Datta, appeared, and he opposed the application. On the 11th of January 1879, an order was passed making him and the rest of the co-sharers plaintiffs. In the words of the [243] Munsif,—“These last gave no express consent, but such consent was only presumed from their absence.”

One of the co-sharers so joined as plaintiff was admitted to be a lunatic, but he had not been adjudged to be so under Act XXV of 1858; and it was contended, that, as the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code with respect to persons of unsound mind were by s. 463 restricted to persons adjudged to be lunatics, the alleged lunatic could not sue by a next friend, and that, therefore, the suit must be dismissed, as all the co-sharers were not represented. On appeal, the Judge was not inclined to agree with the Munsif in his conclusion that the alleged lunatic could not sue as plaintiff, but he dismissed the appeal on the ground that the Munsif was wrong in adding the other co-sharers as plaintiffs without their express consent. The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose, for the appellant, argued, that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the co-sharers could not be added without their express consent; that the verification of one plaintiff would be sufficient, and therefore express consent would not be necessary. The lower Court should have allowed the suit to proceed under s. 30 of Act X of 1877. At any rate, the proper course for the Judge would have been to return the plaint for amendment with leave to bring a fresh suit, or to remand the case with directions to make the co-sharers defendants.

Baboo Lall Mohun Doss for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C.J.—We think that the Court below was not justified in dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The Munsif was undoubtedly wrong in rejecting the claim, because one of the parties who had been made a plaintiff was of infirm mind. The man had not been adjudicated a lunatic, and had not therefore lost his civil rights, and there was no reason why he should not have appeared either by vakeel or in [244] person; see 2 Wm. Saund., Rock v. Slade (1),

(1) 7 Dowl 22.

1881 and Gleddon v. Trebble (1). In this respect the District Judge was quite correct.

9 C.L.R. 13.

But the great mistake which was made by the Munsif was this.

One out of several co-sharers brought the suit, asking to have his co-sharers joined as plaintiffs. No objection upon the ground of the nonjoinder of these co-sharers appears to have been taken by the defendants; and therefore, if the plaintiff herself had not suggested the difficulty, the suit might have proceeded in the name of one plaintiff, and she might have recovered the whole rent.

Section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code says, that "all objections for want of parties or for joinder of parties who have no interest in the suit, should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases before the first hearing; and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived by the defendant."

The reason why the defendant in a case of this kind is entitled to have all the co-sharers made plaintiffs upon the record is this, that he contracted to pay his rent to them all jointly.

They are all entitled to the rent, and he has a right to look to all, and each of them for his costs, in case he should be successful in any suit which they may bring against him. But he must make his objection in proper time; and if he does not do so, the plaintiff who sues may recover the whole rent.

In this case, although no objection was taken by the defendants, the Munsif, at the plaintiff's suggestion, thought it right to add the names of all the co-sharers as plaintiffs, although they did not consent to being so joined.

It is clear that, by the terms of s. 32, he had no right to do this. No person is obliged to have his or her name added as plaintiff in a suit without his or her consent. And the justice of this rule is obvious because the suit may be improperly brought; and if a party were made plaintiff without his consent, he might also be made liable to costs.

If the defendants object that other parties should be joined as plaintiffs, and they refuse to be joined, the proper course is to make them defendants, so that they are all before the [245] Court, and the Court may make what order it considers just as to costs.

The principal mistake, therefore, which has been made in this case is, that the Munsif has joined the co-sharers as plaintiffs instead of defendants; and what the District Judge ought to have done, was to send the case back to the Munsif, in order that this mistake should be rectified by amendment, and that the suit should then be tried upon its merits.

We consider that we are bound to do now what the District Judge ought to have done; that is, to send the case back to the first Court, with directions that the persons who were made plaintiffs against their will should be made defendants, and that the case should be tried upon its merits. We think that the costs in all the Courts should abide the result.

Case remanded.

SUDISHT LAL (Plaintiff) v. MUSSAMUT SHEOBARAT KOER (Defendant). [10th February, 1881.]

Mukhtarnama—Pardanishin Woman—Extent of Liability—Account stated—Explanation of Document.

In order to charge a pardanishin woman upon an instrument or power purporting to have been executed by her, it is requisite that the person relying on such a document should give satisfactory evidence that it has been explained to, and understood by, her.

A mukhtarnama executed by a pardanishin woman appointed her husband to be her general mukhtar, and declared that "all acts done by the said mukhtar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others, executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deed of absolute sale," and so on, "shall be accepted by me."

[246] It was sought to render the principal liable, on an account stated by her husband as her mukhtar so empowered, for a debt, without proof that the money constituting it had been borrowed on her account.

Held, on the construction of the mukhtarnama, that the mukhtar had no authority to bind her by such a statement of account, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her behalf.

No implication of authority in the mukhtar to bind the woman by his stated account had arisen from the carrying on of a course of business. Accordingly, when the evidence of express authority failed, the statement of account by the mukhtar was insufficient to render the principal liable.

No evidence was given of the items lent, so as to establish an indebtedness independently of the account stated.

APPEAL from a decree of a Division Bench of the High Court of Bengal (25th June, 1878), reversing the decree of the Second Subordinate Judge of Zilla Mozufferpore (23rd December, 1876).

The question raised in this case was, whether the defendant, the respondent in this appeal, a pardanishin woman, who had constituted her husband to be her mukhtar, was liable for a debt for money lent upon a statement of account by him, without proof of the borrowing of the money on her account.

This question depended mainly on the construction and effect of the words of a mukhtarnama, given by the defendant to her husband, as to which the Courts in India differed.

The material parts of the mukhtarnama, and the facts of the case are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the husband, having authority under the mukhtarnama to admit such a debt as the one claimed, had done so in stating the account on behalf of his wife. A Divisional Bench of the High Court (L. S. Jackson and L. R. Tottenham, JJ.), in reversing that decision, said:—

"Now a very important matter for consideration in this case is, whether the defendant ever executed the mukhtarnama referred to by the plaintiff; and, if so, whether she authorized her husband, Ajudhya Pershad, to do that which he did in signing the settlement of account. Strictly speaking, the execution of that mukhtarnama is not proved in this case; but there can be little doubt, from the fact of its having been registered and having been used frequently on various public occasions before [247] various public officers, that Ajudhya Pershad really had such a mukhtarnama from his wife. Whether that instrument authorized him to take, without her authority, so serious a step as to sign an acknowledgment of indebtedness of nearly Rs. 30,000, is an entirely different question. It appears to us, that the mukhtarnama itself does not authorize such a proceeding. It does not differ very much from the formal power-of-attorney which mukhtars generally use for the purpose of representing their principals in formal proceedings. It makes no reference whatever to any banking business, nor does it contain any authority to sign such a document as that produced. There is not so much as a suggestion that the defendant was ever informed what the consequence of her authorizing a separation of her account from that of Sheoraj would be, or that she ever had the least notion that so large a liability as this was to be passed over to her. Considering that the defendant was a pardanishin lady,—that she is still young,—that at the time of her father and her mother's death she was an infant,—that her affairs, during her minority, were managed ostensibly by her sister, but in reality by a person who has since been dealt with by the Criminal Court and sentenced to transportation,—that when she came of age her affairs were taken into the hands of her young husband, who was only eighteen years of age,—we think the Court would be justified in requiring the strictest proof and observance of all formal precautions before it holds the defendant answerable. There appears to be the strongest reason to believe that, throughout his dealings, Ajudhya Pershad has not had the defendant's interest at heart. He has been making use of her property without the least regard to her benefit, and with a view to his own advantage. It appears, in fact, that he is actually in partnership with the plaintiff in one branch of business, viz., that relating to saltpetre; and it is actually stated, that the funds for carrying on that business in partnership with the plaintiff were put down to the debit of the defendant's account. It may be that, in respect of an ancestral banking business carried on not very prudently or successfully, during the defendant's minority, by her sister or in her sister's name, some liabilities did arise; and if those [248] liabilities had been fairly and properly brought before the Court, and the defendant had been shown that she did owe something to the plaintiff, the Court would have assisted the plaintiff in recovering that amount. In fact it is more than probable, that the defendant herself would not have resisted. But looking at the shape in which the plaintiff's suit was brought before the Court, and considering the very large sum demanded from the defendant on the strength of a document executed without sufficient authority in favour of the husband, it seems to us, that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have given the plaintiff the decree which he has given, that that decree ought to be set aside, and the appeal allowed with costs."

On this appeal

Mr. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the appellant.

Mr. R. V. Doyne for the respondent.

For the appellant it was contended, that the authority of the husband, as duly constituted, mukhtar of his wife, to state an account on her behalf, had been made out.

Counsel for the respondent was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR M. E. SMITH.—This is an action brought by Sudisht Lal, a mahajun carrying on his business at Mozufferpore, against Mussamut Sheobarat Koer, to recover a sum of Rs. 23,470 and interest, upon the footing of a stated and settled account. The plaintiff is based entirely upon an account which, it alleges, had been settled, not by the defendant herself, but by her husband, Ajudhya Pershad, who, it is said, had authority from her to state and settle accounts. At the outset it may be noticed that no evidence was given of the items of the account so as to establish an indebtedness independently of the account stated. This omission seems to have been intentional, for the plaintiff himself, and two of his gomashas, who might have given that evidence if a debt really existed, were not called.

The circumstances which preceded the action may be shortly stated. Ram Dyal Misser, who is now dead, carried on a [249] banking business in the same place as the plaintiff, at Mozufferpore. He died in the year 1857, leaving a widow and two daughters, of whom the defendant is one. His widow died in the year 1860. The elder sister, whose name is Sheoraj Koer, had married Durga Persad Tribaidi. The defendant had married the person already named, Ajudhya. The banking business of Misser was carried on by the widow during her lifetime, and there is some evidence that it was also carried on after her death by the two daughters, the defendant being at her mother's death a minor, and the husband of the elder sister, Sheoraj, carrying on the business on her behalf and on that of her infant sister. The defendant, Mussamut Sheobarat, became of age in February 1869, and shortly after her coming of age it appears that the banking account was separated; whatever may have been due at that time from the two sisters to the plaintiff's firm was divided, and one-half carried to the debit of each of the sisters. Although there is some evidence that the sisters carried on a banking business, there is really no satisfactory evidence that such a business was carried on by the defendant after the separation, and certainly none that it was carried on with her knowledge and authority. However, it is alleged on the part of the plaintiff that such a business was carried on, and was managed by Ajudhya, her husband, and the account which is sued on is said to have been signed by him as the adjustment of a banking account. The account so signed is set out at length in the record, and begins with this item: "Credit. Former balance, principal, and interest, as per former chitta, for the year 1280, Rs. 21,933-14a. 0p." There are other items and interest, and some items on the other side of the account, resulting in a balance of Rs. 23,405-13a., the amount for which the action is brought, plus a sum of Rs. 50, as to which no evidence whatever exists. The plaintiff's claim to recover this sum rests entirely upon the admission which was made by Ajudhya, the husband, in settling this account. Not only is there no proof of indebtedness independently of the account, but there is not sufficient evidence to satisfy their Lordships that a banking business was carried on by the defendant; whilst there is some evidence that Ajudhya was [250] carrying on business with the plaintiff's firm on his own account, and that he had purchased with the plaintiff a saltpetre property which they were working together.

In this state of the evidence it is plain that no authority can be inferred from the fact that a banking business was carried on to the knowledge of the defendant. The authority, therefore, upon which the plaintiff must rely as having been supplied to Ajudhya, depends entirely upon the mukhtarnama which has been given in evidence; indeed, that is the authority on which his case has been rested. This mukhtarnama is said to have been executed by the defendant shortly after her coming of age. Their Lordships desire to observe that there is no satisfactory evidence that this mukhtarnama was explained to the defendant in such a way as to enable her to comprehend the extent of the power she was conferring upon her husband. In the case of deeds and powers executed by pardanishin ladies, it is requisite that those who rely upon them should satisfy the Court that they have been explained to, and understood by, those who execute them. There is a want of satisfactory evidence of that kind in the present case. But their Lordships do not desire to rest their decision upon this ground. They are disposed to look at the mukhtarnama which was received by the Subordinate Judge, and was construed by the High Court, although that Court expressed some doubt as to whether if it ought to have been construed differently from the view they took of it, they should have acted upon it. This instrument is said by the High Court to be very nearly in the terms of the ordinary mukhtarnama given to mukhtars to transact business and to bring and defend suits. Undoubtedly there is much in its language which is of the ordinary kind; but there are some special powers conferred by it, and it is upon them that the plaintiff most relies for the authority of the husband. The document begins with a recital:—"Whereas often cases connected with monetary transactions, as loans, purchase and sale of properties, atanas, hebanamas, ticca pattas with zurpeshgi and without zurpeshgi, and realization of decretal money, in which sometimes I, the declarant, am plaintiff and sometimes defendant, remain pending decision, and may be instituted in future [251] in the Civil, Revenue, and Criminal Courts, as well as in the Calcutta High Court; that is, whereas I, the declarant, am under the necessity to attend to all business, such as monetary transactions, purchase and sale of property, preparations of deeds of gifts and grants, leases with or without zurpeshgi, and execution of deeds of absolute sale and recovery of decretal money, viz., all the village and Court affairs—filing answers in appeal cases and taking out execution of decrees in the Courts"—enumerating them—"by engaging pleaders and mukhtars when required in the cases instituted in the Civil Courts,"—this is very much the language of an ordinary mukhtarnama. It goes on:—"As also realizing decretal money, and the money covered by bonds from debtors, by executing receipts and acquittances on behalf of me, the declarant, according to the account of the mahajani shop, saltpetre godown, and zemindari villages." The words, "according to the account of the mahajani shop," do not necessarily import a statement that she was then carrying on that business. She was entitled to a share of whatever was due to the old business, and if it became necessary to sue for such debts, the mukhtar would be empowered to sue for them and to give discharges to the debtors. Then the operative part of the instrument is:—"I, the declarant, therefore, of my own free will and accord, appoint my husband, Ajudhya Pershad Sukul, my general mukhtar,"—the generality of that language, "appoint my husband my general mukhtar," must be construed and, if necessary, controlled, by what comes afterwards,— "and declare to the effect that all acts done by the said mukhtar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others; executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deeds of absolute sale," any so on, "shall be accepted by me." The words that are most relied on are :—" and declare to the effect that all acts done by the said mukhtar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others." If it had been proved that the husband had contracted loans and obtained advances on behalf of his wife, it may be that, under this power-of-attorney, she would be bound by his acts, as being within the scope of his authority. But it would have to be shown, not only that he borrowed the [252] money, but that it was borrowed for her. If it had appeared that it was taken for his own purposes, and the plaintiff who advanced the money knew it, the wife would not be charged with it. In the present case, without any proof that money had been borrowed at all, and certainly with none that it had been borrowed on her account, the defendant is sought to be fixed with a large debt by a mere statement of account. Their Lordships think upon the construction of the mukhtarnama that the husband, Ajudhya, had no authority to bind her by such a statement, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her account. This is the view taken by the High Court.

Their Lordships must not be supposed to lay down that, when an agent is appointed to manage a banking business, and is invested with the powers of a manager of that business, a statement of account made by him in the regular and ordinary way of business would not be evidence against his principal : that question does not arise on this record. It is enough for them to say that, in this case, there is no sufficient proof that the business was carried on with the defendant's knowledge and by her authority, and therefore no implication founded on the course of business can arise. The evidence of express authority also fails.

Their Lordships will humbly recommend Her Majesty to affirm the judgment under appeal, and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

1876. The bond was executed on behalf of Poorna Chunder Sen by the other defendants, who held a power-of-attorney from him. The main question was, whether authority to sign such a bond was given admitting that the debt for which the bond was given was a debt for which Poorna Chunder Sen would have been liable had a proper suit been brought in proper time. The power-of-attorney was in the following terms:—

“Know all men by these Presents, that I, Poorna Chunder Sen, son of Ram Mohan Sen, deceased, of Chittagong, now residing in Cirencesster, in the County of Gloucester, England, zemindar by profession (for divers considerations and good causes me hereunto moving), have made, ordained, constituted, and appointed, and by these Presents do make, ordain, constitute, and appoint my uncle, Babu Ram Sunder Sen, and my cousins, Gour Chunder Sen and Ram Chunder Sen of Chittagong, in the district of Bengal, or any of them, my true and lawful attorneys and [254] attorney for me and in my name to give all kinds of pattas to tenants,—to sell or mortgage, and for registering the same, any part of my estate at their or his discretion for the payment of my debts,—to ask, demand, recover, and receive any sum due to me,—to pay any amount due by me, giving, and by these presents granting, to my said attorneys and attorney, my sole and full power and authority to take, pursue, and follow such legal course, or any other course at their or his discretion, towards recovery, receiving, and obtaining of any dues and payment of my debts as I myself might or could do were I personally present; and in my name to make, sign, seal, and deliver any document necessary to be taken or given; and further, to do, perform, and finish, for me and in my name all singular things and thing which shall be or may be necessary, entirely as I the said Poorna Chunder Sen, in my own person, might or could do in about the premises, ratifying, confirming, and allowing whatever my said attorneys or attorney shall wilfully do or cause to be done in and about the execution of the abovementioned objects. In witness whereof, &c.”

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant Poorna Chunder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohing Roy, for the appellant, argued that the power-of-attorney did not justify the giving of the bond.

Baboo Chunder Madub Ghose for the respondent.—There was a special power given in this case. “Debts” in the power-of-attorney mean family debts, and this bond was a family debt for which Poorna is liable. Power is given to sell or mortgage, and this includes entering into a bond for payment. Besides this authority is given to members of the defendant’s family, and should not be construed as strictly as if given to a stranger.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C.J.—Two questions arise on this appeal: one is purely a question of law, and the other a question of fact.

We will deal with the question of law first, namely, whether under the power-of-attorney which was given by the defendant to his uncle and two cousins on the 25th October 1875, he gave [255] them any authority to enter into such a bond as that which forms the subject of this suit. This question depends upon the language and the true meaning of the power.

Now it has been contended by the learned pleader for the plaintiff, that authority was given to the attorneys to sign such a bond in one or other of two ways. He says, first, that the power authorizes Ram Sunder Sen and others to sell or mortgage any part of Poorna Chunder Sen's estate for the payment of his debts; and that there being a power to sell or mortgage his estate for the payment of his debts, there is also a power given by implication to give a simple bond for the same purpose. But we are bound to construe the language of an instrument of this kind with reasonable strictness; and we think it is impossible to say that a power to sell or to mortgage property for payment of debts includes a power to give a simple money-bond, which is an instrument of a totally different nature, and which in fact is not a means of paying debtors at all.

Then, secondly, it is argued, that the latter portion of the power gives authority to execute such a bond. The words are:—

"Granting to my attorneys full power and authority to take such legal or any other course at their discretion towards recovery, receiving, and obtaining of any dues and payment of my debts, as I myself might or could do were I personally present." It is contended that these words confer upon the attorneys authority to take any course, legal or otherwise, for the purpose of paying the debts of Poorna Chunder. But in fact, they mean a totally different thing. The clause relates evidently to obtaining payment of the debts due to Poorna Chunder, and not to paying debts due from him. [The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of this report.]

Appeal allowed.

SHEIKH AKBAR (Plaintiff) v. SHEIKH KHAN AND ANOTHER (Defendants).^{*}
[31st May, 1881.]

Promissory Note—Bill of Exchange—Original Consideration—Evidence—Stamp—Account stated—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), schedule ii, cl. 64

When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person.

But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, as for instance, when, in consideration of A depositing money with B, B contracts by a promissory note to repay it with interest at six months' date; here there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if for want of a proper stamp or some other reason the note is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money.

The period of limitation for suits on accounts stated is the same, whether the accounts are stated verbally or in writing, and is governed by Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, cl. 64.

THIS was a reference from the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Dacca, the material portions of which are as follows :—

"This is a suit to recover Rs. 225 on a likkhan, or writing, dated the 10th December 1877, payable within two months of that date, under which the plaintiff is said to have deposited Rs. 225 with the defendants. The cause of action is expressly stated to have arisen two months after that date, or otherwise the suit would be barred by limitation, as it was instituted on the 7th February 1877, or more than three years after date of [257] deposit. The likkhan was not filed with the plaint, on the express plea that it was on the record of a criminal prosecution which the plaintiff had previously instituted against defendant No. 1 on a charge of criminal breach of trust.

"At the trial it was alleged that the document was subsequently taken out of the criminal record and handed over to plaintiff's vakeel's mohurrir, who accidentally lost it. Plaintiff, therefore, filed an unattested copy of the likkhan which he had kept, and attempted to prove the contents by secondary evidence. It will be seen that the document was a promissory note as per definition (25), s. 3, Act VIII of 1869, which governed it. That being so, it required a stamp duty of annas three according to art. 2 of sch. i of the said Act, being payable otherwise than on demand. It is, however, admitted on both sides that there was an adhesive stamp of one anna only affixed on the document. That being the case, the first question that arises is, whether the document was admissible in evidence ; and if not, whether secondary evidence of the passing of consideration is admissible."

The learned Judge, having discussed this point, decided that secondary evidence was not admissible on the authority of Ankus Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (1), Prosunno Nath Lahiree v. Tripoora Sunduree Dabee (2) ; but he considered there was a conflict between those cases and the case of Golap Chand Marwaree v. Thakurani Mohokkoom Koooree (3) on the question as to whether independent evidence of the consideration for the note should be allowed to be given. He then continued :

"The first question for reference, therefore, is, whether the plaintiff in this case is entitled to recover the amount merely on proving that the original consideration passed, irrespective of the roka or promissory note given in acknowledgment thereof.

"Then arises another question, namely, when did the cause of action arise in this case, and whether the suit was not barred by limitation, supposing that Golap Chand Marwaree's case (3) governed it? If it was a case of actual deposit of money, and three years' limitation applied to it and if the time was to be computed from the date of deposit, it is perfectly clear that the suit, [258] being brought nearly two months after three years of the date of the likkhan, was barred by limitation. Article 60 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply, because this is not a case of actual deposit at all.

(3) 3 C. 314.

From the evidence on both sides it appears, that the plaintiff had a case against his brother's widow for a share of assets left by that brother on his death. That case was compromised for a sum of Rs. 250, of which Rs. 25 was paid then and there, and Rs. 225 could not be raised without interfering with a karbar which that brother left, and which the second defendant, that widow's brother, managed on her behalf, and whose co-partner the first defendant was. According to their notions of legal propriety in order to make the compromise valid, plaintiff gave a registered receipt to that widow (Sandal Bibi) on that day (10th day of December 1877) in full acquittance, and the defendant agreed by this promissory note to pay plaintiff the remaining sum of Rs. 225 within two months, the private understanding being that the sum would be paid gradually from the proceeds of the karbar. This suit has been brought after such lapse of time, because defendant No. 1, who left the karbar about a year and-a-half ago, has fallen out with the widow Sandal Bibi, the sister-in-law of the plaintiff."

The learned Judge then went on to say, that he took the transaction to be one of loan merely, but not being quite satisfied as to the correctness of his decision, he determined to refer the point, and therefore dismissed the suit on the second ground, contingent upon the opinion of the High Court. The second point for reference was,—What period of limitation was applicable to the case, assuming that the case of Golap Chund Marwaree (1) applied to it, and from what date that period was to be computed?

Mr. W. M. Das for the plaintiff.—The taking of the promissory note is no objection to our recovering in this suit: Clay v. Crowe (2) and Wain v. Bailey (3). We should be allowed to give independent evidence of the consideration. [GARTH, C.J.—The question is, have you not taken the promissory note in discharge of the claim, and not merely on account of a debt? You gave a receipt in full discharge of the amount. [259] Besides, a compromise of this kind is equivalent to an account stated, and looking at it in that way, you would be barred by limitation, would you not?]

Babu Rajendronath Bose, for the defendants, argued, that taking the suit as upon a verbal account stated, it came under Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, cl. 64.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—We have taken time to consider our judgment in this case, not because we had any doubt as to the result of the decision in the lower Court being correct, but because several points and authorities have been dealt with there, which appear to require some explanation.

In the first place we think it clear that the document in question was not admissible in evidence. It was a copy of a lost promissory note, which was itself inadmissible as being insufficiently stamped; and the copy, of course, could not be received in evidence any more than the original.

Whether evidence of the consideration for the note was admissible depends upon the circumstances under which the note was given; and it is upon this part of the case that we think the Judge in the Court below has not quite understood the meaning of the authorities to which he refers.

When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold, or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person. In such cases the bill or note is said to be taken by the creditor on account of the debt, and if it is not paid at maturity, the creditor may disregard the bill or note and sue for the original consideration. (See James v. Williams (1) and other cases mentioned in Addison on Contracts, 3rd edn., page 1204.) The cases of Clay v. Crowe (2) and Wain v. Bailey (3) cited in argument before us by Mr. Das were of this nature.

But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, as for instance, when, in consideration of A depositing money with B, B contracts by a promissory note to repay it with interest at six months' date, here there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note, and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if for want of a proper stamp or some other reason the note is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money. Of this nature were the cases referred to by the Judge of the lower Court: Ankur Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Mathub Chunder Ghose (4) and Prosunno Nath Lahiree v. Tripoora Soonduree Dabee (5). The case to which he refers, decided by Kennedy, J., apparently belongs to the former class: and in Farr v. Price (6), all that Lord Kenyon ruled was, that if, on the new trial, the plaintiff could prove his claim under the common counts,—that is to say independently of the note, he might recover. There is no doubt as to the principle of these authorities. The difficulty often is to ascertain, as a matter of fact, to which class any particular case belongs.

It will be found that one very material and practical distinction between the two classes of cases, where the bill or note is not properly stamped and lost, as it has been here, consists in this: that in the former class, namely, where the cause of action is complete before the bill or note is given, the onus of proving the bill or note is generally thrown upon the defendant; as thus, suppose the plaintiff's claim is for goods sold, and he proves at the trial the sale of the goods and the price. This constitutes his prima facie case. The defendant says, "yes, but I gave you a promissory note for the price of those goods." The defendant is then bound to prove the note, but he cannot do so, because it [261] is lost and unstamped. On the other hand, in the latter class of cases, where the cause of suit is inseparable from the giving of the bill or note, it is obvious that the onus of proving the lost instrument must fall upon the plaintiff, and that he cannot make out a prima facie case without proving it. Now, applying this principle to the present case, we understand the facts to be these: The plaintiff had a claim against the defendants for the value of a share in a partnership business, and it was verbally agreed between them that, in settlement of that claim, Rs. 250 should be taken as the value of the share, which sum was to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff. The defendants did in fact give the plaintiff Rs. 25 in part-payment of that sum, but they were unable at that time to pay the rest. So far the transaction appears to have consisted of a settlement of an open claim at an agreed sum, and the plaintiff might have sued for that sum as upon an account stated without regard to the promissory note.

But then came the giving of the note, which the lower Court treats, and we think properly treats, as a sort of loan transaction. The plaintiff gave the defendants a receipt for the remaining Rs. 225, in return for which the defendants gave the plaintiff this promissory note. It was, therefore, a loan of the Rs. 225 to the defendants upon the terms contained in the promissory note, and as there was no loan independently of the note, the note itself was the best evidence of the transaction, and as it could not be proved for want of a proper stamp, the plaintiff could not recover upon it.

But then, secondly, could the plaintiff recover the Rs. 225 as upon the account stated? We think he could not, for two reasons:—

1st.—He had given the defendants a receipt for that sum, allowing them to retain it upon the terms of the note; and he had thus converted his original claim upon the account stated into a claim upon the note.

2nd.—His claim upon the account stated, if he had any, was barred by limitation.

It was ingeniously suggested in argument on behalf of the plaintiff, that as art. 64 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act says nothing in the third column as to accounts stated by word of [262] mouth, that article must be considered as applicable only to accounts stated in writing, and that as no special period of limitation is prescribed for suits upon accounts stated orally, the period of limitation for such suits would be six years. It is certainly difficult to understand, what the Legislature could have intended by this omission, but we think that, giving a reasonable construction to art. 64, we must consider that the second column means to fix three years as the period of limitation in all suits upon accounts stated. To prescribe a limitation of three years in suits upon accounts stated in writing, and six years in suits upon accounts stated orally, would be an obvious absurdity.

It was further contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that, as by the promissory note the plaintiff gave the defendants two months' time to pay the Rs. 225, limitation ought not to run till the expiration of that time. But the obvious answer to this is, that the promissory note is not proved, and that it cannot be used for extending the time for payment of the Rs. 225 any more than for any other purpose.

In the result, therefore, we find that the judgment of the lower Court is correct, and although it is no doubt an extremely hard case upon the plaintiff, we think that his suit has been rightly dismissed.

Since this judgment was written, Mr. Das has drawn our attention to the case of The Eastern Financial Association v. Pestanji Cursetji Skroff (1), in which Couch, C.J., who was sitting alone, apparently gave the plaintiffs an opportunity of paying the additional duty and the penalty in the case of a promissory note payable after date. The plaintiffs, however, declined to pay the additional stamp; the attention of the learned Chief Justice does not appear to have been drawn to the provisions of the Stamp Act, and certainly, as far as we can see, the point was not argued.

We find, however, a decision in this Court by Phear and Morris, JJ. —Nandan Misser v. Chatterbati (1)—in which the precise point which arises here was argued, and in which those learned Judges held that, having regard to s. 28 of the Stamp Act of 1869, a promissory note payable after date could [263] not be stamped with an additional stamp. We find also that Mr. Justice Wilson has decided the point in the same way, and we have not the least doubt of the correctness of that view.

As the point is a technical one, and as the merits of the case seem undoubtedly to be with the plaintiff, we make no order as to costs.

Note.—In the case of Golap Chund Marwaree v. Thakurani Mohokoom Kooaree (the facts of which are not fully reported in I L.R., 3 Cal., 314), it appears from the plaint that the second defendant, Mittaram Sahoo, had lent to the first defendant, Thakurani Mohokoom Kooaree, Rs. 1,500, on account of which the latter gave an unstamped promissory note to Mittaram Sahoo, who endorsed it for value to the plaintiff. The Court of first instance refused to admit the note in evidence, and also refused to allow the plaintiff to summon Mittaram Sahoo to produce his books in order to show therefrom that Thakurani Mohokoom Kooaree was his debtor for the amount for which the note was given.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice McDonell and Mr. Justice Field.

HURO PROSAD ROY (Plaintiff) v. WOMATARA DEBEE (Defendant).^{*}
[15th February, 1881.]

Suit for Enhancement—Grounds of Enhancement—Increased Value of Produce—Evidence to Prove.

In a suit for enhancement of rent, the plaintiff, among other grounds, contended that the value of the produce of the land had increased, and called witnesses belonging to the cultivating class, who stated from memory the prices which had prevailed in the locality for a number of years. The District Judge considered this evidence to be no safe guide to the value of produce, which he held, could only be proved by traders and merchants with books of accounts, by which their memory could be refreshed and tested,--

Held, that the evidence adduced was relevant and entitled to consideration.

[264] There is a material difference between a case in which a Judge has assigned one bad reason for believing or disbelieving a particular piece of evidence, while he has given one or more good reasons for the same belief or disbelief; or a case in which, putting this particular piece of evidence wholly aside, enough remains to support the judgment, and a case in which the essential question, or one of the essential questions, to be decided rests upon the evidence believed or disbelieved regarded as of great value, or considered worthless, for a reason which is unsound and unsustainable.

MR. Evans, Baboo Bhowany Churn Dutt and Baboo Opendro Chunder Bose, for the appellant.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, Baboo Omerendro Nath Chatterjee and Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter, for the respondent.

The facts of this case fully appear from the judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) which was delivered by ^{*} Appeals from Appellate Decree, Nos. 2413 to 2415 of 1879, against the decree of A. T. Maclean, Esq., Judge of the 24-Pargannas, dated the 14th August 1879, modifying the decree of Babu Brojendro Coomar Seal, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 26th May 1879.

JUDGMENT.

MCDONELL, J.—This is a suit for enhancement of rent. The defendant is a tenant, under the plaintiff, of a holding, which originally consisted of 1,202 bighas, and the rent of which was originally fixed at Rs. 241-1-1. Three grounds of enhancement were set out in the plaint. The first ground is, that the quantity of land held by the defendant is more than that for which rent was formerly paid. He says, that the quantity of land is now 1,900 instead of 1,202 bighas. The second ground is, that the productive powers of the land have increased; and the third ground is, that the value of the produce has increased.

As to the first two grounds there is no question in the present appeal, and the third ground is the only one with which we have to deal. That prices have, within the last twenty, thirty, or forty years, increased considerably in these provinces is a matter as to which few reasonable people have any doubt. At the same time, in any particular case, it is necessary that evidence of this increase of price be produced before the Court which has to decide the question of enhancement; and this evidence must be such as the law declares to be relevant and admissible.

In the present case, the evidence which was produced before the Subordinate Judge to prove the increase of the price or [265] value of the produce was the testimony of a number of witnesses belonging to the cultivating class, who stated from memory the prices which, to their knowledge, have prevailed in the locality for a number of years back. The Subordinate Judge dealt with the testimony of these witnesses, and upon this evidence he came to a certain conclusion. Whether upon this evidence this conclusion was right or wrong, is a question into which we do not propose to enter. The case then came on appeal before the District Judge of the 24-Pargannas. The learned District Judge in his judgment first refers to certain arithmetical errors in the calculations of the Subordinate Judge. He then notices certain matters which formed the subject of a cross appeal, and observes that the defendant contended that the extra expenses of protection of the land from salt water and of cutting and conveying crops to market absorbed the extra profits. He then notices a point, which was the subject of argument in the course of the hearing of the appeal, namely, that the Subordinate Judge was incorrect in his method of striking an average. In this Court it has been said that ten years is too long a period for a fair average, and that five years is a reasonable period. The Judge then cursorily refers to certain former cases instituted for enhancement of the rent of the lands which form the subject of the present suit. Having thus noticed these points, he then, without definitely disposing of any of them, proceeds as follows:—"First as to the evidence offered by plaintiff to prove increased value and produce. Eight witnesses were examined, none of them hold under defendant; generally speaking, they hold neighbouring land. They appear to be substantial cultivators with retentive memories. The first gives the price of grain thirty-four years ago, and generally gives a comparison between prices now and then and intermediately. The rest are much the same; and the Subordinate Judge sweeps all their evidence away, and adopts some of the figures of one witness, Panch Cowree. I confess I cannot understand why Panch Cowree is selected, or why, apparently, his highest figure is to be taken. The fact is, this sort of evidence ought not to satisfy any Court of the relative value of produce in any given period. I do not know a more difficult subject of inquiry, [266] and I have frequently held—and I see no reason for change of opinion—that the price of grain during a short or long series of years must be proved by the evidence of men who have something more than memory to fall back upon. We have nothing to do with the quantity of produce, in which case the evidence of practical cultivators might be of more value than that of grain dealers. Value of produce can and should be proved by traders and merchants with books of accounts by which memory could be refreshed and tested. I shall, therefore, hold that the evidence in this case is no safe guide to value of produce, and cannot be acted upon."

Now it has been contended on the part of the appellant, that the District Judge has here prescribed a general rule as to the evidence to be given in this class of cases; that he has in fact said that he will not consider or take into account any evidence which consists merely of the oral testimony of witnesses of the cultivating class; and that the only evidence which he will regard as relevant in an inquiry of this kind, is the evidence of traders and merchants with books of accounts, by referring to which they may refresh their memory. It is said that the Judge cannot thus make for himself new rules of evidence; and that it is our duty to set aside a judgment based upon reasoning which starts with a mistaken view of the relevancy of evidence.

On the other hand, it has been argued that the remarks of the District Judge, which we have above quoted, were not intended to lay down any general rule as to the kind of evidence relevant in this class of cases; but they are to be read merely as observations dealing with the witnesses and the evidence in this particular case, and stating the grounds upon which the Judge considers this evidence to be unworthy of credit. And it has been further contended that, as the Judge has disbelieved this evidence, we are bound by this finding and cannot on second appeal question the Judge's disbelief.

It appears to us that even if the District Judge did not say, or intend to say, that he would absolutely refuse to consider evidence of the nature of that produced by the plaintiff, he has yet, in his strong feeling of preference for another species of evidence not produced, virtually done this so far as the present [267] appellant is concerned; that he has substantially omitted to consider the evidence upon the record, and this, for a reason which cannot be supported—the reason, namely, that the fact to be proved ought to be proved by evidence of another kind than that produced. We entertain no doubt that in thus putting aside and omitting to consider the relevant evidence actually produced upon the essential question in the case, the District Judge committed an error in law which we are competent, and indeed bound, to deal with on second appeal. Some cases have been cited to us, to show that this Court has repeatedly refused to interfere on second appeal where the Judge of a lower Appellate Court has given an erroneous and improper reason for disbelieving or setting no value upon evidence. There are, however, many cases which support a different view. M. S. Degumber Dossee v. Kissendhur Nundy (1), Gunee Biswas v. Sreegopal Paul Chowdhry (2), Ram Dass Saha v. Manmahini Dasi (3), Sundhaban Mohunt v. Shurut Chunder Roy (4), M. S. Ecop Narainee Kooer v. Ressel Tewaree (5), Surrosutty Dossee v. Umbika Nund Biswas (6), *Sheo Pursun Pandey v. Chand Monee Dosse v. Obhoy Churn Mal (1), Abdul Rohman v. Bibee Sofy Mikhayesh Saheba (2), Bustee Sahoo v. Jeo Narain Singh (3), Bibee Ameerun v. Shaikh Cherag Ali (4), Hunsa Kooer v. Sheo Gobind Raoot (5). Without attempting to reconcile the decisions on this point, which can be properly estimated only with reference to the facts of the particular cases, we may observe that there is a material difference between a case in which a Judge has assigned one bad reason for believing or disbelieving a particular piece of evidence, while he has given one or more good reasons for the same belief or disbelief; or a case in which, putting this particular piece of evidence wholly aside, enough remains to support the judgment, and a case in which the essential question, or one of the essential [268] questions, to be decided rests upon the evidence believed or disbelieved, regarded as of great value or considered worthless for a reason which is unsound and unsustainable. In the case now before us, evidence such as that to which the District Judge refers—the evidence, that is, of traders and merchants with books of accounts—would no doubt be valuable for certain purposes; but it is to be observed that this evidence, if produced, would go to show the price of grain at hats, bazars, and other places of trade. The difference between that price and the price paid for the crops upon the spot where they are grown, or at the nearest market at which they are usually sold, may vary considerably. The witnesses who have been called by the plaintiff are the holders of land in the neighbourhood, who may not unreasonably be supposed to remember the prices at which they have sold their crops from year to year either upon the lands where they were grown, or at the nearest market available to, and frequented by, the tenants. That such evidence is relevant in this case, and that such evidence ought to be fairly considered and weighed, we apprehend there can be no doubt.

We think, therefore, that the case must go back in order that this evidence may be duly considered; and that upon this evidence the District Judge may find whether there has been the increase of price alleged by the plaintiff, or any other increase of price which will entitle him to enhancement of rent upon the only ground with which this appeal is concerned. The case will be remanded to the District Judge, who will proceed to deal with it and with the questions raised in the cross appeal in conformity with the directions contained in this judgment.

Appeals Nos. 2413 and 2415 are admittedly governed by this decision.

The costs of these appeals will be costs in the suit, and will abide the final result.

A Hindu by his will directed that his estate should remain intact, and that the profits should be applied, in the first place, towards performing religious duties; and he provided that his immoveable property, business, and the capital stock thereof should also remain intact, and that his heirs, sons' sons, and great grandsons in succession, should be entitled to the profits, no person having any right of alienation.

The testator then provided that his eldest son should act as manager and shevait, and prepare accounts; and that he should have no power of alienation. He then made provisions for the payment of Government revenue, and declared that of the surplus profits six sixteenths should be applied, in part, towards the worship of his ancestral deities, and the residue towards the maintenance of all the members of the family, and religious ceremonies, the remaining ten-sixteenths to be carried to the credit of his estate. In case of disputes between his eldest son and the testator's third wife, the mother of the testator's minor children, the testator directed that his eldest son should receive five-sixteenths of the ten annas share; if another son should be born of the testator's third wife, the remaining eleven-sixteenths was to go to her sons. If no son was born, then the eldest son was to take five and a-half-sixteenths, and the sons of the third wife the remaining ten and a-half-sixteenths, absolutely, as long as the family remained joint; the expenses of the debsheva and maintenance of the family were to be detracted from the six annas share. In case of separation, the shares of the sons were to be placed to their respective credits every year, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share.

The testator then provided that, in case of separation, his sons (with the exception of the landed properties and capital stock of the business, and the articles used by the idols) should be at liberty to take the moveable property absolutely, according to the conditions laid down for the division of the ten annas share of the profits. He then provided for the maintenance of his third wife and minor sons out of the six annas share, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share under the will absolutely. After providing that his sons should live in his ancestral dwelling-house, but that none of them should have any power of alienation, the testator directed that, if any [270] of his heirs died without male issue, the widow of such heir should receive maintenance only, and that his grandson by a daughter should get nothing, but his share should go over to the surviving sons. The testator finally directed that his eldest son, sons' grandsons and other heirs in succession should perform the duties of kurta and shevait.

In a suit by the widow of one of the testator's sons by his third wife, seeking to recover such a share of the testator's property as she would have been entitled to in the case of intestacy.—

Held, that the intention of the testator, in disposing of the profits of the six annas share, was not an intention to create a valid estate in the corpus in favour of any individual, but to tie up such corpus and to give the profits only to his male descendants; or, in other words, to create a sort of estate in tail male in the profits, and that the bequest was void.

Held also, that the disposition of the ten annas share of the profits was void, there being in one event a direction to accumulate for ever without a disposition of the profits; and in the other event, the gift was void for the same reasons as the gift of the six annas share.

Held further, that the disposition of the family dwelling-house, save in so far as it prohibited alienation, was good, and that there was a sufficient disposition of the moveable property.

^{*} Appeal from Original Decree, No. 127 of 1879, preferred against the decree of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 24th September, 1878.

THIS was a suit by a Hindu lady to recover, by right of inheritance from her husband, a four-anna share in the estate of her father-in-law, one Kristo Prosad Das, who had died leaving a will, dated the 17th Bysack 1260 (18th April 1853), the material provisions of which were as follows :

" Para. 6.—My estate shall remain intact, and from the profits thereof there shall be performed the worship, the periodical festivals, and the ceremonies of my ancestral deities, idols, and chakras, according to my turn as they have hitherto been performed. As regards the enjoyment of the profits, I do hereby provide that my houses, zemindaries, taluks, and other immoveable properties, and my businesses of various descriptions, and the capital stock thereof, shall always remain intact, as at present, and my heirs, sons, sons' sons, and great grandsons, and so on in succession, shall be entitled to enjoy the profits thereof. No one shall be competent to alienate by sale or gift the immoveable property, to close any business, to misappropriate the capital stock thereof, or to divide the same. If any one succeeds in doing so, or will do so, it shall be disallowed by the authorities.

" Para. 7.—After my death, my eldest son, Sreeman Shookmoy [271] Chunder Das, shall, as provided by this will, act as kurta (manager) for the preservation and management of my entire estate, as shevait to the deities, idols, and chakras in my turn ; and shall as kurta manage and perform the affairs and duties, as they are now performed by me, from the profits of my estates, commercial transactions, mercantile and banking businesses, zemindaries and taluks, and the rents and profits of my houses ; and as such karmadhyakha (manager of business), he shall prepare accounts as they are now prepared in my time, year after year, shall keep one set with himself and shall make over another set to the mother and guardian of the minors. But he shall always be devoid of power to alienate my immoveable properties, which are now in existence, by sale, gift or otherwise, or to misappropriate or waste the capital stock of my business. If he do so, such act shall be null and void ; and the person who acts in contravention (of these provisions) shall be deprived of his right and interest (under this will).

" Para. 8.—Whichever of my sons shall, after my death, act as samarakshak (protector) and karmadhyakha (business manager) of the estate for the time being according to the terms of this will, shall duly and at the proper times pay the Government revenue from the profits of the landed properties belonging to the estate, and shall thus protect the estate. If any immoveable property shall be lost through the negligence of the manager and otherwise than by divine visitation and circumstances over which there is no control, the liability to make good such loss shall rest with the manager. After discharging the public revenue, the collection charges and the cost of repairs of the houses from the profits of the immoveable properties, and of the trading business, six-sixteenths (six annas) of the entire surplus balance shall be applied, year after year, in part towards the performance of the worship and periodical festivals of my ancestral deities, idols, and chakras in the proper turn ; and the residue thereof towards the maintenance of all the members of the family and the performance of religious rites and ceremonies ; and the remaining ten-sixteenths (ten annas) shall be carried to the credit of my estate. If disagreement and discord eventually take place between him (the said Shookmoy Chunder) [272] and the mother of the minors, and they want to live in separate mess, then the said six-sixteenths (six annas share) being regarded as a whole (or sixteen-sixteenths), my eldest son Sreeman Shookmoy Chunder Das, in consideration of his having in my lifetime increased the wealth by his labour and exertions in managing the trading business, shall receive five-sixteenths of such whole (or sixteen-sixteenths, i.e., five-sixteenths of ten-sixteenths) in the following case,—that is to say, if a son is born to my last married wife of her present conception; and the sons of my last married wife shall receive the remaining eleven-sixteenths (or eleven annas) in equal shares. If the issue of the present conception of my last married wife is not a male child, or if being a male child he dies unmarried, then my eldest son Shookmoy Chunder Das shall, for the reasons abovementioned, receive five and-a-half-sixteenths, and the other sons ten and-a-half-sixteenths in equal shares, and they, in their respective rights, shall be competent to enjoy and make gift of such profits.

“Para. 9.—As long as my last married wife and the sons born of her womb, and my eldest son, the said Shookmoy Chunder Das, shall live in concord with one another, the expenses of the debsheva, &c., and of the maintenance and daily and periodical rites and ceremonies of all the members of the family, shall be defrayed from the six annas share of the profits aforesaid. If, however, after all they disagree and fall out with each other and separate in mess, then the sums of money that may fall to the respective shares of the different sons, under the terms of the will, shall be placed to their respective credits in the accounts of every year. Any of the sharers shall, upon attainment of majority, be competent to take and receive, upon his receipt, from the manager, the money placed at his credit, whenever he may wish to do so. If the manager fraudulently refuses to pay the same, he and his right to receive the profits shall be liable to make good the sharer's claim with interest on the amount in deposit to his credit (such interest to run) from the date of demand, and the manager shall have no right of objection thereto.

“Para 10.—The several objects to which the six annas share has been appropriated are likely to be effectuated in the same manner (as before) so long as concord and harmony exist. If, [273] however, my last married wife or her sons, do not agree with Shookmoy Chunder Das or his wife and son, and if there arise (in consequence) a necessity for separation, they shall be at liberty to separate; and, with the exception of the landed properties and capital stock of the trading business now belonging to my estate, and the articles used by the idols, to divide and take, to appropriate, and to convey by gift, sale or otherwise the other moveable properties, subject to the conditions, provisions, and shares laid down in the eighth paragraph preceding, for the division of the ten annas share of the profits. Out of the six annas share set aside for the expenses of the debsheva, &c., my last married wife shall, during the minority of her sons, receive from the manager rupees twelve per month for the maintenance of herself and the minors, and the balance shall remain in the hands of the manager, who shall meet from it the expenses of the yearly, periodical, and daily rites and ceremonies. Any one of my sons by my last married wife who attains majority shall, from the date of his so attaining majority, cease to receive for his maintenance his proportionate share of the said twelve rupees; and shall be entitled to his proper share (under this will), and shall enjoy and appropriate the same, and the surplus balance of the said six annas share which remains after defraying the worship, the duties, and periodical and daily festivals and ceremonies, shall be received by my sons born of my two wives, in equal shares, without any difference in their proportionate shares.

"Para. 11.—All my sons shall reside in and occupy my ancestral dwelling and the dwelling-house and gardens constructed and laid out by myself. No one of them shall be competent to demolish the same, or alienate them by sale or gift. All my sons will be entitled to hold and enjoy the same in equal shares.

"Para. 12.—If any one of my heirs dies without male issue, his widow shall receive maintenance only, and his grandson by a daughter (if any) shall get nothing. The profits of his share shall be received in equal shares by the surviving sons; she shall remain in the family dwelling-house as long as she lives, and on her death, the surviving sons shall receive the same in equal shares for their residence.

[274] "Para. 15.—After the death of Sreeman Shookmoy Chunder Das, by the will of God, my eldest surviving heir for the time being shall discharge and perform all the duties aforesaid as protector and manager of the entire estate, as kurta and shevait, according to the provisions of the seventh paragraph. And this direction shall hold good in respect of the sons, grandsons, and their heirs in succession."

Kristo Prosad Das had been married three times. By his first wife he had no son. By his second wife he had one son, Shookmoy Chunder Das. By his third wife he had three sons, Hari Charan Das, who died unmarried, Gourhari Das, and Anand Hari Das. At the date of his will his wife was enceinte, and subsequently gave birth to a son, who died an infant.

Kristo Prosad Das died on the 12th Joisto 1260 (24th May 1853). The present suit was instituted by S. M. Monohari Dassi, the widow of Anand Hari Das, who died in Phalgun 1279 (February 1873), against Shookmoy Chunder Das, Gourhari Das, and S. M. Pria Dassi, the widow of the testator.

The Subordinate Judge held, that the testator had attempted to create an estate unknown to the Hindu law, and that the will was invalid; and he gave the plaintiff a decree.

From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Durga Mohun Doss, Baboo Rashbehary Ghose, Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen, and Baboo Lall Mohun Doss, for the appellants.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Hurry Mohun Chuekerbutty and Baboo Opendronath Mitter, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (FIELD and McDONELL, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J.—The most important questions to be decided in this case are concerned with the construction to be put upon the will, dated 17th Bysack 1260 (corresponding with the 28th April 1853), made by the late Kristo Prosad Das.

It may be well to observe that this will was made before the [275] passing of the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, and that, therefore, the provisions of this Act, and the provisions of the Succession Act incorporated therein by reference, have no direct application to the will with which we have to deal in the present case.

The testator, Kristo Prosad Das, was thrice married, as he states in the 4th paragraph of the will. By his first wife he had no male offspring. By his second wife he had a son, Shookmoy Chunder Das, the defendant No. 1. By his third wife, Sreemutty Pria Dassi, he had three sons born before the date of the will, viz., Hari Charan Das, Gourhari Das, and Anand Hari Das; and his wife was on that date pregnant, and, according to the finding of the Subordinate Judge, was subsequently delivered of a posthumous son, who was born alive, and died a short time after his birth. It may here be observed that although an objection has been taken to the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point, such objection has not been argued or pressed before us by the learned Counsel who represented the respondents.

Hari Charan died after the testator's death and before the institution of the present suit. Gourhari Das is the defendant No. 3, and the plaintiff is the widow of Anand Hari Das, the third son by the third wife.

The will, after setting forth the family relations of the testator, and the manner in which he had acquired his property, contains the following paragraphs, which we have had carefully translated, the translation to be found at page 84 and following pages of the paper-book, being admittedly incorrect in many essential particulars.

The plaintiff, as the widow of Anand Hari Das, has brought this suit to recover the share of the property to which, she, as Anand's widow, would be entitled if Kristo Prosad Das had died intestate; and her main contention is that the provisions of the will are void, and that effect cannot be given to them so as to deprive her of the share to which she is entitled in the family property.

The Subordinate Judge has given her a decree, which is to [276] be found at page 166 of the paper-book. Substantially he comes to the conclusion that the testator has made no devise or bequest of the corpus of his property; that he has attempted to create an estate which is invalid under the Hindu law; that, therefore, the general intention of the will fails, and the property must descend, according to Hindu law, in the same manner as it would descend if Kristo Prosad had died intestate.

In order to deal with the questions which have been argued before us, it will be useful to summarize the provisions and limitations contained in the will. They are—

1st. The corpus of the estate,—that is, the houses, zemindari, taluks, and capital employed in the business,—is to remain intact. There is to be no alienation and no partition. This direction is repeated more than once in the will.

2nd. The moveables may be partitioned and alienated if Shookmoy and the widow cannot live together amicably.

3rd. There is a general direction that the testator's sons, grandsons, great grandsons, and so on, are to enjoy the profits of the estate; but this general direction is controlled by the directions which follow as to the mode of enjoyment.

4th. The eldest son Shookmoy Chunder Das is to act as manager and shevait without power of alienation and without power to withdraw the capital invested in business. He is to keep regular accounts. On Shookmoy's death the eldest male heir for the time being is to succeed to the position of manager and shevait.

5th. In respect of the manner in which the profits are to be dealt with, the Government revenue, collection charges, and costs of repairs of houses are to be first defrayed therefrom, after which the profits are to be divided into two portions—a six-anna portion and a ten-anna portion.

6th. The six-anna portion is to be devoted to the worship of the dols and the maintenance of the family. The testator expressly declares that this portion will be sufficient for these objects (see para. 10). If the members cannot manage to live together in harmony during the minority of Sreemutty Pria Dassi's children, she is to receive out of this six-anna portion twelve rupees per mensem for the support of herself and her children. Each [277] son, after attaining majority, is to get his share under the other provisions of the will, and his maintenance is no longer to be defrayed from the monthly allowance of twelve rupees. The balance of the six annas share, after defraying the expenses of worship, is to be divided equally between all the sons. It may be observed here, that there is no express provision as to the accumulation of this balance during the minority of the children.

7th. The ten annas portion of the profits is to be credited to the estate; or, in other words, to be accumulated so long as Shookmoy and Pria Dassi live in harmony.

8th. If Shookmoy and Sreemutty Pria Dassi cannot live together in harmony, then the ten annas share of the profits is to be divided, Shookmoy getting five-sixteenths, if a fourth son be born of Pria Dassi, which event the Subordinate Judge finds to have taken place. The sons of Sreemutty Pria Dassi are to receive the remainder of the ten annas portion of the profits in equal shares. In the case of the minors, their shares are to be accumulated till majority, and then paid to them on demand. An absolute power of disposal is given to the sons over the profits so divided amongst them.

9th. The dwelling-houses, ancestral and constructed by the testator, and his gardens are given to all the sons in equal shares without power of alienation.

10th. The share of an heir (son) dying without male issue is to go to the sons (male heirs) existing at the time of his death.

In construing the provisions of this will, we must follow the usual rule, that is, endeavour to collect the testator's intention from the language used by him, and then consider whether such intention is within the testator's power, limited as it must be by the general policy of the law (8 Moore's Ind. App., 80). In order to discover that intention, we must also follow the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Tagore case (1), where they say that "the true mode of construing a will is to consider it as expressing in all its parts, whether consistent with law or not, the intention of the testator, and to determine upon a reading of the whole will, whether, assuming the limitations therein mentioned to take effect, an interest claimed [278] under it was intended under the circumstances to be conferred." It will be convenient to consider the intention of the testator, first, as to the six annas share of the profits; secondly, as to the ten annas share of the profits; thirdly, as to the dwelling-houses and gardens; and fourthly, as to the moveable property.

First, then, with regard to the six annas share of the profits, the testator directs in the 8th paragraph of the will, that such share shall be applied to defray the cost of worship of the idols and the expenses of the maintenance and clothing and ceremonies of the entire family. It has been contended on the authority of the case of Chundermoni Dassee v. Moti Lall Mullick (2), that this disposition of the six annas share of the profits is wholly void. In that case the testator directed that certain lands should be held by his executors on trust to apply the rents and profits, first, in the celebration of certain poojas and in performing the worship of the family idols and other religious festivals; and secondly, for the maintenance of the five younger sons, their wives, sons, and male descendants, and female descendants till marriage. It was held, that the real object of the testator was to establish a permanent endowment to the testator's descendants, and that the perpetual trusts for this purpose were void. We think that the argument founded on this case will probably be sufficiently answered by the case of Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (1), where, in a somewhat similar case to the present, it was held, that a direction that the surplus, after meeting the cost of religious acts and ceremonies, should be devoted to the support of the family, amounted to a good bequest of the surplus to the members of the joint family for their own use and benefit. It appears to us, however, that the present case is not so exactly similar to either of the cases just quoted that it can be decided upon the authority of either of them. In the present case there is no gift of the corpus of the real estate. The intention of the testator clearly was, that such corpus was never to be alienated or partitioned; and in order to carry out this intention, he had directed the management of the property to be vested in his [279] eldest son him surviving, and after him in the eldest male descendant for the time being,—that is, in a perpetual series of managers or trustees. Mr. Evans has contended that the gift of the six annas share of the profits is a good gift of the corpus according to the cases to be found at Theobald on Wills, p. 243; see also s. 159 of the Indian Succession Act, X of 1865. In the case of Mannor v. Greener (2), Sir R. Malins, V.C., said that there was no distinction between giving the income of the land and the rents and profits of the land, and that a gift of the income of land unrestricted is simply a gift of the fee-simple of the land. Can it be said that, in the present case, there is an unrestricted gift of the six annas share of the profits? Can it be held that a gift of these profits was intended to be a gift of the real estate itself, when the intention of the testator to be gathered from the whole will clearly was that there should be no gift of the real estate, that the real estate should remain unalienable and unpartitioned in the hands of a perpetual series of managers? It appears to us that there can be only one answer to this question; and that the answer must be in the negative.

It is settled law that a private person cannot, by gift or will, create a new estate, or make property inheritable otherwise than the law directs: Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (3), Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (4), Sonatun Bysack v. S. M. Juggutsoondree Dossee (5). If then there be a good gift of an estate, and there be also a prohibition against alienation or partition, the gift will be good and the prohibition will be void: Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (6), S. M. Krishnaramani Dasi v. Ananda Krishna Bose (7), Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (4). When there is a good gift with an invalid restriction, the gift will be good, the restriction void. Where there is a general intention to create a valid estate and a particular intention to deprive such estate of its legal incidents, [280] effect will be given to the general intention, and the particular intention will be disregarded. Is it possible to say that in the present case we can gather from the will a general intention on the part of the testator to create a valid estate in the real property in favour of any person or persons who could take such estate according to the Hindu law? It appears to us, that it is impossible to gather any such intention from the will. The general intention which is obtainable from the whole instrument is clearly not an intention to create valid estate in the corpus in favour of any individual, but to tie up such corpus, and to give the profits only to the male descendants of the testator; or, in other words, to create, in the profits merely, a sort of estate in tail male. It is clear that to this general intention effect cannot be given according to the principles laid down in the decided cases. We think, therefore, that the principle of Mannox v. Greener (1) cannot be applied to the present case.

There are other considerations upon which it appears to us that the bequest of the six annas share of the profits must fail. The testator directs that the surplus of this six annas share, after defraying the expenses of worship, is to be divided equally between the sons of both his wives. In another part of the will he directs that the minor sons are to get their shares only on attaining majority. As to what is to be done with the minor's share of the profits in the meantime, there is no clear direction. As to what is to be done with this six annas share of the profits after the death of the sons, there is no express direction—no direction at all, unless we can come to the conclusion that the general provisions of paragraphs six and twelve apply. As to paragraph twelve, it has been contended by Mr. Evans that this paragraph contemplates the failure of sons of the testator's son, and not an indefinite failure of male issue: and he relies upon the case of Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossey v. Denoobundoo Mullick (2). In all probability it would be proper to put the construction so contended for upon this paragraph of the will, inasmuch as, although the testator uses the word "heirs" in the first sentence, he directs that the share of the profits of his deceased heir shall be divided equally among his [281] "sons," not "heirs," who will be then alive. But it is not in our view material to decide this question, inasmuch as, according to the construction which we think must be put upon the whole will, the general intention of the testator fails. The general direction contained in paragraph six is clearly intended to create an estate in tail male. Such an estate would, we think, be void by Hindu law. In the case of Sonatum Bysack v. Sreemutty Juggutsoondree Dossee (3), Sir James Colville who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court, said:—"We cannot see that the testator has made any distinction between his grandsons, his great-grandsons, or the remoter descendants comprised in the terms 'et cætera heirs.' All are to inherit their ancestor's share according to the shasters, or Hindu law, modified only by the exclusion of the females or the descendants of females; therefore the object which he has in view is to create for his own property, as long as he has any descendants in the strict male line, a new course of descent. That object is, we think, beyond the scope of the testamentary power recognized by law, and must therefore fail." Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not expressly overrule this dictum, and, in the view which they took of the case, it was unnecessary to find specially upon this point; but the Tagore case (4) is an authority that the creation by a Hindu of an estate of inheritance in tail male is void. It has been argued that the present case is similar to, and ought to be governed by, that of Sonatun Bysack v. Sreemutty Juggutsoondree Dossee (1), but it appears to us that there is one essential difference between the two cases. In that case there was an express grant of the corpus to the idol; and the Privy Council held that the effect of this was to grant the property effectually for the benefit of the sons. In the present case, not only is there no express grant of the corpus, but, as has been already pointed out, the presumption of such a grant is opposed to the general intention of the testator to be gathered from the whole of the provisions of the will.

Upon the best consideration that we have been able to give to the matter, it appears to us that the disposition of the six annas [282] share of the profits is void, and that as regards such share the testator must be deemed to have died intestate.

Then, as regards the ten annas share of the profits, the case is still stronger. Two events appear to be here contemplated,—first, the event of the family continuing joint; and second, the event of the family becoming divided. In the former case the ten annas share of the profits is to be credited to the estate; in other words, is to be accumulated, and apparently for ever. It is scarcely necessary to say that any such direction for accumulation without a disposition of the beneficial interest is void: Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (2) and S. M. Krishnaramani Dasi v. Ananda Krishna Bose (3).

Then, in the second event,—that is, in the case of the eldest son and the third wife and her sons not being able to agree,—the profits are to be divided in the shares directed in the eighth paragraph of the will. There is no grant of the corpus, no disposition of the beneficial interest, and the remarks already made with reference to the six annas share of the profits apply here with still greater force. In any case it will be observed that the disposition of the ten annas share of the profits is made to depend, not upon the will of the testator, but on the subsequent acts of the legatees. It appears to us that, as regards the ten annas share of the profits of the real estate also, the testator must be taken to have died intestate.

Thirdly.—As to the dwelling houses and gardens, we think the eleventh paragraph of the will contains a valid disposition. The general intention of the testator here, was to give this portion of the property in equal shares to all his sons, and to this general intention effect must be given. We have also a particular intention prohibiting transfer by sale or gift. This particular intention is opposed to the policy of the law, and must, therefore, be disregarded. The result is that, so far as these portions of the property are concerned, the will does not interfere with the plaintiff's rights by Hindu law.

Fourthly.—With respect to the moveable property, there is no express gift in the will, but there is a direction in the tenth [283] paragraph, that, in the event of separation, the moveable property shall be partitioned according to the shares mentioned in paragraph eight as applicable to the ten annas share of the profits.

We think that, although there is no gift of the moveables in so many words, we may reasonably gather from these provisions an intention on the part of the testator to give the moveables to his sons in the shares above specified, and that this case comes within one of the general rules of construction, namely, that effect should be given to a general prevailing intention, however imperfectly and obscurely indicated, if discoverable by a fair and liberal construction of the language of the will, and if allowed by law.

(1) 8 M.I.A. 80.

(2) 2 B.L.R. O.C. 41.

(3) 4 B.L.R. O.C. 277.

The result will be that the decree of the Subordinate Judge will be modified in respect of the moveables only, and as to the rest of the property will be confirmed.

It remains to deal with the question of accounts, and it appears to us that we ought not to interfere with the direction given in this respect by the Court of first instance. The will itself directs the managing member to keep accounts; and, if these directions have been followed, there ought to be no difficulty in accounting for the profits since the death of the testator.

It may be well to observe that, as to the factum of the will, we entertain no doubt that the will was duly executed by the testator. Some arguments were addressed to us to impugn the genuineness of the will; but we think that there can be no reasonable doubt as to the will having been executed by the testator, regard being had to the direct testimony and to the internal evidence supplied by the instrument itself.

Decree modified.

OBHOY CHURN NUNDI AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. KRITARTHA MOYI DOSSEE (Plaintiff).^{*} [5th April, 1881.]

Jurisdiction—Valuation of suits—Exclusion of time of proceeding in another Court—Parties—Adding defendants—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss 14 and 22.

A suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who, after seven months, returned the plaint to be filed in the Munsif's Court, on the ground that the suit had been overvalued. There was nothing to show want of bona fides in the plaintiff's instituting the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Held that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, the time during which the plaint was on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court must be deducted.

A suit for property in the possession of several persons was brought by the plaintiff against one of those persons only. After the institution of the suit, and after the period of limitation prescribed for a separate suit on the same cause of action against the other persons in possession had elapsed, these latter were added as defendants.

Held, that the suit must be dismissed as against the added defendants, on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, instituted by Kritarthamoyi Dossee in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, against Obhoy Churn Nundi and Issur Chunder Pal, on the 23rd of November, 1876. The plaintiff stated that her husband Kunjo Behari Pal, the defendant Issur Chunder Pal, and one Indro Chunder Pal, three brothers, formed a joint Hindu family; that, after the death of the plaintiff's husband, she continued to live jointly with her brothers-in-law; that Issur Chunder Pal having mortgaged some of the joint property, the mortgagee brought a suit in the High Court at Calcutta and obtained a decree, in execution of which the property was, on the 24th of March 1864, sold to the defendant Obhoy Churn Nundi, who entered into possession. [285] The plaintiff alleged that one-third of the property so dealt with was hers, had prayed for a declaration of her right thereto and for possession, dating her cause of action from the 24th of November, 1864, the day of the sale to Obhoy Churn Nundi.

By an order, dated the 21st of June, 1877, Ishur Chunder Acharjee (in whose name the property was purchased at the sale in November, 1864) and Dhonendro Nath Nundi, were made defendants to the suit, and by a similar order, dated the 6th of July, 1877, Brojendro Narain Nundi was made a defendant. Sometime afterwards, the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the suit had been overvalued, directed the plaint to be returned and filed in the Court of the First Munsif of Hooghly, which was immediately done. At the trial the Munsif dismissed the case on the merits, but this decision was reversed on appeal, the Judge saying:—"The only matter really argued in this appeal was the question of limitation, and that merely in respect of the manner in which the suit was first valued and instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, withdrawn therefrom, and afterwards brought in the Court of the Sadar Munsif. Another point of limitation inseparably mixed up with the merits had already been decided by this Court in a cognate suit arising out of the same circumstances as this one, in which the plaintiff was unsuccessful in the first instance, but gained her appeal. This appeal would have been disposed of at once in the same way, but that a special appeal having been preferred to the High Court by the unsuccessful respondent before this Court, this appeal was, at the wish of both parties, kept in abeyance pending the disposal of the special appeal. The special appeal resulted in the upholding of the appellate order of this Court, which has, as I have said, the effect of deciding the main question between the parties to this appeal in the same way. The only matter for argument and judgment here being the exceptional circumstances attendant upon the institution of the suit."

In reference to an objection taken before him that the suit was out of time as against the added defendants, the Judge said:—"This argument betrays an ignorance of the law of procedure regarding the adding of parties, and the principles of [286] it. The adding of parties is exclusively the prerogative of the Court. The Court may be moved by parties already before it to exercise its prerogative in this way, but it is none the less the act of the Court. As to limitation, that applies solely to the institution of suits. A suit against a principal defendant once brought in time, the Court may add parties to it, though at the time of adding them, the plaintiff, if he had not already brought his suit, would be out of Court."

The Judge went on to say, that he considered the valuation first stated in the plaint was correct, and that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in forcing the plaintiff into the Munsif's Court. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Troyluckyanath Mitter, for the appellants, argued, that the decision of the Court below could not stand, as there was no finding as to who had been in possession within twelve years previous to suit; that the date of the institution of the suit was the day on which the plaint was filed in the Munsif's Court, and the claim was therefore barred, as the plaintiff could not claim to except the time spent in the Subordinate Judge's Court, under s. 14, Act XV of 1877, and that as against the added defendants the suit was clearly barred, s. 22, Act XV of 1877.

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX, J.—In this case the defendants are the appellants on the second appeal to this Court. It appears that, on the 24th November, 1864, the defendants had, at a Sheriff's sale, purchased property, in which the plaintiff had an interest, and had taken possession thereof. After the expiration of twelve years all but one day, the plaintiff instituted this suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court for the recovery of her property, valuing the suit at Rs. 1,001; at the same time she brought another suit, in the same Court, for another property purchased at the same sale by the Sheriff, by another purchaser. After this case had been in the Subordinate Judge's Court for about seven [287] months, he came to the conclusion that the suit was overvalued, and therefore returned the plaint that it might be filed in the Munsif's Court, which was done on that very day. In special appeal it is contended that the time during which the suit was pending in the Subordinate Judge's Court ought not to be allowed to the plaintiff; and that, if disallowed, her claim is barred by limitation. We agree with the lower Court that the present case is covered by the 14th section of the Limitation Act, there being no reason to suppose that the plaintiff was not acting bona fide in instituting her suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge; therefore, as against the defendants, whom she made defendants on the 24th November 1864, the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree, but as against the other defendants, added after the 24th November 1864, she will not be entitled to a decree; for although Act XV of 1877 had not come into operation when the suit was instituted, yet the law embodied in s. 22 of that Act was applicable to a case like the present even before that Act was passed,—namely, that after the institution of a suit like the present for the recovery of land held by several persons against one of such persons, if a new defendant is added, the suit should, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party. We think, therefore, that, in this respect, the decree of the District Judge was wrong, and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed against all the defendants added after the institution of the suit. But it has also been urged before us on behalf of the appellants that it has not been shown that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed property within twelve years before the date of institution of the suit. The Munsif has held that the plaintiff has failed to show that she was in possession within twelve years. But as another suit had already been decided arising out of similar circumstances in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and as both these cases came before Mr. Grant at the same time, and as we find, in his judgment in this case, Mr. Grant said that this appeal would have been disposed of in the same way as the other appeal decided by him, but that, as a special appeal in the other case was filed in the High Court, this case was, at the instance of the parties, kept in abeyance till [288] the disposal of that special appeal,—it is evident to us that Mr. Grant decided this question, which is a question of fact, in favour of the plaintiff. We, therefore, think that the appellants cannot set up this objection.

We accordingly allow the appeal so far as regards the defendants who were made defendants after the 24th November 1864, and dismiss the suit as against them; and disallow the appeal, and affirm the judgment of the lower Court, as against Obhoy Churn Nundi and Issur Chunder Pal, who were made defendants on the 23rd November 1864. UMA SUNDURI DABEE (Defendant) v. SOUROBINEE DABEE (Plaintiff).^{*}
[11th May, 1881.]

Hindu Will—Adoption—Failure by Widow to adopt—Inheritance, Widow's Right to.

A husband's express authorization or even direction to adopt, does not constitute a legal duty on the part of the widow to do so, and for all legal purposes, it is absolutely non-existent till it is acted upon.

A widow's refusal to comply with such a direction, is no ground of forfeiture as regards her rights of inheritance.

When a Hindu, by his will, gave his widow authority to adopt, if necessary, from one to three dattaka sons, and she, having neglected to do so, brought a suit, to recover possession of her husband's property and for an account of the administration, against the administrator of the estate, after having ineffectually attempted to get the letters of administration recalled and fresh letters granted to her as heiress of her husband,—

Held, that she was entitled to the decree she prayed for.

IN this case the plaintiff, Srimoti Sourobinee Dabee, was the widow, and the principal defendant, Srimoti Uma Sunduri Dabee, was the mother, of one Paramata Lall Gossami, who died on the 23rd Chait 1281 B.S., corresponding with the 5th April 1874, leaving no issue.

[289] On the day that he died, Paramata Lall executed an instrument therein termed a will; and on the 28th June 1875, the defendant obtained letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed. Subsequently, the plaintiff made an unsuccessful attempt to have these letters of administration recalled and fresh letters granted to her, and the District Judge's order on this application was confirmed by the High Court on the 19th June 1877. Accordingly, the plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 27th June 1877, alleging her right as heiress of her husband under the Hindu law, and asking that the defendant, as administratrix, might be compelled to make over to her the estate of her deceased husband, and also to render an account of the administration and pay what sums might be found due upon the taking of such account.

It appeared that, at the time of the death of Paramata Lall Gossami, the plaintiff was enceinte; but that, subsequently, a daughter was born. The will, which was in the Bengalee language, after alluding to that fact, and declaring that, if a son were born, the plaintiff was to be the guardian, continued :—

“ God willing, may not this take place, if my wife gives birth to a daughter and not to a son, or if a son be born and dies at any time, I, for the perpetuation of the aforesaid libations of water and oblations of food, authorize my wife to adopt a dattaka son ; if necessary, she shall be able to adopt from one to three dattaka sons, and for that purpose she shall consult with my mother, kinsmen, and the managing head of the family, and submit his name to the Maharajah of Burdwan. He who shall be selected by the Maharajah of Burdwan, my supporter, shall be adopted by her as dattaka. The dattaka adopted according to law shall be my son ; so that, during his minority, affairs shall also be managed in the manner aforesaid,—i.e., the directions which have been laid down with respect to the guardianship of the son born of my loins shall also stand good in the case of a dattaka son, and not otherwise ; but then if my mother dies, or if for any reason whatever she be unwilling before my son attains his majority, then my wife, when competent, shall be guardian, and shall manage all affairs according to family usage ; she should always remain under the control of my mother and [290] the Maharajah of Burdwan. If she, of her own free will, sets herself to any action, she shall never be appointed guardian. Therefore, if my mother dies, and my wife does not remain, under the control of the Maharajah of Burdwan, the Maharajah shall, for the protection of the property, appoint a manager.”

It was contended in the lower Court that this instrument was actually an authority to adopt, and nothing more ; that it was in reality not a will, inasmuch as the person who executed it did not by its contents devise his property to any particular person ; that the plaintiff was bound to act upon the authority given her to adopt, and that she could not take advantage of her own laches in omitting to do so, and thus get possession of her husband's property ; and lastly, that, upon the true construction of the document, its effect was to exclude the plaintiff from the management of the estate and from her rights as heiress.

The District Judge, however, held, that the document was in fact a will, and that all it did was to give the plaintiff permission to adopt ; that being so, following the decisions in Deenomoyee Dossee v. Doorga Pershad Mitter (1) and Pearee Dayee v. Hurbunsee Kooer (2), the plaintiff could not be compelled to adopt, and the fact of her possessing an authority to adopt a son did not supersede or destroy her personal rights as widow which remained in force until the adoption was actually made ; consequently there was no bar to the plaintiff's bringing a suit for the recovery of her late husband's property : Bamun Doss Mookerjee v. Mussamut Tarinee (3) and Prasannamayee Dasi v. Kadambini Dasi (4).

Further, there being no express words of disinherison used in the will, the plaintiff could not be disinherited or deprived of a Hindu widow's estate in the property by implication : Davis v. Lowndes (5), Denn v. Gaskin (6), Shuldham v. Smith (7), Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore (8).

[291] He accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for her husband's property and for an account of the administration.

From that decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Nil Madhub Sen and Baboo Mohini Mohan Roy, for the appellant.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by CUNNINGHAM, J.—In this case the widow and heiress of the late Paramata Lall Gossami sues his mother, who is also administratrix with the will annexed, praying that the administratrix be directed to make over to her the estate of her deceased husband, to render an account of the administration, and to pay what sums may, on taking such accounts, be found due to the deceased's estate. On the part of the defendant it is contended that, by the testator's will, the defendant was placed in charge of his property; that the intention of the will was to oblige the plaintiff to adopt, and to exclude her from management of the estate and from her rights as heiress; and that she is, accordingly, not entitled to the possession of the property.

The will in dispute directs that the widow being enceinte, if a son be born, the mother should be guardian.

Letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed were obtained by the mother, the present defendant, on the 28th June 1875; and the present plaintiff subsequently endeavoured to procure the revocation of these letters. This attempt has been unsuccessful, no legal ground for revocation being, in the opinion of the Court before which the matter came, made out.

Having failed in setting aside the administration, the widow now sues to enforce her right as heiress to her husband's estate.

The Court below has held, first, that the effect of the husband's will was not to constitute a legal obligation on the widow to adopt; secondly, that the will does not exclude her rights of inheritance; and thirdly, that she is consequently entitled to a [292] decree for the husband's property and for an account of the administration.

We concur in these findings. The law is clearly established that a husband's express authorization, or even direction, to his widow to adopt, does not constitute a legal duty on the part of the widow. It is, as has been observed (1), for all legal purposes absolutely non-existent till it is acted upon. The widow cannot be compelled to act upon it, unless and until she chooses to do so.

In the judgment of the Sadr Court in Bamun Dass Mookerjee v. Mussamut Tarinee (2), in which their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed their entire concurrence, the Court observed,—that “there appears to be no power under Hindu law to compel a widow to adopt, though a case (in Macnaughten's Principles of Hindu Law, Vol. II, p. 247) has been referred to, where there is mention of an incompetency in a widow to succeed if she neglect to make an adoption” (3). It is true that “the question of any possible check on a widow who wilfully protracts or evades an adoption specially enjoined upon her by her husband,” was not, on that occasion, before the Sadr Court or the Privy Council; and all that was necessary to decide was, that “the power of a widow duly authorized to adopt, to claim her personal rights until she does adopt, is not affected by any consideration of what might be the proper course if she could be proved to have violated any clear and positive legal obligation." We think, however, that the observations of the Sadr Court must be accepted as favouring the proposition that such a legal obligation cannot be created; and the remarks of Peacock, C.J., in Prasannamayee Dasi v. Kadambini Dasi (1) are any authority for the view, that the widow's refusal to comply with such a direction is no ground of forfeiture as regards her rights of inheritance.

(2) 7 M.I.A. 169; Cf. 206.

(3) Cf. 190.

We cannot, therefore, regard the language of the testator as having created a trust which the widow is legally bound to carry out. She is at liberty to comply with her husband's directions or not as she pleases; and her omission or refusal to do [293] so is no bar to her rights of inheritance. Accordingly, the contingency for which the will provides not having occurred, and there being no gift over, the testator must be regarded as intestate, and his widow as heiress-at-law entitled to succeed.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Second Appeal—Improper Reception of Evidence by Lower Court—Remand.

On second appeal, the High Court has, generally speaking, no right to look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence in a case other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below.

The only cases which can be with propriety disposed of under such circumstances without a remand, are those where, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusions upon other grounds.

THIS was a suit brought to recover possession of certain lands which the plaintiff, one Chundee Churn Roy Chowdhry, contended belonged to his zemindari, he having held possession of the same through his tenants. The defendant No. 1, previously to this suit, claimed the land in question as forming part of his nimhowla, and had brought a case under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and the Criminal Court had held that he was entitled to remain in possession until such time as a Civil Court should decide the question of title. The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit to have the question decided.

[294] The defendants, with the exception of one Sidam, contended that the land in suit belonged to their ancestral nimhowla, and was comprised within the howla of one Parbut Sirdar.

Sidam, the son of Parbut Sirdar, however, filed a written statement, denying that the disputed land ever belonged to the howla of his father. The original patta relating to the nimhowla was not produced, but a copy of the same was admitted in evidence. The plaintiff produced a judgment in a case between Raja Suttayanund Ghosal and the present defendants, in which the Raja alleged, that his land forming a portion of the lands alleged to have been included in the nimhowla, had been made over to the defendant No. 1, under the order of the Deputy Magistrate, under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code; in this judgment the nimhowla had been rejected as spurious, and a decree given in the Raja's favour.

The Munsif held, that the defendants' allegation as regards the nimhowla had already been disbelieved in the case of Raja Suttayanund Ghosal and themselves, and that the written statement of the defendant Sidam was also contradictory to the allegation of the other defendants, and that the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses had clearly proved the disputed land belonged to the plaintiff's zemindari, whilst the evidence of the defendants' witnesses, as regards possession, was conflicting. He therefore gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held, that the plaintiff had satisfactorily proved, both by oral and documentary evidence, that the disputed lands belonged to his zemindari, and that he had been in possession of the same through his tenants, whilst, on the question of title, the written statement of Sidam was contrary to the contention of the other defendants, and that although this was not, strictly speaking, evidence as against them, yet, as they had been unable to disprove this statement, the presumption was against their contention; that they had also failed to prove the genuineness of the nimhowla; and that there was no such satisfactory evidence, either oral or documentary, on the record, on behalf of the defendants, as would justify the reversal of the decision of the Munsif. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

[295] The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Rashbehary Ghose, for the appellants.

Babu Durga Mohun Das, for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C.J.—I have had considerable doubt as to whether we ought not to remand this case for re-trial.

The plaintiffs sue to recover possession of certain land which they say belongs to their zemindari.

The defendants, on the other hand, contend that the land in question forms part of certain property which they hold under a nimhowla, subordinate to the howla of one Parbut Sirdar.

Both the lower Courts have found in favour of the plaintiffs; but it has been contended on appeal to this Court that the Subordinate Judge has based his judgment upon certain documentary evidence, which was not legally admissible against the defendants. One document is a written statement filed in this suit by Sidam, one of the defendants, the son of Parbut Sirdar, in which he says that the disputed land does not appertain to the howla of his father. This statement of Sidam the Subordinate Judge appears to have treated ss evidence against the other defendants, which he clearly has no right to do.

The other evidence consists of the proceedings in a suit brought by Raja Sattyanund Ghosal against the present defendants, in which a decision was given unfavourable to them, as regards their alleged nimhowla patta. These proceedings, not being between the parties to this suit, were also improperly received as against the defendants.

The question which we have now to determine is, whether we ought to remand the case on account of the improper reception of this evidence.

The 167th section of the Evidence Act provides that "the improper admission of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial, if it shall appear to the Court before which the objection is raised, that, independently of the evidence objected to there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision." It [296] seems to me, however, that there is great difficulty in applying the provisions of this section to the generality of cases which come before the High Court on second appeal, and the difficulty arises thus.

On second appeal we have no power to deal with the sufficiency of the evidence; we have only a right to entertain questions of law. And our duty being thus confined, it seems to me, that when evidence has been wrongly admitted by the Court below, this Court has, generally speaking, no right to decide, whether the remaining evidence in the case, other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below.

We cannot decide that question, as it seems to me, without examining in detail that other evidence, and determining, as a question of fact, whether it is sufficient of itself to warrant the lower Court's finding.

I am sorry to say I have great doubt whether, in the case of Watson v. Gopee Soonduree Dossee (1), Mr. Justice Birch and myself were justified in deciding, as we did, that there was sufficient evidence (other than that improperly admitted) to justify the lower Court's judgment. I confess that it never struck me, until some time after that case had been decided, how much difficulty there was in most cases of second appeal in our attempting to deal with the sufficiency of the evidence.

On further consideration, I think that the only cases, which we may with propriety dispose of under such circumstances without a remand, are those where, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusion upon other grounds. Where this appears pretty clearly from the judgment, a remand is unnecessary, because then the error committed by the lower Court has not affected the decision upon the merits. (See s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code).

It, therefore, only remains for us in this case to see whether, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the Subordinate Judge has arrived at his conclusion upon other grounds. Now, both Courts appear to have found, upon the evidence of a [297] large number of witnesses, that the land in question forms part of the plaintiff's zemindari.

The evidence improperly admitted related to the proof, or rather the disproof, of the defendants' nimhowla patta. But the defendants, as it seems to me, were bound to prove that patta affirmatively. The onus of proving it lay on them; and without such proof their case must of necessity fail.

Now, as to this patta, the Subordinate Judge finds, as I understand him (quite irrespectively of the documents which have been improperly admitted), that "no reliable evidence had been adduced by the defendants of the genuineness of their nimhowla patta;" and he says further, "as that patta has not been proved, the disputed land could not be held to be the right of the defendants, even if it were within the boundaries given in the patta."

He also says in conclusion that "there is no such satisfactory evidence on the record on behalf of the defendants, either documentary or oral, as would justify me in reversing the finding of the first Court."

I am of opinion, therefore, that, in the present case, as the lower Court has found for the plaintiffs, upon evidence quite independent of that improperly admitted, a remand is unnecessary; and consequently that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MCDONELL, J.—I concur in holding that in this case a remand is unnecessary.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the defendants, upon whom the onus lay, have produced no satisfactory evidence, either documentary or oral, to prove that the lands in dispute formed part of their "nimhowla;" whereas the plaintiff had clearly proved not only his zemindari right to, but his possession of, the said lands within twelve years of suit. It is clear, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge has, quite independently of the evidence improperly admitted, upon other grounds, confirmed the Munsif's decision, and decreed plaintiff's claim. This second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[298] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Richard Garth, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice McDonell.

PUNNOO SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. NIRGHIN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [3rd May, 1881.]

Arrears of Rent—Rate of Rent payable—Duty of Court—Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

The plaintiff sued for arrears of rent for the year 1282 at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha. The defendant alleged that the rent was only fifteen annas per bigha. The Judge found that the plaintiff had not proved that the rate of rent was Rs. 2-8 per bigha, and, without finding that the proper rate was fifteen annas, gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount. The plaintiff brought a subsequent suit for arrears of rent for the year 1283, when it was held by the Court of first instance and by the lower Appellate Court, that he could only recover arrears of rent at the rate of fifteen annas, that being the rate of "rent payable for the previous year" within the meaning of s. 14, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Held, that the decisions were wrong, and must be reversed.

In a suit for arrears of rent, where the plaintiff fails to prove the rate of rent claimed in the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to find the proper rate of rent payable by the tenant to his landlord and not to give a decree merely for the rent admitted by the tenant.

^{*} Appeals from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 2357 to 2366 of 1879, against the decree of J. P. Browne, Esq., Judge of Patna, dated the 28th of August 1879, affirming the decree of Baboo Chatterdhur Pershad, Second Munsif of Patna, dated the 28th of March 1879.

THIS case with nine others were suits instituted by the plaintiffs for arrears of rent for the years 1283, 1284 and 1285 (1876, 1877, 1878). The facts are set out in the judgment of the Court of first instance, the material portion of which is as follows:—

“The admitted facts of the case are these: That the plaintiffs brought thirty-five rent-suits for the years 1281 and 1282 F.S. (1874-1875) against the non-resident cultivators of the village Futtehpur Kandhra; that Baboo Gokul Chand, my predecessor, disbelieved the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove their alleged settlement of rent at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha, and decreed the claim at the defendants’ admitted jama; that the plaintiffs appealed from his decision to the Judge who confirmed the decrees passed by this Court; that they then appealed to [299] the High Court, which remanded five of the thirty-five cases for re-trial, and refused to hear appeals in the remaining thirty cases, because the amount was below Rs. 100 in each of those cases; that the District Appellate Court, on the 2nd of September 1878, passed a decree at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha in the five remanded cases, on the ground that the rate of rent was Rs. 2 previous to the year 1280, and that the Court refused to hear reviews in the remaining thirty cases.

“The plaintiffs have brought these ten cases at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha, at which they obtained decrees against the five tenants on remand. They have produced the same papers upon which the Judge acted in awarding decrees at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha in the remanded cases. They have proved them. There can be no doubt that the defendants alleged a very low rate of their holdings, and have not proved them to the satisfaction of the Court. But the question is, whether plaintiffs can claim rent at a higher rate than what was awarded for the years 1281 and 1282. It is admitted that no fresh settlement was made for the succeeding years; that no written contract has been taken from the defendants; and that no notice of enhancement has been served on them. In my opinion the plaintiffs, after having failed to succeed in their claim for the arrears of rent of the years immediately preceding at a certain jama, cannot turn round and come to Court on a different allegation. The previous decrees, whether right or wrong, are final. No doubt, in those cases the proper course would have been as directed by the High Court, and adopted by the Judge, in the five remanded cases, to find the actual rate of rent paid independent of the alleged settlement of plaintiffs, and of the rates stated by defendants when their respective allegations seemed incorrect; but I have my doubts whether the same course should be adopted in the present cases after the decrees for the defendants’ admitted jama were passed for the years 1281 and 1282. Supposing that the rate of rent was Rs. 2 per bigha for 1280, that state of things did not continue in 1281 and 1282, by the happening of an event, namely, the passing of decrees which were passed by a competent Court and are final between the parties. It has been argued that those decrees are [300] binding on the plaintiff only for the years 1281 and 1282. But to pass a decree in plaintiffs’ favour at a higher rate would be to act contrary to s. 14 of the Rent Law, which expressly provides that a tenant shall not be liable to pay a higher rent than what he has paid in the year immediately preceding, unless he is duly served with a notice of enhancement. Under all these circumstances, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs cannot recover rent at a higher jama than what is admitted by the defendants and what was decreed for the years 1281 and 1282.”

On appeal, the Judge of the lower Appellate Court said:—“In the opinion of this Court the view taken by the Munsif is quite correct. The plaintiffs could not possibly have obtained, and do not say they did obtain, a greater amount of rent than was actually decreed. This being so, that amount and no other was, in the terms of s. 14 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, the rent payable for the previous year, and the plaintiffs cannot sue for more rent except after notice of enhancement or on the strength of a new agreement. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C.J.—This suit is brought against the defendants for the rent of a jote for the years 1283, 1284 and 1285, the plaintiffs claiming at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha.

They say in their plaint that they are, properly speaking, entitled to rent at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha, but that the recovery of such higher rent depends "upon the adoption of other steps," by which we understand them to mean, that to recover the higher rent they must bring a suit for enhancement.

The answer of the defendants is this, that the plaintiffs brought a previous suit against them for the years 1281 and 1282, in which they claimed rent for the same jote at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha; that their answer to that suit was, as it is now, that their proper rent was fifteen annas per bigha; and that in that suit, as the plaintiffs failed to prove the rate of Rs. 2-8 [301] which they claimed, a decree was given in their favour for the sum which the defendants admitted,—namely, at the rate of fifteen annas. The defendants say, therefore, that as fifteen annas was adjudged by the Court to be, as between them and the plaintiffs, the proper rate of rent for the years 1281 and 1282, and as nothing had occurred since to alter that rate, the plaintiffs cannot recover the rent which they claim in this suit,—namely, at the rate of Rs. 2.

Both the lower Courts have adopted the defendants' view of the matter. They say that, in the former suit, the rent was recovered by the plaintiffs at the rate of fifteen annas per bigha for the years 1281 and 1282, and that the plaintiffs cannot recover more without bringing a suit for enhancement.

Now, for the purpose of understanding rightly the effect of the judgment which was given in the former suit, we think it necessary to refer to the proceedings, not only in that suit, but in five other suits which were brought at the same time against other tenants by the same plaintiffs, and in which the latter claimed rent for the years 1281 and 1282 at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bigha.

In all these suits the defendants alleged that the proper rate of rent was fifteen annas. The Munsif found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the rate which they claimed; and that the fifteen annas alleged by the defendants respectively was the proper rent. So in each case he gave the plaintiffs a decree accordingly.

Appeals were then preferred in each of the cases to the District Judge, who affirmed the decision of the Munsif, but in a very equivocal form; and it is upon the language and meaning of his judgment that the question which we have now to decide in this case depends.

After considering the question, whether the plaintiffs had proved their case, and whether the proper rate of rent was Rs. 2-8, he found that Rs. 2-8 was not the proper rate. He apparently made no enquiry, and arrived at no decision as to whether the rate alleged by the defendants was the proper one; indeed, he states that "the defendants' case is very likely to be false." But he nevertheless confirmed the decree of the [302] Munsif, giving the plaintiffs in each case a decree at the rate admitted by the defendants.

He then goes on to say, "at the request of the plaintiffs' pleader, I record the fact, that I do not find as a fact that rent has hitherto been paid at the rate alleged by the defendants. I merely find that it has not been paid at the rate alleged by plaintiffs."

That being the judgment of the District Judge in all the cases before him, five of those cases came up on appeal to the High Court. The case against the present defendants could not be so appealed, because the value of the suit was not sufficient to admit of it. But we desire to refer to the judgment of the Division Bench of this Court in the cases which were appealed because that judgment puts a construction upon the judgment of the District Judge, with which we entirely agree.

The learned Judges of this Court (Jackson and White, JJ.) delivered judgment in one of the appeals only (No. 141 of 1877), and the effect of their judgment was, that the District Judge had come to no decision at all as to what the proper rent was.

Mr. Justice Jackson, after stating what was the contention of the plaintiffs in second appeal,—namely, that the District Judge had not found any rate of rent to be the proper one, and that he was bound to decide that question, goes on to say:—"The Courts are bound to ascertain, as closely as they can, what the real controversy between the landlord and the ryot is. On this account, I think the lower Appellate Court ought to have ascertained what rate of rent was payable to the plaintiff, if the rate of Rs. 2-8 was not payable; and as that Court has intimated something more than a doubt, whether the defendants had made a true statement of their case, I think the case must go back to the Court below, in order to a further trial of that question."

The High Court remanded the case, in order that the District Judge might find, what he had not found when the case was before him, what was the proper rent payable by the defendants; and it appears that, on the remand, the then District Judge found that Rs. 2 was the proper rent payable by the defendants [303] for the years 1281 and 1282. That being the result of the suits which were appealed to the High Court, we have now to see how far the parties to this present suit are affected by the judgment of the District Judge in the suit between the plaintiffs and the present defendants, which was not appealed to the High Court. Is that judgment binding upon the parties to this suit, as having determined what was the proper rate of rent for the years 1281 and 1282?

We entirely agree with the learned Judges of this Court that the judgment of the District Judge in the former suits determined nothing of the kind. His judgment is so far binding between the parties, as regards the rent for the years 1281 and 1282, that the plaintiffs could bring no other suit against the defendants for the rent for those particular years. But as the District Judge professedly did not determine the question between the parties, what was the proper rent due by the defendants for those years, we think that this judgment in no way estops the plaintiffs in this suit from proving what the proper rate of rent was for the years 1283, 1284 and 1285.

It was one thing to adjudge that the plaintiffs should recover from the defendants as the rent for those years the sum which the defendants admitted to be due. It was another thing to adjudge that the sum so admitted by the defendants was the proper amount of rent.

We must, therefore, remand this case, and the analogous cases which depend upon it, to the Munsif's Court, for re-trial. We observe that the Munsif appears in the Court below to have received in evidence the decrees which were made by the District Judge on remand in the other five cases against other defendants. It is clear that he has no right to do this. He is bound to try this and the analogous cases upon their own respective merits, and to ascertain what is the proper amount of rent in each case.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result; and the analogous cases will be governed in all respects by this decision.

PRESENT :

Sir B. Peacock, Sir M. E. Smith, Sir R. P. Collier and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in 5 C. 228.]

RAMLAL MOOKERJEE (Plaintiff) v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS (Defendants).

[9th and 10th February and 1st March, 1881.]

Hindu Law—Construction of Will—Use of words “putra poutradi krame”—Condition subsequent.

In a will, the words “putra poutradi krame,” recognized as apt for conveying an estate of inheritance, do not limit the succession to male descendants, and will include female heirs of a female, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs.

The will of a Hindu who died, leaving only a widow, a daughter's daughter, and a brother, directed as follows :—

“7. If no daughter or daughter's son of mine should be living at the time of the death of my wife, then my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) shall become the proprietress of my property, and shall remain in undisputed possession thereof ‘putra poutradi krame.’

“8. If the death of my wife should take place before my daughter's daughter arrives at majority and bears a son, then the whole of the estate shall remain in charge of the Court of Wards, until she arrives at majority and bears a son.

“9. If my daughter's daughter should be barren or a sonless widow, or if she should be otherwise disqualified, she shall not become entitled to my property, but shall receive an allowance of Rs. 300 per mensem for her life.

“20. If no son or daughter should be born to me, and if my daughter's daughter should die before she bears a son, or if she should be barren or become a sonless widow, or be otherwise disqualified, then the whole of my properties shall pass into the hands of Government.”

The will further directed the use of the money by the Government in that event, for certain charitable purpose.

In an administration suit brought by the Secretary of State in Council against the testator's brother, wife, and grand-daughter, for the carrying out of the trusts of the will—

Held, that clause 7, if it stood alone, would confer an absolute estate on the daughter's daughter on the death of the widow ;

That the disqualification in clause 9 must come into operation, if at all, at or before the death of the widow ; and that it was unnecessary to decide [305] whether, if they had been conditions subsequent, they would or would not have been in violation of Hindu law ;

That clause 20 was supplementary to clause 9, and that by it, the gift over to the Government was to take effect, if at all, immediately upon the widow's death, in the event of the grand-daughter dying before her without having borne a son, or in the event of the grand daughter being disqualified at the date of such death.

One possible event not having been provided for by the will, viz., that of the grand-daughter predeceasing the widow, having borne a son, their Lordships did not decide what would happen on the occurrence of that event. The rights of a son yet unborn would not, in the case supposed, be affected by any judgment in these proceedings.

Lady Langdale v. Briggs (1), as explained in the Tagore case (2), approved.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court of Bengal (3rd March 1879), reversing a decree of the District Judge of Hughli (29th March 1877) (3).

The decree of the High Court, of 3rd March 1879, against which this appeal was preferred, was made in an administration suit brought by the Secretary of State for India in Council, against the present appellant and two of the respondents, for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of the true construction of the will of one Beharilal Mookerjee, who died in 1874 at Boinchi, in the Hughli district, possessed of considerable estates.

The clauses of the will, giving rise to questions on which the Courts in India differed, are set forth in their Lordships' judgment. The District Judge of Hughli decided that the will, in so far as it went beyond the gift of a life-interest to the testator's grand-daughter, was invalid ; and that the gift over to the Government was, therefore, ineffectual. He held that, "in the event of failure of any male heir to whom Hori Dasi is to transmit the estate at her death, the Government is to become trustee for certain charitable purposes. Inasmuch, however, as it has been held that the will, so far as it goes beyond the gift of the life-interest to the grand-daughter, is bad, this further provision is also null and void." Against this decision all the parties to the suit severally appealed.

[306] The High Court reversed this decision and made the following decree :—"That the decree of the lower Court be set aside, and in lieu thereof it is hereby declared, that the will executed by Beharilal Mookerjee, and bearing date the 9th of August 1870, is a genuine and valid instrument. And it is further declared, that, under the said will, Srimoti Komoleh Kamini Debi, widow of the said Beharilal Mookerjee, deceased, is entitled, as a Hindu widow, to enjoy the profits of the estate left by the said Beharilal, subject to the payment of rupees one hundred (Rs. 100) per mensem to Srimoti Hori Dasi Debi for life, as in the said will mentioned; and that, on her death, the said Srimoti Hori Dosi Debi, grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) of the said Beharilal Mookerjee, if she be living at the time, and is not barren or without a living son, or otherwise disqualified, will be entitled to succeed to the estate left by the said Beharilal Mookerjee, deceased, absolutely. And further, that the gift over to the Government for purposes mentioned in the said will, in case of the said Hori Dasi not surviving, or being otherwise disqualified, as in the said will described and mentioned, is good and valid. And it is further declared, that, in the event of the said Hori Dasi being disqualified as aforesaid to succeed to the said estate, she shall be entitled to a monthly allowance of Rs. three hundred (Rs. 300) only out of the proceeds of the said estate. And it is hereby further ordered, that the lower Court do frame a proper scheme for the due administration of the trust-fund for charitable purposes and the like, created by the said will of the deceased Beharilal Mookerjee, and that the administration of the said trust-fund be entrusted to the said widow, who shall be assisted in the said administration by Rakhal Das Chowdhri and Sitanath Banerjee, as provided in the will aforesaid, subject, as therein provided, to supervision by the Collector of Hughli, and also to removal in case of misconduct or negligence. And it is further ordered and decreed, that the defendant, Ramlal Mookerjee, do pay to the Secretary of State and Komoleh Kamini Debi and Hori Dasi Debi the sum of rupees four thousand two hundred and seventy-two (Rs. 4,272) to be apportioned between them, being part of the costs incurred by them in this Court; and do further pay to the [307] Secretary of State the sum of rupees one thousand (Rs. 1,000) only as costs for counsel's fees in the Court below; and further do bear his own costs of this Court and of the Court below. And it is further ordered and decreed that the remaining costs incurred by the Secretary of State, Komoleh Kamini Debi, and Hori Dasi Debi, in this Court, which are hereby assessed at rupees two thousand seven hundred and fifty-five (Rs. 2,755), as also the costs incurred by them in the Court below, be paid out of the estate left by the deceased Beharilal Mookerjee aforesaid. And it is further ordered and decreed that the costs incurred by the defendants Rakhal Das Chowdhri and Sitanath Banerjee, severally, in the Court below, be likewise paid out of the said estate of Beharilal Mookerjee deceased."

Mr. Montague Cookson, Q.C., and Mr. Macrae, for the appellant.

Mr. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. Woodroffe for the Secretary of State for India in Council.

Mr. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. Cowell for Komoleh Kamini Debi and Hori Dasi Debi.

Mr. Montague Cookson, Q.C., for the appellants.—The disposition attempted in this will goes beyond the limit permitted by the Hindu law. An ulterior estate may be created to take effect on the termination of a life estate in favour of a person, either in fact or in contemplation of law, in existence at the death of the testator—Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhu Mullick (1) and Jatindramohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (2); Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, para. 350. But in this case there is an ineffectual attempt to create a future interest in favour of a grand-daughter's sons when born. The words "putra poutradi krame" must have been used in clause 8 to indicate descent to male descendants only. The proper construction of clause 20 supports this view of the testator's intention. Clauses 1 to 6, relating to interests anterior to the gift in question, are not, [308] under the same rule of construction, precisely as clauses 7, 8, 9 and 20. The former merely follow the law of succession ab intestato and any lacunae can be filled up by it. But as to the latter the bequest can only be brought within the law by straining the construction—a course not permitted—Mainwaring v. Beevar (1) and Leake v. Robinson (2). The testator's intention must be taken as expressed by the words used, by which alone the validity of the bequest must be tested: for words cannot be supplemented or altered, even if intestacy should result from refraining from so dealing with a defective disposition—Chapman v. Brown (3) and Criver v. Frank (4). A similar case of gift to a class of sons occurred in Bernal v. Bernal (5). Again, at any period of her life, the granddaughter might come under the disqualification referred to in clause 20. Thus the will is uncertain as to the point of time fixed for the fulfilment of the conditions under which the estate to the granddaughter and her sons is to take effect. But by Hindu law the object of a gift must be certain and known—Jatindramohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (6); Vayavastha Darpana, 606. Again, by Hindu law, the property of a female (stridhan) is at her absolute disposal; so that the Hindu law is contravened by the limitation in favour of male descendants. If the gift can be taken to be absolute, it then will fall under the rule that an absolute gift cannot be divested by a direction which is only to take effect contingently upon an uncertain future event. The result is, that the gift is one which the Hindu law cannot recognize. He also referred to Amirtolal Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (7); Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 2nd edition, chap. xi; Macnaghten's Hindu Law, Vol. ii, case 15, pp. 221, 222; Vayavastha Darpana, 606; and Soudaminy Dossee v. Jogeshchunder Dutt (8).

Mr. Woodroffe (with whom was Mr. Cowie, Q. C.) for the Secretary of State in Council, respondent.—If the 7th clause [309] had stood alone, Hori Dasi, the daughter's daughter, would have taken an absolute estate of inheritance on the death of the widow. The words "putra poutradi krame" do not indicate any intention to exclude females from the succession, but are apt and sufficient to create a general estate of inheritance—Jatindramohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (6), Kisti Kishore Bhattacharjee v. Seetamonee Bhattacharjee (9), and Bhoobun Mohini Debya v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (10). The argument for the appellant rests on a construction of those words which they will not bear. There is no rule of Hindu law preventing the creation of an absolute estate in remainder upon a condition. In this case the estate was created conditional upon the granddaughter's not being disqualified, either in the manner pointed out by the will, or otherwise before the death of the widow. The widow's death was the punctum temporis. He referred to Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhu Mullick (11).

Mr. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. Cowell for the other respondents.—The estate given to the granddaughter was a general estate of inheritance not limited to her male descendants—Raja Nursing Debi v. Roy Koylasnath (12). The will did not contemplate the divesting of the estate when once it had vested, which it would do on the death of the widow, provided that the grand-daughter had not then become disqualified. Such a limitation of future rights, defeasible only upon a contingency which might never arise, is good by Hindu law. The decree does not properly express the conditions, agreeing in that respect, neither with the will, nor with the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir R. P. COLLIER.—This was an administration suit for the purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the will [310] of one Beharilal Mookerjee, instituted by the Secretary of State for India, in which Komoleh Kamini Debi, widow of the testator, Mani Lal Bundo-padhya, father and guardian of a minor, Hori Dosi Debi, daughter's daughter of the testator, and Ramlal Mookerjee, a brother of the testator, were made defendants. Two other defendants were afterwards added, described in the will as advisers of the widow. The plaint concludes in these terms—

"But as the defendant No. 3, Ramlal Mookerjee, has impeached the will as a forgery, and as defendant No. 1, the widow, who has the management of, and is in the enjoyment of the profits of, the estate under the provisions of the aforesaid will, has omitted to take any action to have the validity of the will determined, or to carry out the charitable bequests therein contained, though the period for carrying out such bequests has expired, and as the rights and interest of this plaintiff, as well as of other persons interested in the above will, are thereby seriously endangered, it is therefore prayed, that the authenticity and validity of the said will may be declared, and that the said Komoleh Kamini Debi, defendant No. 1, be directed and enjoined to make over to the Collector, or such other trustee or trustees as the Court may appoint, the sum of one lac and fifty thousand (Rs. 1,50,000), in Government securities, for the establishment of the aforesaid school and hospital, and a further sum of rupees one thousand (Rs. 1,000) (sic) for the furnishing of the said school and dispensary; and further, that the rights of the several parties under the will may be ascertained and determined, and that a scheme for the due administration of the trust under the will may be propounded, with such other relief as the Court may think fit to grant."

Beharilal Mookerjee, a wealthy Hindu, made the will in question on the 9th of August, 1870. He had then a wife living. He had never had a son, but had had a daughter, who had died, leaving an infant daughter, Hori Dasi Debi. As he was then not passed middle age, he may have reasonably contemplated having further issue. He died on the 12th of August 1874, without sons or daughters, leaving his wife and grand-daughter him surviving, and a brother, Ramlal Mookerjee, the [311] defendant, with whom he had not been on good terms. The material parts of the will for the purposes of the present appeal are as follows:—

"2. I have no son at present. If one or more sons should be born to me hereafter, and should have arrived at majority at the time of my death, then he or they shall be entitled to my properties according to the shastras.

"3. If my son or sons or any son (of mine), should be a minor at the time of my death, then the whole of my properties shall remain under the Court of Wards until my son, or, in the case of my having more sons than one, until the youngest son, has attained majority.

"4. If grandsons or great grandsons of mine should be living at the time of my death, they shall be the owners of my property according to the shastras.

"5. If no sons, grandsons, or great-grandsons of mine should be living at the time of my death, then my wife, Srimoti Komoleh Kamini Debi, shall be proprietress of the whole of my properties, according to the shastras, and shall enjoy the profits thereof during her lifetime.

"6. If one or more daughters should be born to me, then, on the death of my wife, she or they, and, on the death of her or of them, my grandsons (daughter's sons), shall be the owners of my property according to the shastras.

"7. If no daughter or daughter's son of mine should be living at the time of the death of my wife, then my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter), Srimoti Hori Dasi Debi, shall become the proprietress of my property, and shall remain in undisputed possession thereof from generation to generation.

"8. If the death of my wife should take place before my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) arrives at majority and bears a son, then the whole of the estate shall remain in charge of the Court of Wards, until she arrives at majority and bears a son.

"9. If my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) should be barren or a sonless widow, or if she should be otherwise disqualified, she shall not become entitled to my property, but shall receive an allowance of Rs. 300 per mensem for life."

[312] Here follow bequests for the purposes of establishing a school and dispensary, with respect to which no question now arises. Clause 20 is in these terms:—

"If no son or daughter should be born to me, or if my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) should die before she bears a son, or if she should be barren or become a sonless widow, or be otherwise disqualified, then the whole of my properties shall pass into the hands of the Government. The whole of the profits of my estate, which shall remain as surplus after the expenses connected with the various matters specified above have been defrayed, shall be employed by the Government, as it thinks proper, in the improvement of the school and dispensary, and in alleviating the sufferings of the blind, the lame, the poor, and the helpless of my native village, and of the neighbouring villages."

After some previous proceedings, which it is not now necessary to refer to, the present suit was instituted on the 19th May 1876. All the defendants, except Ramlal, supported the will, and the widow submitted that she had carried out its directions to the best of her ability.

Ramlal disputed the factum of the will. He also maintained that no part of it was effectual except that which gave the estate to the widow for life.

On the cause coming on for hearing before Mr. Prinsep, the Judge of Hughli, he was of opinion that the making of the will was fully proved; that, under its provisions, and subject to the payment of an immediate legacy of Rs. 1,50,000 for charitable purposes, the widow took a life-interest in the estate; that, on her death, Hori Dasi, if not disqualified, would succeed and take a life-interest; but that, after the death of both ladies, or Ramlal, on the ground that Hori Dasi took nothing under the will ; he no longer disputed its factum.

The Secretary of state, on the ground that the gift over to the Government, in certain events, ought to have been held good.

The High Court held that Beharilal's intention was to confer on Hori Dasi, if she survived, and was, on the widow's death, not disqualified, an absolute estate, and that his intention was effectuated ; also that the gift over to the Government, which they interpreted as taking effect in the event of Hori Dasi not surviving the widow, or being disqualified at the time of the widow's death, but not in the event of her becoming subsequently disqualified, was good.

The High Court, indeed, observed :—

"The only case not clearly provided for in the will seems to be this : If Hori Dasi had a son who survived her, but herself died before the widow,—Was it intended that the Government should take, or was the son to take ? On the one hand, neither of the further events contemplated in the 20th clause would have arisen,—i.e., Hori Dasi would not have died without giving birth to a son, nor would she be disqualified at the death of the widow, unless we say that death itself is included in disqualification ; nor, on the other hand, could Hori Dasi's son easily succeed, being a stranger, and not provided for in the will. But we need not occupy ourselves with a case not before us."

A decree was drawn up, which, in some points which will be subsequently referred to, is not in conformity with the judgment.

No argument has been addressed to their Lordships founded on the first six clauses of the will, which are no more than bequests in accordance with what the testator conceived to be the rules of the ordinary Hindu law of succession. All of these, except the 5th, refer to possible events which did not happen. [314] The 5th describes an ordinary Hindu widow's estate, which would take effect on the death of the testator by operation of law. The argument in favour of the appellant has been founded on the 7th, 8th, 9th and 20th clauses.

It was not, and could not be disputed, that, since the case of Soorjeemoney Dossey v. Denobundo Mullick (2), recognized and confirmed as that case has been in the case commonly called the Tagore case—Jatin-dromohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (3) and in Bhoobun Mohini Debya v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (4), a gift by will upon an event which is to happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being, to a person in existence, and capable of taking under the will at the testator's death, was good and valid under Hindu law ; and consequently that it was competent to the testator, by the use of apt words, to confer an absolute estate on Hori Dasi on the death of his widow. But it was argued that the word "putra poutradi krame" (translated in the record "from generation to generation," expressed in their etymological sense an intention on the part of the testator to limit the succession to the heir male of Hori Dasi; that the gift, being "stridhan," would descend by law, in the first instance, to her unmarried daughters equally with her sons, and that in its further descent females would have peculiar rights; that, therefore, the testator had endeavoured to create an estate of inheritance in her inconsistent with the general law of inheritance, which endeavour, under the authority of the Tagore case (1), would render his gift to Hori Dasi void, or, at the least, would prevent its operating further than to give her an estate for life. This latter view was adopted by the Judge of first instance. Upon this question the High Court observe—

"We dissent entirely from the learned Judge, when he holds that the words 'putra poutradi krame' denote an attempt to limit the succession to Hori Dasi's male descendants in any manner opposed to the decision in the Tagore will case Tagore v. Tagore (1): the devise and bequest to her are con-[315]tained in the words 'adhikarini haibek,' and the words added are merely usual words implying an absolute and heritable estate.

"If these words are to be interpreted in the sense applied to them by the Judge, very few grants in the Bengali language could stand, because the formula is one constantly used to show that the estate is to go beyond the life."

The effect of these words is thus spoken of by Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the High Court in the Tagore case—Jatindra-mohan Tagore v. Ganendramohan Tagore (2):—

"A gift to a man and his sons and grandsons, or to a man and his sons' sons, would, in the absence of anything showing contrary intention, pass a general estate of inheritance according to Hindu law. I believe the words usually used in Bengal are 'putra poutradi krame,' and in the Upper Provinces 'naslan baad naslan,' the literal meaning of the former being to sons, grandsons, &c., in due succession, and of the latter in regular descent or succession."

The correctness of these observations was not questioned in the judgment on appeal. It was not denied at the bar that these words, though undoubtedly importing the male sex in their primary signification, would, in the case of a gift to a male, be read as words of general inheritance, and would include female as well as male heirs, where, by the law, his estate would descend to females. Their Lordships feel no greater difficulty in applying them to the female heirs of a female, where, by law, the estate would descend to such heirs, and see no sufficient reason for narrowing the construction of words which have been often recognized in India and by this Board as apt for conferring an estate of inheritance. They are of opinion that clause 7, if it stood alone, would confer an absolute estate on Hori Dasi upon the death of the widow.

Clause 8 has been relied upon for enforcing the argument that the testator's object was to benefit the sons of his grand-daughter, an object which their Lordships think he might reasonably suppose best effectuated by giving complete power [316] over the estate to his grand-daughter.

1881 The provision for management by the Court of Wards obviously does MARCH 1. not affect Hori Dasi's estate.
 ——— But it has been further contended that the conditions under which,
 PRIVY by clause 9, Hori Dasi is to take, or, more properly speaking, under which COUNCIL. she is not to take, are so uncertain as to render the gift to her void. It ——— has been argued, that no time is fixed at which the disqualifications are 7 C 304 to operate, that she may become a sonless widow at any period of her (P.C.) = life, and that therefore, it must always remain uncertain whether 8 I.A. 46 = 10 or not she is capable of taking the gift. In their Lordships'
 C.L.R. 349 = opinion, all difficulty as to the question of time is got rid of by reading 4 Sar. P.C J. the clause in conjunction with that which precedes it, and treating the 225 = 5 death of the widow as the time when it is, if at all, to take effect. This
 Ind. Jur. natural interpretation of the clause gives effect to it, and their Lordships
 327. are by no means disposed to give it a forced construction which would defeat its operation. The death of the widow is in their opinion, the point of time when it is to be ascertained once for all whether Hori Dasi takes, or is disqualified from taking.

More difficulty arises in the construction of clause 20.

It has been argued that the words "if my grand-daughter should die before she bears a son" are not limited to any point of time; that if this be so, the other disqualifications mentioned in that clause (which are repetitions of those in clause 9) are not limited either, and may take effect at any period of Hori Dasi's life; that they are in effect conditions subsequent, upon the happening of any of which, the estate, if it had ever vested in her, would be divested. It has been further argued that the gift over of an estate on events which may happen, not upon the close of a life in being, but at some uncertain time during its continuance, is void, as contrary to Hindu law.

If, as the High Court have found, their Lordships think rightly, that one main object of the testator was to prevent his brother taking his property in any event, it is obvious that clause 9, creating the incapacity, under certain circumstances, of the grand-daughter to take upon the widow's death, required to be supplemented by another directing on whom the estate, if [317] such incapacity happened, should devolve. This is the purpose of clause 20, which should be read as supplementary to clause 9, and as if it had immediately followed it. This purpose points to the construction that the gift over was to take effect, if at all, at the widow's death. When providing for the devolution of the estate on Hori Dasi's being disqualified to take it, it was natural that the testator should also provide (which he had not done before) for its devolution in the event of her dying before her grandmother. This provision is, by implication, contained in clause 20, and full effect may be given to every part of the clause, without supposing (what their Lordships agree with the High Court is somewhat improbable), that the testator intended the estate, if once vested in his grand-daughter, should be liable to be afterwards divested.

Viewed in this light, the section would read,—

"If no son or daughter be born to me, or if, on my widow's death, my grand-daughter should have died before bearing a son, or should be barren, or become a sonless widow, or otherwise disqualified, then the whole of my properties shall pass into the hands of the Government."

This construction, which their Lordships adopt, makes it unnecessary to discuss whether the disqualifications, if they had been conditions subsequent, would or would not be in violation of Hindu law. It has not been disputed that, if they are to be ascertained on the widow's death, the gift over to the Government is good.

One possible event, undoubtedly, is unprovided for, viz., the granddaughter predeceasing the widow, having borne a son.

Their Lordships do not deem it necessary to decide what would happen on the occurrence of this event. Indeed, no judgment which they could give would affect the rights, if he should have any, of a son yet unborn, in the case supposed. In declining to declare the rights of the parties in this contingent event, they are acting in conformity with the rule laid down in the case of Lady Langdale v. Briggs (1) explained as it was in the Tagore case (2).

[318] It follows that the decree of the High Court must be amended by substituting, for the words "not surviving," "having died during the lifetime of such widow without bearing a son."

It is further necessary that, for the words "or without a living son," there should be substituted the words "or a sonless widow." The decree as it stands is neither in accordance with the will nor the judgment.

Subject to these variations, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree be affirmed. The costs of all the parties to the appeal should be paid out of the testators' estate.

GYAN CHUNDER SEN AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. DURGA CHURN SEN (Defendant).^{*} [7th April, 1881.]

Partition - Appointment of Commissioner - Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 396 - General Clauses Act (I of 1863).

In a suit for partition, the Subordinate Judge appointed an Amin under s. 396 of the Civil Procedure Code to effect a partition. The Amin made his report which was objected to on the merits by the defendant, but ultimately the report was confirmed, the defendant having acquiesced in the proceedings. On appeal to the District Judge, the defendant took an objection, that the appointment of the Amin was irregular.

[319] Held, that having acquiesced in the proceedings so far, it was too late for the defendant to take the objection.

Per PONTIFEX, J. (FIELD, J., doubting).—In a suit for partition, it is competent to the Court, in its preliminary decree, to appoint any one person whom it thinks fit to be a commissioner to make the partition under s. 396 of the Civil Procedure Code. The section uses the word "commissioners," but it is not necessary for the purposes of partition that there should be more than one commissioner, and by force of the General Clauses Act, the word "commissioners" may be read in the singular number.

The intention of s. 396 is that, upon the first hearing of a suit, the Court shall determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to a partition, and shall ascertain who the several persons interested in the property are, and shall direct by a preliminary decree or order that commissioners be appointed to make the partition.

[Diss., 6 Bom. L.R. 586 (587); R., 24 C. 725 (733) (F.B.); 12 C. 275 (277); 124 P.R. 1893]

THE facts of this case fully appear from the judgment of Pontifex, J. Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the appellants.
Baboo Boykant Nath Dass for the respondent.
The judgments of the Court were as follows :—

JUDGMENTS.

PONTIFEX, J.—We think this case must go back to the District Judge, who has disposed of it on a preliminary technical objection, which we do not think applies. The plaintiff in the case sued for partition, and obtained a decree from the Subordinate Judge. Against that decree the defendant appealed to the District Judge, not, however, raising the present objection, and his appeal was dismissed. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was that the plaintiff was entitled to a partition, and to a certain share in the property to be partitioned, and there was a direction that an Amin should proceed to the land and partition the property. An Amin accordingly proceeded to partition the property, and he made a report to the Court. Against that report the defendant took objections on the merits. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objections, and confirmed the Amin's report. Against the order of confirmation, the defendant again appealed to the District Judge, and after having acquiesced in all the proceedings that had taken place before the Amin, for the first time in the Court [320] of the District Judge, took an oral objection that partition proceedings could not be taken in execution of a decree. The District Judge has held, that that objection is tenable, on the ground, that s. 396 of Code of Civil Procedure shows, that partition-proceedings are not to form part of what are ordinarily called execution-proceedings. Section 396 directs, that, in any suit in which the partition of immoveable property, not paying revenue to Government, appears to the Court to be necessary, the Court, after ascertaining the several parties interested in such property and their several rights therein, may issue a commission to such persons as it thinks fit. Then it goes on to state what the procedure of the commissioners is to be, and it says that they are to "prepare and sign a report which shall be annexed to the commission and transmitted to the Court, and the Court, after hearing any objections which the parties may make to the report or reports, shall either quash the same and issue a new commission, or pass a decree in accordance therewith." We think it obvious, that what was intended by that section was, that, upon the first hearing of the suit, the Court shall determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to a partition, and shall ascertain who the several persons interested in the property are, and shall direct by a preliminary decree or order that commissioners be appointed to make the partition. But there is no virtue in the word "commission" in s. 396. It is quite competent to the Court to appoint any person whom it thinks fit as commissioner to make the partition. True, s. 396 refers to "commissioners" in the plural; but, speaking for myself, I think the General Clauses Act would apply, and under it, words in the plural number include the singular, and vice versa. There is no reason that I can see, why in his preliminary decree the Subordinate Judge should not appoint the Amin as commissioner to effect the partition, and what has since been done, is virtually what ought to be done under s. 396. The commissioner prepared a report and returned it to the Court,—objections were taken to that report,—these objections were disallowed by the Court: and the Court has affirmed the terms of the partition which had been arrived at by the commissioner, and it then became the duty of the [321] Court to pass a decree in accordance therewith. It is true that the Court has not actually passed a decree, but the order made in execution-proceedings is virtually a decree upon further consideration. The objection was, therefore, at the most a mere technical objection taken after a complete acquiescence in all the proceedings. But in my opinion, not even a technical objection lies, because the order of the Subordinate Judge was an order within the meaning of the third clause of s. 396; at all events, after the complete acquiescence in all the previous proceedings, it was too late for the defendant to raise such an objection; and in our opinion it ought not to have been listened to. We think, therefore, that the case must go back to the District Judge to be tried on its merits, the preliminary objection being overruled. It does not appear clearly whether the objection in the Court below was raised and insisted upon by the defendant, or whether it was an objection taken by the Court. If it was an objection taken by the Court, we think the costs of this hearing should be borne by the parties according to their respective shares in the property. If it was an objection pressed by the defendant, we think the Court below should deal with the costs of this appeal as to it may seem fit.

FIELD, J.—I concur in the order of remand, and I think that the defendant having acquiesced in the proceedings, ought not to have been allowed to take the objection that the provisions of s. 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure require the appointment of more than a single commissioner. Section 2 of the General Clauses Act, I of 1868, enacts, that, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, words in the singular shall include the plural, and vice versa. Having regard to the language of the third clause of s. 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure, I would have some doubt whether there is not in the context something repugnant to the plural, "commissioners" including the singular "commissioner"; but it is not necessary to determine this question, as I agree that the defendant, by acquiescing in the proceedings, has precluded himself from raising it at the stage at which he took the objection.

9 C.L.R. 193.Justice of the Peace—Disqualifying Interest—Summons issued at instance of and determined by a Servant of the Prosecutor—Evidence, Refusal to hear—Finality of Assessment—Beng. Act IV of 1876 ss 75, 77, 78, 79, 346 and 351—High Court Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875), 147.

A, alleged to have carried on business in Calcutta without having taken out a license under Beng. Act IV of 1876, was summoned at the instance of the Corporation by B, a servant of the Corporation and also a Justice of the Peace. The case was subsequently heard by B, and it was shown that notice of the assessment under class ii, sch. 3, had been duly served on A, and that though he then denied his liability to take out any license, and stated that he carried on no business as alleged, he had not appealed against the assessment under s. 79. It was further shown that the assessment had been confirmed by the Chairman of the Corporation, but that the amount had not been paid. A thereupon tendered evidence to show that he was not liable to take out any license; but B refused to hear such evidence, and convicting A, sentenced him to pay a fine. On an application under the above circumstances, to the High Court under s. 147, Act X of 1875.

Held, that the finality of the decision of the Chairman referred to in s. 79 has only reference to the class under which a particular person, who is admittedly bound to take out a license under s. 75, should be assessed, and not to the case where the liability to take out a license at all is denied, this being a question which can only be determined judicially after taking evidence by a competent Court in a prosecution under s. 77, and that, therefore, the refusal of B to hear the evidence tendered by A on this point, was illegal.

Held also, that the proceedings and ultimate conviction of A were illegal, inasmuch as B being a servant of the prosecutor, i.e., the Corporation, had such an interest as might give him a bias in the matter, and that consequently he ought not to have sat as Justice of the Peace either at the granting or upon the hearing of the summons.

[Compared, 8 M.L.T. 305; R., 9 C. 397 (403).]

IN this case the petitioner, J. Wood, was summoned at the instance of the Corporation of the Town of Calcutta, on the 29th [323] March 1881, for not having duly taken out a license for the year 1880, for the trade or profession carried on and exercised by him, as a boarding-house keeper at No. 5, Wood Street, in the town of Calcutta, under s. 75 of Beng. Act IV of 1876, and being convicted by Mr. O. C. Dutt, a Justice of the Peace, was fined Rs. 60.

It appeared that on the 31st January 1881, one Mr. O'Brien Moore, a License Inspector of the Corporation, assessed the petitioner as a boarding-house keeper, under class ii, sched. 3 of Beng. Act IV of 1876, and caused a notice to be served upon him to pay the required license tax for the past year, viz., 1880. The petitioner thereupon informed the License Inspector that he was not liable to take out a license as he was not a boarding-house keeper, and had not carried on any such business in the year 1880. This denial was not accepted, and the assessment having been confirmed by the Chairman, he was informed under s. 79 that he must pay Rs. 80 as his license tax, or appeal against the assessment within fourteen days after depositing that amount as required by that section. No appeal having been preferred on the expiry of the fourteen days,—i.e., on the 28th February 1881,—an application was made to Mr. O. C. Dutt, a Justice of the Peace, who was also employed as the Collector of Taxes under the Corporation, and a summons being granted, the case was heard on the 29th March 1881 by the same Justice of the Peace. At the hearing, the petitioner, through his pleader, admitted the receipt of the notice of assessment under s. 79, but contended that he was not liable to take out a license, as he was not a boarding-house keeper. Mr. O. C. Dutt thereupon examined Mr. Moore on behalf of the prosecution, who proved that the petitioner was assessed by the Chairman under class ii as a boarding-house keeper, carrying on business as such during the year 1880, and that the notice of assessment having been given, the petitioner did not appeal against that assessment, nor was the amount assessed paid. The petitioner then tendered evidence to prove that he was not a boarding-house keeper, and had not carried on the business of one in the year 1880; but Mr. O. C. Dutt refused to hear it; and, convicting the petitioner, fined him Rs. 60.

[324] The petitioner, accordingly, applied to the High Court under s. 147 of Act X of 1875, to have the record called up and the conviction quashed.

Mr. Sale for the petitioner.—The conviction is bad, because Mr. O. C. Dutt, being a Collector of the Municipality (i.e., a servant of the Corporation, who is the prosecutor) has such an interest in the case as to disqualify him from trying it, and even the consent of the accused would not cure the disqualification—The Queen v. Bholanath Sen (1). The principle is clearly laid down by Mr. Justice Norman in The Queen v. Muktar Singh (2), that if the Judge has any personal or pecuniary interest in the subject of the charge, he is disqualified from trying it, and this principle has been frequently acted upon—Dimes v. The Grand Junction Canal Co. (3). It is not necessary to show that there is the probability of a Magistrate being influenced by his position, but even if there be the slightest possibility of his decision being affected thereby, it would be sufficient to disqualify him from hearing the charge. The Chairman, moreover, has no power to decide the question as to whether a person is a trader or not, or liable to assessment under the Act, for s. 79 refers solely to the case of a person, who is admittedly properly assessable, having been assessed under a wrong class, and not to that of a person who denies that he is liable to be assessed at all, for this is a question which can only be determined judicially, and the Chairman has no authority given him to determine it. Section 78 too provides, that the Chairman shall determine under which of the classes every person to whom a license may be granted shall be assessed, and therefore points to the same conclusion; besides, s. 77 is a semipenal one, and as such must be construed strictly. The Magistrate had, therefore, no right to set out the evidence tendered, but should have tried the question as to whether the petitioner was liable to assessment at all, and this cannot now be tried on affidavit.

[325] Mr. Sale then proceeded to argue that there was evidence that the petitioner carried on no trade, when he was stopped by the Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee (Officiating Standing Counsel) for the Corporation (contra).—The case having been brought up under s. 147 of Act X of 1875, the Court must be satisfied from the circumstances of the case that there has been a substantial injustice done, and not merely that there has been an irregularity in the proceedings. Mr. O. C. Dutt had no personal or pecuniary interest in the case whatever, and on that ground it could not be contended that he was incapacitated from dealing with the case, merely because he was connected with the Municipality in the way he was. The finding of the Magistrate must also be taken to be correct, —viz., that the decision of the Chairman was to be final. When the Legislature considered that cases under the Act should be dealt with by independent persons, it specifically enacted that such was to be the procedure; for instance, s. 79 provides, that appeals under it are to be heard and determined by not less than three Commissioners other than executive officers of the Commissioners. It would seem clear, therefore, that the Legislature never intended to preclude persons in the position of Mr. O. C. Dutt from dealing with cases like the present. Were the contention of the other side to be upheld, then the Act would practically become unworkable, and there must have been numerous cases decided previous to this, in which the proceedings were illegal, for formerly the Justices of the Peace were all members of the Municipal Corporation, and similar cases were heard and determined by them. If the Court, however, considers that the exclusion of the evidence tendered by Wood has vitiated the Magistrate's decision, the case may be sent back to be tried on its merits.

Mr. Sale in reply pointed out that, in Dimes v. The Grand Junction Canal Co. (1), it was held that, under such circumstance, the decision was voidable on objection being taken, and not absolutely void. He also referred to The Queen v. Gibbon (2).

[326] The following judgments of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

MITTER, J., (after stating the facts as above, continued).—Mr. O.C. Dutt refused to hear the evidence that was tendered on behalf of the petitioner, on the ground that the Chairman's assessment having become final under the last para. of s. 79, the question, whether he was liable to take out a license under s. 75, could not be re-opened. One of the grounds upon which the conviction has been questioned is, that this view of the law is not correct.

The other ground upon which the conviction has been questioned is, that Mr. O. C. Dutt, by reason of his connection with the Corporation of the town of Calcutta, as their Collector of Taxes, was incompetent to try this case.

I am of opinion that the proceedings and the ultimate conviction are illegal. In the first place it seems to me, that Mr. O. C. Dutt was not right in convicting the petitioner without allowing him to substantiate his defence by evidence. The construction put upon the word "final" in the last para. of s. 79, is, in my opinion, not correct. The decision of the Chairman or Vice-Chairman has reference only to the class under which a particular person, who is admittedly bound to take out a license under s. 75, should be assessed. The decision referred to herein is what is referred to in s. 78, which is as follows:—

(1) 3 H. L. Cas. 795.

"The Chairman, or some officer authorized by him in that behalf, shall determine under which of the classes mentioned in the third schedule every person to whom a license may be granted shall be assessed; and the Chairman may, in his discretion, remit the payment of license tax either in whole or in part to any person classified under classes 5 or 6 of the third schedule." The language of the section does not authorize the Chairman to determine (when the fact is denied), whether a particular person is bound to take out a license under s. 75. He shall determine under which of the classes mentioned in the third schedule every person to whom a license may be granted shall be assessed. Therefore, if the Chairman be of opinion, that a particular person is liable under the Act to take out a license, and if that person denies his liability, the question [327] can only be determined judicially,—i.e., after taking evidence by a competent Court in a prosecution under s. 77.

Section 346 of the Act says,—that "the Commissioners may direct any prosecution for any public nuisance whatsoever, and may order proceedings to be taken for the punishment of any person offending against any of the provisions of this Act." It was under the provisions of this section that the prosecution in this case was commenced. Certainly, before a conviction could be had, the prosecutor was bound to prove that the accused had offended "against any of the provisions of this Act." If the view of the law taken by Mr. O. C. Dutt is correct, it is not for the Magistrate before whom the accused is prosecuted to determine that question; but he is bound to accept the decision of the Chairman, who virtually stands in the position of a prosecutor. It is clear to me that this view is not warranted by any of the provisions of the Act in question. The conviction is therefore bad upon this ground.

As to the other objection it is clear upon the authorities—The Queen v. Meyer (1), The Queen v. Milledge (2), The Queen v. Gibbon (3),—that if Mr. O. C. Dutt had been a member of the Corporation, he would have been disqualified not only to take part in the final hearing, but also to issue the original summons.

Whether the principle upon which these cases had been decided should not be applied to the case of a servant of the Corporation sitting as a Judge, is the question which we have to decide with reference to this objection. The reason of the rule is that a person who, by his interest, pecuniary or personal, is likely to have a bias in the matter of the prosecution, ought not to sit as a Judge. Having regard to the reason of the rule, I think, that the principle of the cases cited above should be extended to the case of a person who is connected with the Corporation in the same way as Mr. O. C. Dutt.

The proceedings and the conviction must, therefore, be quashed.

[328] MACLEAN, J.—The petitioner, J. Wood, was convicted before Mr. O. C. Dutt, Justice of the Peace, of having exercised the trade, profession, or calling of a boarding-house keeper in 1880, without having taken out a license as required by s. 75, Beng. Act IV of 1876. A fine of Rs. 60 was imposed under s. 77 of the Act.

The record has been called up to this Court under s. 147, Act X of 1875, on the petitioner's application. His chief ground for invoking the interference of this Court is, that he was not allowed to enter into a defence shewing that he did not exercise a boarding-house keeper's calling in 1882: but objection is also taken to Mr. O. C. Dutt's competency to deal with the case, as, besides being a Justice of the Peace, he occupies a post, as Collector of Taxes, under the Corporation of Calcutta, the prosecutor in the case.

To commence with the first point, the case stands thus:—By some unexplained interpretation of the law it seems to be the practice for the officers of the Corporation to take the initiative and assess persons who may be considered fit subjects for assessment. This does not seem to be what the law intends. The law requires every person, who exercises a specified profession, trade or calling, to take out a license yearly (s. 75), and it renders such persons liable to fine for exercising the specified profession, &c., without a license (s. 77). There is nothing which calls upon the Corporation to assess a person who has not applied for a license.

Now Wood has admittedly not applied for a license of any sort, and if he exercised the calling of a boarding-house keeper without a license, he is justly liable to a fine under s. 77. But, as in all criminal cases, the onus of proving that Wood exercised the calling lay upon, and has not been discharged by, the prosecutor. According to the prevailing practice, the Inspector Moore "assessed" Wood as a boarding house-keeper at the close of January 1881, and the Chairman "determined the class" of the license Wood was to take. I have no doubt this was not any part of the Chairman's duty under s. 78, in the absence of any application from Wood. The absurdity of assessing any one for 1880, in February 1881, becomes appa-[329] rent on reference to s. 76. A license taken out in 1881 would take effect for that year. However, Wood was informed of the class under which he had been assessed (s. 79) on the 14th February, 1881, and though he would have been perfectly justified in disregarding the notice of an officious and illegal assessment he went to the office of the Corporation and made some enquiries, but up to the 28th February he made no appeal.

The period of limitation prescribed by s. 351 would have expired on the 28th February, and on that date Inspector Moore applied for a summons which was issued by order of Mr. O. C. Dutt, and the case came on before him on the 29th March. At the trial Mr. O. C. Dutt adopted a course which had the effect of closing Wood's mouth. He held (following, he says, legal opinion) that no appeal having been preferred under s. 79, the Chairman's decision was final,—that is to say, Wood not having taken out a license was not entitled to go into evidence to show that he was not in 1880 a boarding-house keeper, because the Chairman had, in 1881, ex-parte, determined that he was to be assessed under sched. 3. The point seems to me to be so utterly unenable that it is waste of time to discuss it. The simple issue for trial under s. 77 was, whether Wood had exercised a particular trade or calling or not, and whether the Chairman had assessed him or not, or whether he had appealed or not, had no conceivable connection with that issue. The proceedings on the 29th March must, therefore, be set aside on this ground.

As to the other point, as far as I have been able to discover, Mr. O. C. Dutt is not a member of the Corporation, but he holds the office of Collector under the Corporation, being remunerated by a percentage on bills issued for collection of taxes. He has, it is admitted, no interest in the collection of license tax or carriage or horse tax. We had, therefore, no personal interest in the result of this case against Wood, but he is undoubtedly a servant of the prosecutor,—i.e., the Corporation; and, in my opinion, his sitting as a Judge in the case was illegal. If he had been a member of the Corporation, he would have been absolutely disqualified from sitting, and even from issuing a summons; see The Queen v. Milledge (1) [330] and The Queen v. Gibbon (2). But although these cases do not, I think, directly establish that a servant of the Corporation is disqualified to act as a Justice of the Peace, the principle seems to me to apply with greater force to a Justice who is a servant, than to a Justice who is a member, of the Corporation. On this ground also, therefore, the proceedings must be set aside.

DOORGA NARAIN SEN (Plaintiff) v. RAM LALL CHHUTAR
(Defendant.)^{*} [31st May, 1881.]

Appeal—Rent Suit under Rs. 100—Title—Beng. Act VIII of 1860, s. 102 Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 522.

A and B both of whom set up a claim to certain land, brought separate rent suits against the tenants. In none of these suits did the amount claimed exceed Rs. 100. Subsequently to the institution of the rent suits, A sued B to establish his title to the land in dispute. The District Judge before whom the rent suits came on appeal, allowed them to stand over until the decision in the suit between A and B. That suit was decided in favour of B, and the Judge then decided the rent suits instituted by B in his favour, and dismissing the suits instituted by A.

Held, that no second appeal would lie in the rent suits, as no question of title between parties having conflicting claims was decided in them.

Held also that there was no such irregularity on the part of the District Judge in the course which he pursued, of making his decision in the rent [331] suits depend upon the decision in the suit to establish title, as would justify the Court in interfering under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was enacted in order to protect parties in the position of ryot-defendants, and to prevent their being dragged up to the High Court in cases where the decree or demand is under Rs. 100. In such cases the decree is intended to have the same effect as that of a Small Cause Court.

1869, no second appeal would lie in these cases. We think that this objection must prevail. The facts of the case are—that two persons, the plaintiff Doorga Narain and one Banimadhub, were contesting with one another as to who was rightfully entitled to the property in which the defendants had tenures, and both of them brought rent suits against the tenants. These rent suits came first before the Subordinate Judge, and afterwards before the District Judge. Subsequently to the institution of those rent suits, Doorga Narain brought a suit against Banimadhub to establish his title, and whilst that suit was pending, the District Judge allowed the rent cases to stand over, thinking he might decide them in accordance with the decision which might be arrived at in the title suit. He decided the suit between Doorga Narain and Banimadhub in Banimadhub's favour, and immediately after the rent suits were called on, and the learned Judge decided those instituted by Banimadhub in favour of Banimadhub, and dismissed the suits of the plaintiff Doorga Narain. He says:—
“It has been found in the case as to title that Banimadhub has all along been entitled to the rents, and the decreeing of the present appeals will give them to him. It has been argued that if the ultimate decision as to title in a possible special appeal should be in favour of Doorga Narain, the present [332] decision will complicate any suit for mesne profits that Doorga Narain might bring against Banimadhub. But I do not think, that a Court is justified, when giving present judgment, in considering such remote contingencies, which may never in fact come into being.” We think, nevertheless, that if the learned Judge had been applied to, to appoint a receiver in the suit between Doorga Narain and Banimadhub, on the supposition that possibly an appeal might be preferred against his decision in that suit, he would have done so, and so secured the rents payable by the tenants. But the learned Judge was never applied to, to secure the rents, and consequently the decrees dismissing Doorga Narain's rents were made. Now it is admitted that the suits are for less amounts than Rs. 100, but it is argued that these are suits in which a question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, has been determined by the judgment. The plaintiff urges, that such a question has been decided in these cases, but in fact it was not in these suits that any question of title as between parties having conflicting claims was determined. That question was determined in the previous title suit between Doorga Narain and Banimadhub. No such question was determined in this suit. We think, therefore, that these cases fall within the provisions of s. 102, and that no second appeal would lie. It has been decided in the cases of Shaikh Dilbur v. Issur Chunder Roy (1), Donzell v. Tehan Nodaf (2), and Kashee Ram Doss v. Maharanee Sham Mohinee (3), that where A sues B for rent of land, and B pleads that the rent of the land is payable to C and not to A, and where C is not made a party to the suit in which a decree is passed against B, no question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto is determined by the judgment in such suit. Therefore, there is authority to show that the preliminary objection taken in this case is valid, and must prevail.

It has then been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that, if that is the case, then there is really no judgment of the Court below in these rent cases, because the judgment of the learned Judge depends entirely upon his judgment in the other suit [333] between Doorga Narain and Banimadhub, and he had no right to import that into a suit between Doorga

(1) 21 W.R. 36.

Narain and the tenants; and it is argued that the plaintiff would have a right, under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to ask this Court to set aside the judgment of the Judge on the ground of irregularity. Now, even if we were to permit the appellant in these appeals to rely upon the provisions of s. 622 without putting him to the expense of making a separate application in order to get the benefit of that section, we do not think these are cases in which we would be justified in interfering under s. 622. It appears to us that s. 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was enacted really to protect parties in the position of ryot-defendants, to prevent their being dragged up to the High Court in cases where the decree or demand was under Rs. 100. In such cases the decree was intended to have the same effect as that of a Small Cause Court; and we think it would be very hard in these cases, merely because the Judge has decided between the parties on the ground of the former decision between Doorga Narain and Banimadhub, to put the ryots to the very great expense of being dragged into this Court. We think, therefore, that even under s. 622 we should not be inclined to interfere in these cases. The preliminary objection must prevail, and the appeals Nos. 1670, 1675, and 1684 will be dismissed with costs, and others without costs, as the respondents in those cases have not appeared.

ROBARTS v. HARRISON. [6th June, 1881.]

Arbitration--Filing of Award--Time within which Award should be filed--Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 516--Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 176.

The act of an arbitrator, in handing in an award to the proper officer of the Court, for the purpose of the award being filed, cannot be considered as an "application" within the meaning of the Limitation Act.

[R., 8 A. 492 (495); 8 A. 519 (534); 13 A. 78 (84).]

[334] BY an order dated the 5th February, 1880, certain matters in dispute in this suit were referred to arbitration, one of the terms of the order being, that the award should be filed on or before the 5th October, 1880. In accordance with this order the arbitrators made and published their award on the 29th September, 1880, intimating to the attorneys of both parties that they were ready to file the award on payment of their fees. This was objected to, and subsequently the arbitrators filed their award with consent of both parties on the 29th April, 1881.

The plaintiff then applied for and obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the defendant to show cause why the award should not be taken off the file on the ground that it had not been filed within the time mentioned in the order of the 5th February, 1880, and that, further, under art. 176 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, the award was filed too late.

Mr. Branson (with him Mr. Allen) showed cause against the rule.—The award was made within time, and there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code as to the time within which such award must be filed, although ss. 516 and 521 both make mention as to the time in which the award is to be made. Art. 176, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, has no reference to s. 516 of the Code, as, under s. 516, no "application" to file the award is necessary: the mention of s. 516 in art. 176 is probably a mistake for s. 523, otherwise there is no limitation for s. 523. The application contemplated in art. 176 is an application to the Court; this is clear from a consideration of all the articles in the 3rd division of sch. ii of the Limitation Act. The applications there referred to are applications to the Court. No such application is necessary in filing an award; it is presented and filed as a matter of course. There is no provision for taking an award off the file when once it has been filed. It may be set aside under s. 521, but this must be within ten days from the time in which the award has been submitted, according to art. 158 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877. There is no authority in the Civil Procedure Code for such an application as the present. Neither is there any clause in the Limitation Act which touches the case.

[335] Mr. Jackson in support of the rule.—Article 176 of the Limitation Act applies to s. 516. The act of filing an award is an application in itself. The Court must consent before an award can be filed, and an application is necessary before such consent can be given.

The judgment of the Court was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This was an application by the plaintiff to take off the file an award filed by the arbitrators who made it, on the ground that under the Limitation Act it was filed too late.

The reference was in a suit. The award was made and published in due time, on the 29th September, 1880. It was filed by the arbitrators on the 29th April, 1881. The plaintiff contends that the filing was out of time under art. 176 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), which prescribes a period of six months from the making of the award for an "application under the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 516 or 525, that an award be filed in Court."

In order to see whether this contention is correct it is necessary to examine the sections of the Code relating to arbitrations. There are three kinds of arbitration dealt with in chap. xxxvii—references of matters in difference in suits already pending; references not in suits, but in which the submission is filed under s. 523, and which thereupon become suits; and thirdly, references not in suits, and in which the submission has not been filed, but in which the award may be filed under s. 525.

The first two kinds of reference may, for the present purpose, be regarded as identical. In each, by the time the award has to be dealt with, the Court has already control of the proceedings and the rules as to the award are in each case the same. By s. 516 the arbitrators must sign their award and cause it to be filed in Court. This causing the award to be filed, it must be observed, is the act of the arbitrators. The only duty of the Court or its officers is to receive the award when tendered, and, I suppose, to make the proper endorsement or entry, and deposit the document in its proper place. The judicial functions of the Court are to be exercised afterwards, or at any rate in different matters altogether. The Court may, on certain grounds [336] modify the award (s. 518), or remit it (s. 520), or set it aside altogether (s. 521), or may make a decree according to the award (s. 522).

In cases where, before the award, there has been no proceeding in Court, the procedure is entirely different. Before the award can be filed, there must (s. 525) be an application in writing, against which the other parties must have an opportunity of showing cause. And the Court has or may have, to determine important questions (s. 526), as for instance, whether the arbitrator has or has not exceeded his authority.

These, briefly stated, are the provisions of the Code bearing upon the present question. It remains to consider the meaning of the words "applications under s. 516 or s. 525" as used in art. 176 in the schedule of the Limitation Act. So far as s. 525 is concerned, there is no difficulty. No award can be filed under that section without a written application which the Court deals with judicially. But it is a very different thing to say that the filing of an award by an arbitrator under s. 516 is an application.

The Limitation Act is a disabling Act, and no Court, I think, is justified in straining its language beyond its natural meaning in order to take away from any one the rights which but for it he would possess. There is little in the general framing of the Act to throw light upon particular provisions. But there is something.

The preamble deals only with "applications to Courts," and I think the Act is limited accordingly. It is also legitimate, I think, to consider the character of the series of applications enumerated in order to ascertain what an application means: see Re Ishan Chunder Roy (1). Now, in the case of all the other applications mentioned in the schedule, the application is one which the Court has to deal with judicially by making an order in accordance with the application or dismissing it. I think I should have to do great violence to the ordinary meaning of words, and to disregard all the indications afforded by the Act itself, if I were to hold that the act of an arbitrator, in handing [337] an award to the proper officer to be filed, was an application within the meaning of the Limitation Act.

It was argued that the effect of holding as I do would be to make the article in question wholly inoperative. It may be so. It may be, on the other hand, as was also suggested, that the article might be held to apply to an application to the Court by any of the parties to compel an arbitrator to file his award. These are questions which do not arise on the present application. I can only take the words of the Statute as they stand, and see whether they apply to the case before me. I think they do not.

This application is dismissed with costs.

ss. 293, 297, 306, 308, 309.

The provisions of s. 293, Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code), for making a defaulting purchaser at a sale liable for any deficiency on a resale, extend to all sales, whether of moveable or immoveable property, and also to resales held under ss. 297, 306 and 308.

[F., 12 M. 454 (458); Appr., 2 C.W.N. 411 (412); Cited, 3 L.B.R. 225 (226); Cons., 16 C. 535 (538).]

THE facts in this case were that, in execution of a decree for Rs. 73 (with costs and interest), held by Ram Sahai Lall in a [338] suit against Rajrani Kooer, the respondent, some immoveable property belonging to the latter was put up for sale and knocked down to Ramdhani Sahai, the appellant, for Rs. 600, on the 15th January, 1880. He having failed to make the deposit of 25 per cent. on the amount of his bid, as required under s. 306, Act X of 1877, the property was forthwith put up on the same day and resold, fetching Rs. 156 at such second sale. The judgment-debtor then proceeded under s. 293 of the Code to recover the deficiency on the resale, viz., Rs. 444, from the defaulting purchaser. The latter opposed the application, alleging that he was not liable to pay the amount; but the Munsif on the 25th May, 1880, decided that he was bound to make good the deficiency; and that order was subsequently, on the 6th November, 1880, confirmed by the District Judge. The auction-purchaser accordingly now specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Behary Lall Mitter, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by MITTER, J. (who, after stating the facts as above, continued).—The respondent's pleader objects in limine to the hearing of the appeal, on the ground that the original suit was one of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and supported his objection by reference to Soorjo Coomar Surma Roy v. Krishto Coomar Chowdhry (1).

It is in our opinion unnecessary to express any opinion on this point, as the case is a very clear one on the merits.

We think, that the contention of the appellant's pleader, that s. 293 only applies to cases of resale under s. 300, cannot stand examination. We do not pretend to explain why the Legislature adopted the expression "resold" "and resale" in s. 293 and ss. 308 and 309, while the expression in s. 297 and s. 306 is one "put up again and sold;" but it is quite clear that the second sale, whether held under s. 297, s. 306, or s. 308, is a resale, [339] that s. 293 applies to all of them. It is only necessary to notice the position of s. 293 amongst the general rules, and the 2nd schedule under the heading chap. xix, to understand that the provision for making a defaulting purchaser at a sale liable for deficiency on resale, now extends to all sales, whether of moveable or immoveable property, and also to resales held under ss. 297, 306 or 308. It had been held under the old Code that this liability did not extend to purchasers defaulting to make the deposit under s. 353, Act VIII of 1859—Ajoodhya Pershad v. Gopal Dutt Misser (1)—and we have no doubt the law has been advisedly made wider in its scope.

Whether the case comes under s. 244, Act X of 1877, or not, is a point which is perhaps open to doubt. We leave it open for the present.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

MANLY (Defendant) v. PATTERSON (Plaintiff).^{*} [27th May, 1881.]

Appeal to Privy Council—Application for Leave to Appeal—Judgment of one Judge—Ministerial and Judicial Acts—Letters Patent, cl. 15.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in the Court of first instance. On appeal to the High Court, the decision of the lower Court was upheld, but the decree was varied in respect of some matters relating to the mode in which the relief to which the plaintiff was declared entitled should be granted. The defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but the application was refused, on the ground that the judgments in the High Court and the Court of first instance were in effect concurrent judgments, and that no substantial point of law was involved in the case. The defendant appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Held, that no appeal would lie.

Mussamut Amirunnesa v. Baboo Behary Lall (2) followed.

[R., 17 C. 455 (457) ; 18 C. 182 (185).]

IN this case an application was made by the defendant in the Privy Council Department for leave to appeal against a decree [340] of the High Court (PONTIFEX and McDONELL, JJ.), affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pargannas. The application was refused by Mr. Justice Pontifex, who held that the decisions in the Court of first instance and in the High Court were in effect concurrent, and that no substantial point of law was involved in the case. It appeared that the High Court had modified the decree of the lower Court on the question of costs and on some other matters relating to the manner in which the relief to which the plaintiff was declared should be worked out under the decree. The applicant appealed.

Mr. H. Bell, for the appellant.

Mr. Bonnerjee, for the respondent, objected that no appeal would lie.

Mr. Bell, for the appellant, contended, that there was an appeal, because the learned Judge had not followed the provisions of s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He had not confined himself to his ministerial duties, but had gone out of his way to give a judicial decision. In such a case an appeal would lie on the authority of Kally Soondery Dabia's case (1) The learned Judge says, the judgments are in effect concurrent; that is a judicial decision from which there is an appeal. Even if they were in effect concurrent, that would not be sufficient. Section 596 requires that the decree appealed from should affirm the decree of the lower Court, and that is not the case here. Mussamut Amirunnesa v. Baboo Behari Lall (2) is not in point here.

Mr. Bonnerjee was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Pontifex, in the Privy Council Department, refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council, upon the ground that [341] there was no point of law, and that, on the facts, the High Court had agreed with the judgment of the Court below.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the Standing Counsel that no appeal lies under such circumstances; and there is no doubt that this is an attempt to reopen a question which was decided by this Court in the year 1876. See Mussamut Amirunnesa v. Baboo Behari Lall (2).

The sections in the Civil Procedure Code, under which Mr. Bell says he has a right to appeal, are contained in chap. xlv; but these sections present no new phase of the law upon this subject since the above case was decided, because at that time the Privy Council Act, VI of 1874, was in force, and the sections in that Act upon the subject are identically the same as those in chap. xlv of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877.

At the time when the above case was decided by Mr. Justice Ainslie and myself, we thought it right to consult most of our brother Judges before we delivered our judgment, because it was most important (having regard to what had been the practice of this Court), that some definite rule should be laid down.

For several years past, the Judge in the Privy Council Department (selected from amongst the most experienced Judges of the Court), has always sat alone to determine points relating to Privy Council Appeals, and especially as to whether leave to appeal should be granted or refused. For a long time no attempt was made to appeal against his orders; but for the first time in the year 1873 some appeals were preferred against orders refusing an appeal, which were heard by Division Benches without the question of jurisdiction being raised, though in four out of those cases the Judges expressed a doubt as to whether they had any power to hear the appeal.

After consulting other Judges, Mr. Justice Ainslie and myself decided in the above case that the appeal would not lie; and one of our principal reasons for so deciding was this, that the Judge in the Privy Council Department when dealing with such questions had always been considered as acting under the Privy Council orders, rather than as a Judge of the High Court.

[342] I observe we said in that case, "we have been unable to find a single instance, previously to the 23rd August, 1873, of any attempt to appeal against an order or certificate made by a Judge of this Department; and, indeed, it is very difficult to understand how an order or certificate under rule 2 of the Privy Council orders could properly be considered as a judgment of the High Court. It was in aid of the Privy Council that the rule was established; it has its origin in an Act of Parliament passed expressly for the better administration of justice in Her Majesty's Privy Council, and the certificate given under it would seem rather to form a part of the Privy Council proceedings, than to come within the legitimate province of this Court."

(1) 6 C. 594.

(2) 25 W. R. 529.

9 C.L.R. 166.

Now the appeal which is now before us is precisely similar to that which in the above case we held would not lie; and therefore, we are bound by that authority. If we had any doubt about the correctness of it, all we could do would be to refer the present appeal to a Full Bench. But we do not entertain any such doubt.

Mr. Bell has argued, that the late case of Kally Soondery Dabia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (1) in which I had the misfortune to differ from two of my learned brothers, is opposed to the case of Mussamut Amirunnessa v. Behary Lall (2), but we think it is not so. If Mr. Justice Mitter and myself, before whom that appeal was heard, had been of opinion that the question in that case was the same as had been decided in the former one, we should have felt ourselves bound by the decision. But we considered, rightly or wrongly that the question was a different one; that it arose under a different section of the Code, and depended on different considerations. It is a great satisfaction to me that Kally Soondery's case (1) is now under appeal to the Privy Council; because I trust that their Lordships may see their way to laying down some definite rule as to what orders made by a single Judge of the High Court in the Privy Council Department are, or are not, appealable to a Division Bench.

If those orders are appealable to a Division Bench, it would of course be useless that a single Judge should continue any [343] longer to sit alone in the Privy Council Department, because all, or nearly all, his orders would be appealed, and thus a double expense would be entailed upon suitors, as well as a double labour upon the Court. For our present purpose it is sufficient to say that we consider ourselves bound by the former decision in 1876. Mr. Bell's client in the present case is of course not without remedy, because he may always appeal to the Privy Council; and we know that their Lordships have frequently thought it right to admit appeals, when leave to appeal has been refused in this Court. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Cause of Action—Declaratory Decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 53.

In a suit for confirmation of possession and declaration of title in respect of land, where the plaint did not disclose any facts from which it could be said that the defendants denied the plaintiffs' title, but from the proceedings in the original cause it was established, that, before the suit was brought, there was a dispute existing between the parties as regards the title, and that a decree in favor of the plaintiffs had been passed by the original Court on the merits of the case,—

Held, that though the plaint might have been rejected in the first instance under s. 35 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that it did not disclose any cause of action, it was too late for an Appellate Court to reverse the decree solely on that ground, without being satisfied that no such cause of action was established on the evidence.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for confirmation of possession and declaration of title in respect of a plot of land, [344] and for the recovery of rupees 25 as damages for two palm trees which had been felled by the plaintiffs but forcibly taken away by the defendants. The plaint, after giving the history of the plaintiffs' title, and alleging that they were in possession, continued: "The principal defendants, on the 9th Magh 1285, Fusli, forcibly carried away two palm trees felled by the plaintiffs, and which trees stand on the purchased land mentioned above, by which act of the defendants there has been a shock to the plaintiffs' future possession, and created the date for the cause of action." The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title. They also alleged, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action for confirmation of possession and declaration of title. The Munsif overruled this last objection, and on the merits awarded a decree in favor of the plaintiffs for confirmation of possession, holding that the plaintiffs' title was proved. The Munsif also awarded a decree for Rs. 5, the value of the palm trees taken away by the defendants.

On appeal, the only point urged before the lower Appellate Court was, that as the plaint disclosed no cause of action for confirmation of possession and declaration of title, the Munsif's decree, in so far as it declared the plaintiffs' title, confirming his possession, was bad in law. The lower Appellate Court yielded to these objections and reversed so much of the Munsif's decree as related to these two prayers. As regards the damages, the defendants' (appellants') pleader, before the lower Appellate Court, stated that he would not contest the validity of the decrees.

The plaintiffs then specially appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1704 of 1879, against the decree of Baboo Aubinash Chunder Mitter, Additional Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 22nd May 1879, reversing the decree of Moulvi Abdul Aziz, Munsif of Behar, dated the 30th November 1878.

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J. (who after stating the facts as above, continued):— On the second appeal it is argued before us that the lower Appellate Court was in error in reversing the Munsif's decree [345] for confirmation of possession. The suit was brought on the 3rd May 1878, after the Specific Relief Act came into force. Section 42 of that Act says:—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion," &c. Now, in this case, no doubt, the plaint does not disclose any facts from which it could be said that the defendants either denied their title or were interested to deny it; but from the proceedings in the lower Court it was established, that, before the suit was brought, there was a dispute between the parties as regards the title of the plaintiffs. That being so, although, under s. 53 of the Procedure Code, the Munsif might have rejected the plaint on the ground that it did not disclose any cause of action for maintaining a suit for declaration of title and confirmation of possession, yet a decree having been passed by the Munsif upon the merits, it was too late for the Appellate Court to reverse that decree upon the ground that the plaint did not disclose any cause of action for declaration of right and confirmation of possession. The appellate Court could only reverse the decree if it was satisfied, that not only the plaint did not disclose any cause of action for granting a declaratory decree, but that no such cause of action was established on the evidence. That cannot be said in this case, because it is quite clear from the written statement and other proceedings in this case, that there was really a dispute between the parties as regards the plaintiffs' title before the suit was brought. We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court so far as it reverses the decree of the Munsif, and remand the case for retrial. Costs to abide the result.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

The facts of this case fully appear from the judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX, J.—In this case the appellants are the judgment-debtors, and they sought under s. 311 to set aside a sale made under a mortgage decree on the ground of irregularity, alleging that they had sustained substantial injury by reason of that irregularity, the full price for the property not having been obtained. The plaintiff in the suit in which the property was sold was a mortgagee, and he obtained leave to bid, and purchased two lots at that sale.

Now it appears that his uncle, Radhamohun, who is joint in estate and lives in commensality with him, had been appointed by the Court of Wards the manager of one of the infant defendants; and this purchase by the plaintiff Brojendronath, the decree-holder, [347] was in fact a purchase for the benefit of the joint family, as is not denied by the pleader for the decree-holder. Now some evidence was read before us, showing that there was irregularity with respect to one of these lots, in publishing the proclamation of sale on the premises, and that the full price was not obtained for the properties; but we think it is not necessary to proceed upon that ground. It appears from the evidence adduced by the decree-holder that the am-mukhtear of Radhamohun, the uncle of the decree-holder, and manager of the infant defendant, at the time when the sale was taking place, discouraged other bidders from bidding for the property. The evidence of the decree-holder's own witnesses is, that this am-mukhtear went about at the sale stating that the decree-holder would bid up to Rs. 1,000 per cotta, and both these witnesses say that they were dissuaded from bidding in consequence of this statement. The first witness says that this statement was made to him by the am-mukhtear himself. The second witness does not say that the am-mukhtear informed him that he was prepared to bid Rs. 1,000 for every cotta, but he says that some one at the time of the sale did tell him that. We think that when liberty is given to a decree-holder to bid at the sale of the judgment-debtor's property, he is bound to exercise the most scrupulous fairness in purchasing that property; and if he or his agent dissuades others from purchasing at the sale, that of itself is a sufficient ground why the purchase should be set aside. We find that the judgment-debtor summoned Radhamohun, the uncle of the decree-holder who, as I have said, was joint with him, and for whose joint benefit the purchase was made, as a witness upon this proceeding; but Radhamohun refused to attend, and the judgment-debtor, therefore, was unable to examine him upon this point. We think, however, that there is ample evidence to show, that at the sale, the am-mukhtear of Radhamohun did go about discouraging bidders from purchasing, and that the bidders were dissuaded from bidding at the auction; and that, therefore, the sale should be set aside. We are of opinion that, at any future sale, inasmuch as the decree-holder is joint in family with the manager of one of the defendants, leave ought not to be granted [348] to him to purchase at the sale, because any purchase made by him would be for the benefit of the family of which the manager of the infant defendant is one of the members; and it would in fact be a purchase by an agent of the property of his principal, a purchase which this Court cannot recognize. Under the circumstances, we think the appellant should have the costs of this appeal.

SHAMA SOONDARY (Plaintiff) v. HURRO SOONDARY AND OTHERS

Valuation of suit—Duty of Appellate Court—Court Fees Act (VII of 1879), s. 12—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 578.

A suit was instituted and tried on the merits in the Court of a Subordinate Judge without any objection being taken, either by the defendants or by the court, that the plaint was insufficiently stamped. The defendants appealed on the merits, and the District Judge, being of opinion that the stamp on the plaint was inadequate, called upon the plaintiff to pay the additional fee which would have been payable, had the objection been taken and the question rightly decided in the Court of first instance.

Held, on second appeal, that the order of the Judge was properly made under s. 12, cl. ii of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870.

Kala Chand Sen v. Anund Kristo Bose (1) dissented from. Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code, explained.

[R., 12 A. 129 (162) (F.B.) ; D., 15 M. 288 (289).]

IN this case the plaintiff sued to obtain from the defendants certain nikas, or general adjustment papers and account books of a business, which the plaintiff alleged had been carried on by the defendants on behalf of the plaintiff's deceased husband. The plaint was stamped with a ten-rupee stamp, though the plaint stated that "the presumed loss for not rendering to me the account papers sought for, may amount to more than [349] Rs. 4,000." No objection was taken that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, and the Court of first instance decided the case on the merits in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed, and the Judge, suo motu, held that, before he could go into the merits of the case, he must, under s. 12, Act VII of 1870 (the Court Fees Act), require the plaintiff to pay in such an additional amount as would make up the fee payable on a suit valued at four thousand rupees. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

 Mr. Branson and Baboo Bykunt Nath Das for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by MORRIS, J.—The plaintiff, as a member of a partnership concern, brings this suit against her co-partners and certain persons, who have acted as servants of the concern, to obtain from them certain account papers which she specifies. She estimates the loss arising from the defendants not rendering these accounts to her at Rs. 4,000, but she values the suit at Rs. 10 only, as she seeks to obtain a simple declaratory decree, and intimates her intention of bringing a further suit for account after she has received the account papers which she requires.

The first Court framed certain issues, none of which had reference to the valuation of the suit, and finally gave a partial decree in favour of the plaintiff. Against this judgment the defendants appealed, and their memorandum of appeal was engrossed on a stamp of like valuation. The District Judge, on taking up the appeal, was of opinion that the plaint bore an inadequate stamp, and under the proviso in the 1st clause of s. 12 of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870, called upon the plaintiff to make good the stamp due upon the full amount of her claim, viz., Rs. 4,000. As she failed to do this within the required time, the District Judge set aside the decision of the [350] Subordinate Judge "as void for want of jurisdiction." Against this order a special appeal has been preferred to this Court, and the ground taken is, that the District Judge has erred in law in the construction which he put upon the 12th section of the Court Fees Act; in other words, that, as no question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of fee chargeable on the plaint was decided by the Court of first instance, the Appellate Court was not competent, under the 2nd clause of s. 12, to raise the point of its own motion and require an additional fee to be paid. In support of this contention, the case of Kala Chand Sen v. Anund Kristo Bose (1) is referred to, in which, in a case presenting somewhat similar circumstances, a Division Bench of this Court expressed the opinion that "the object of the proviso" (to s. 12) "was no doubt to enable the Appellate Court to interfere for the protection of the revenue in a case where a question of that sort might be raised and improperly decided. In the present case, even if it be assumed that the stamp originally paid was what it really was not, insufficient, there was no question raised in the Court of first instance. It seems to us, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have allowed to be raised on this occasion a question which neither had been raised in the first Court, where, if necessary, the amount of additional stamp might have been at once paid, nor in the grounds of appeal."

We observe that, in that case, the Court held that the stamp originally paid was not insufficient and therefore this expression of opinion relative to s. 12 of the Court Fees Act taking the form of an obiter dictum cannot be regarded as an authoritative declaration of the law.

It appears to us that the words "every question relating to valuation . . . on a plaint . . . shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint is filed, &c.," do not carry with them the meaning that a distinct question or issue relating to valuation must be raised and a formal decision thereon passed by the Court of first instance before a Court of appeal can interfere. The law, s. 54, Code of Civil Procedure, directs that a plaint shall be rejected if the relief ought is undervalued, and the plain-[351] tiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so; or if the relief sought is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so.

No plaint can be accepted and registered until these preliminary questions of valuation and sufficiency of stamp have been determined by the Court, and therefore it seems to us that it would be straining the language of s. 12 to say that the question relating to valuation therein mentioned has only reference to a question raised as a distinct issue, and decided by the Court of first instance in the presence of, and as between, the parties to the suit.

If then the Court of appeal should, as in the case now before us, consider that the plaint has been admitted "to the detriment of the revenue," the law declares that it "shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay as much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided,"—that is, in the present case, that the plaintiff (respondent) shall pay the additional fee on his plaint. If he does not do so, "the provisions of s. 10, para. ii, shall apply," or "the suit" (i.e., the appeal) "shall be stayed until the additional fee has been paid. If the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall be dismissed." From this we understand that, unless the plaintiff submits to the order of the superior Court, he loses any advantage that he may have obtained on his improperly-stamped plaint. This is exactly what the District Judge has done in the present case, though the terms of his order that the suit is "void for want of jurisdiction" are not exactly in accordance with law. We understand him, however, to mean that, as the plaint was not properly admitted, the lower Court could not try the suit, and that, therefore, it must be dismissed on that ground, and not on its merits.

But it is next contended that an Appellate Court could not consider this matter, because s. 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that "no decree shall be reversed, &c., on [352] account of any error, defect, or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court." This provision is a re-enactment of s. 350, Act VIII of 1859. But while the Act of 1859 was in force, the Court Fees Act of 1870 was passed, and s. 12 of that Act just quoted clearly made it the duty of a superior or Appellate Court to take action for the protection of the revenue, and to dismiss the suit, if the party in default did not pay in the deficient court-fee.

That was clearly an exception to s. 350, Act VIII of 1859. The Code of 1877 has merely followed in the steps of the Act of 1859. Section 12 of the Court Fees Act is still in force, and must be read with s. 578 of Act X of 1877 in the same manner as it was read with s. 350, Act VII of 1859. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the judgment of the Court below is right, and we dismiss the special appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LATECRIMINAL. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RIASAT ALI alias BABU MIYA

4 Shome [3rd June, 1881.]

A person cannot be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 511 of the Indian Penal Code, unless the offence would have been committed if the attempt charged had succeeded.

A prisoner who was charged with attempting to commit forgery of a valuable security, was found guilty by the jury of attempting to commit forgery. The jury explained their finding by saying that the prisoner had ordered certain receipt forms to be printed similar to those used by the Bengal Coal Company, and that one of these forms had actually been printed and the [353] proof corrected by him; that the prisoner had had an intention of making such addition to the printed form as would make it a false document; and that he did this dishonestly and with intent to commit fraud. The Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment for one year under ss. 465 and 511 of the Indian Penal Code for attempting to commit forgery.

Held, that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside.

[Diss., 15 A. 173 (177); F., 1 L.B.R. 264 (265); R., Rat. Unrep. Cr. Rul. 470. (471); 22 C. 131 (138).]

In this case the prisoner was charged with cheating under ss. 417, 419 of the Indian Penal Code; with attempting to cheat under the same section and s. 511; with abetment of forgery under ss. 109, 116 and 465; and with attempting to commit forgery of valuable securities for the purpose of cheating, ss. 467, 468 and 511. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. From the evidence it appeared that the prisoner had given orders to the Burdwan Press to print one hundred receipts forms similar to those formerly used by the Bengal Coal Company; that he corrected one proof of those forms, and was suggesting further corrections in a second proof in order to assimilate the form to that at present used by the company, when he was arrested by the police. The prosecution alleged that the prisoner intended to make use of these receipts and represent them to be those of the Bengal Coal Company for the purpose of cheating. The Sessions Judge considered that there was no ground for proceeding on the first and second charges, as, there was in his opinion no evidence of deception having been used when the printer of the Burdwan Press agreed to receive the money and to print the forms, and on those two charges, he directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. On the other two charges, the jury were unanimous in finding the prisoner guilty of an attempt to commit forgery; not guilty of an attempt to forge a valuable security; and not guilty of abetment of forgery. When asked to explain the facts upon which they found the prisoner guilty, the jury said that the prisoner did order the receipt forms to be printed; that, though the form actually printed was not a document within the meaning of s. 29 of the Penal Code, the prisoner had an intention of making such addition to it as would make it a false document; and that he did this dishonestly and with intent to commit fraud. The prisoner was sentenced, under ss. 465 and [354] 511 of the Penal Code, to be rigorously imprisoned for one year. The prisoner appealed to the High Court.

The judgments of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and PRINSEP, J.) were as follows :—

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C. J.—The prisoner in this case was charged with an attempt to commit forgery, and the facts proved were, that he gave orders to the Burdwan Press to print one hundred receipt forms similar to those which were formerly used by the Bengal Coal Company; that he corrected one proof of those forms, and was suggesting further corrections in a second proof in order to assimilate the form to that now used by the Company, when he was arrested by the police. The jury found him guilty of an attempt to commit forgery, "in that he dishonestly and with the intent to commit fraud caused a document to be printed with the intention of making such an addition to it as would make it a false document."

Assuming this finding of the jury, as to what the prisoner actually did, to be correct, the question is, whether he could be legally convicted of an attempt to commit forgery? The definition of forgery in ss. 463 and 464 of the Indian Penal Code, so far as it is necessary to refer to it for our present purpose, is as follows;—Section 463 says, "Whoever makes a false document, or part of a document, with intent to commit fraud, commits forgery." And by s. 464 a person is said to "make a false document who dishonestly makes or executes a document, or part of a document, with the intention of causing it to be believed that such document, or part of a document, was made, sealed or signed by or by the authority of a person, by whom, or by whose authority, he knows that it was not made, sealed or signed."

Now in this case the jury have not found that the receipt form in itself was a false document. If they had, they must have found the prisoner guilty of forgery, and not of the attempt to commit it. They considered, and rightly considered, as it seems to me, that without the addition of a seal or signature [355] purporting to be the seal or signature of the Bengal Coal Company, the printed form would not be a false document. Their view, as I understand it, was that the commencing to print or write a document, which, when completed, was intended to be a false document, amounted, if coupled with the intent to defraud, to an attempt to commit forgery.

But it has been suggested that the printing and correcting of a form which is intended by additions, which are to be made to it, to be a false document, is in itself the making of a part of a false document within the meaning of s. 464, and therefore amounts to forgery. If this were so, it seems to me that the mere printing or writing of a single word upon a piece of paper, however innocent the word might be, would be the making a part of a false document, if it were coupled with an intention to add such other words to it as would make it eventually a false document. In my opinion this is very far from the meaning of s. 464; and I think that such a construction of the section involves a misconception, not only of 1881 the word "make," but also of the sense in which the phrase "part of a JUNE 3. document" is used in the section.

APPEL- I consider that the "making" of a document, or part of a document, LATE does not mean "writing" or "printing" it, but signing or otherwise execut-CRIMINAL. ing it; as in legal phrase we speak of "making an indenture" or "making a promissory note," by which is not meant the writing out of the form of the instrument, but the sealing or signing it as a deed or note. The fact 7 C. 352= that the word "makes" is used in the section in conjunction with the Shome words "signs," "seals" or "executes," or makes any mark "denoting the L.R. 155= execution, &c.," seems to me very clearly to denote that this is its 8 C L.R. 572 true meaning. What constitutes a false document, or part of a document, is not the writing of any number of words which in themselves are innocent, but the affixing the seal or signature of some person to the document, or part of a document, knowing that the seal or signature is not his, and that he gave no authority to affix it. In other words, the falsity consists in the document, or part of a document, being signed or sealed with the name or seal of a person who did not in fact sign or seal it.

[356] Referring then again to the finding of the jury, the question in this case seems to be, whether what the prisoner did, amounted to preparation only, or to an actual attempt to commit the offence.

In the case of Reg. v. Chessman (1), Lord Blackburn thus defines an attempt to commit a crime. He says:—"There is no doubt a difference between the preparation antecedent to an offence and the actual attempt; but if the actual transaction has commenced, which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted, there is clearly an attempt to commit the crime;" and in McPherson's case (2), Cockburn, C. J., says:—"The word attempt clearly conveys with it the idea, that if the attempt had succeeded, the offence charged would have been committed. An attempt must be to do that which, if successful, would amount to the felony charged." It seems to me, that this definition of an attempt to commit an offence is a sound one, and applying it to the present case, the question is whether what the prisoner did amounted to an attempt to make a false document.

I have already said, that, in my opinion, the printed form was not in itself a false document, and that it would not have become a false document, or part of a document (according to the definition in s. 464), until the seal or signature of the Bengal Coal Company had been forged upon it, so as to make it appear that such seal or signature was that of the Bengal Coal Company. The prisoner, therefore, would not be guilty of the offence of forgery until the printed form had thus been converted into a false document; and for the same reason, I think that he would not be guilty of an attempt to commit forgery until he had done some act towards making one of the forms a false document. If, for instance, he had been caught in the act of writing the name of the Company upon the printed form, and had only completed a single letter of the name, I think that he would have been guilty of the offence charged, because (to use the words of Lord Blackburn) "the actual transaction would have commenced, which would have ended in the crime of forgery, if not interrupted." But as it was, all that he did [357] consisted in mere preparation for the commission of the crime. He was no more guilty of an attempt to commit forgery in having the forms printed, than he would have been of an attempt to commit burglary by having a false key made of the house where he intended to commit the offence.

(1) Lee & Cave's Rep. 145.

(2) Dears & B. 202.

I think, therefore, that the conviction should be set aside, and the prisoner discharged. He may think himself extremely fortunate that his premature arrest prevented him from completing what he evidently intended.

PRINSEP, J.—I concur in setting aside the verdict of the jury and the sentence passed on the appellant, because, in my opinion, the acts found by the jury to have been committed do not amount to an attempt, but at most only to a preparation to commit a forgery which might have proceeded no further. I agree in the opinion expressed by the Chief Justice regarding the legal definition of an attempt to commit an offence,—viz., that there must be something "commenced which would have ended in the crime if not interrupted." The prisoner must, therefore, be acquitted and released.

Conviction set aside.

JOTENDRO MOHUN TAGORE AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. JOGUL KISHORE (Plaintiff).^{*} [29th April, 1881.]

Right, Title, and Interest, Sale of—Estate taken by Purchaser.

The test to be applied in order to determine the exact interest which passes at a sale under the words "right, title, and interest" of a Hindu widow in any properties, depends upon the question whether the suit in which the sale was directed was one brought against the widow upon a cause of action personal to herself, or one which affects the whole inheritance of the property in suit.

The principle in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall Awusti (1) followed.

[F., 11 C. 45 (51); 6 C.L.J. 490 (498); 9 C.L.J. 346 (353); Affirmed, 10 C. 985 (P.C.) = 11 I.A. 66; R., 20 B. 338 (344); 26 C. 677; 29 C. 813 (819).]

[358] THE property in dispute in this suit had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against a Hindu widow named Sharodamoyee, and had been purchased by one Woomamoyee Burmohnia, the decree-holder. Subsequently, Woomamoyee conveyed the property by deed of gift to her son Gour Mohun, by whom it was again sold to the Maharajah defendant (the defendant No. 1). Sharodamoyee died in 1869, and her property devolved upon Behari Lall Rai, the brother of her husband Norender Chunder Rai, as the next reversionary heir. A decree had been obtained by one Raghub Chunder Banerjee against Behari Lall Rai, and in execution of this decree he attached the property in dispute, which had been previously sold under the decree of Woomamoyee. The second sale took place in April 1870, and the property was then purchased by Ramdhone Chetlanghi (predecessor of the defendant No. 3); and he, on the 28th April 1878, sold it to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff then brought this present suit against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 ; the defendant No. 2 being the patnidar of the defendant No. 1, and the defendant No. 3 being the representative of Ramdhone Chetlanghi, the plaintiff's vendor. The suit was to obtain possession of the property on the allegation that, at the sale in execution against Sharodamoyee, Woomamoyee merely purchased the life-interest of a Hindu widow, and that, on the death of Sharodamoyee, the title of the defendant No. 1 became extinguished.

The defendants contended, that the decree obtained by Woomamoyee against Sharodamoyee was a decree against Sharodamoyee not in her personal character, but as representing her husband's estate, and that the sale passed not only her own life-interest, but the interest of the reversionary heirs as well.

From the report of the previous litigation between Woomamoyee and the other members of the family (contained in the Sadr Dewany Reports for 1859, p. 1659), it appears that Woomamoyee was the widow of one Bhoirub Chunder Rai, who died in 1822. On his death his five surviving brothers (one of whom was the father of Norender Chunder Rai, the husband of Sharodamoyee) took possession of his share under a hibanama, [359] which it was alleged that Bhoirub had executed in their favour shortly before his death, but his widow Woomamoyee continued to live in the family dwelling-house and was supported from the income of the joint property. In 1851 disputes arose between the members of the joint family, and a partition of the joint property was made, but no share was allotted to Woomamoyee, on the ground that her husband Bhoirub had given his share to his surviving brothers by the hibanama. Being thus excluded from the inheritance of her husband, Woomamoyee brought a suit against all the members of the family, who had partitioned the family property amongst themselves, to set aside the hibanama alleged to have been executed by the husband, and to recover possession of the one-sixth share of her husband with mesne profits from the date of her dispossession. The suit was dismissed by the Principal Sadr Amin; but on appeal the Sadr Dewany Adawlat reversed the Lower Court's decision, and set aside the hibanama and awarded Woomamoyee possession of the one-sixth share of her husband with mesne profits and costs : it was in execution of this decree for mesne profits and costs that the property of Sharodamoyee, who was one of the defendants in the suit, as representing her husband Norender Chunder, was attached and sold and purchased by Woomamoyee.

The Subordinate Judge held that the cause of action, namely, dispossession of Woomamoyee by her co-sharers, having occurred after the death of Norender Chunder, and during the possession of Sharodamoyee, must be considered as a personal action against Sharodamoyee, for which her husband's estate was not liable; and therefore her right and interest only, and not the estate itself, passed under the execution-sale to Woomamoyee: and he further found that the defendant No. 1, who held under that sale, was not entitled to retain possession after the death of Sharodamoyee. Against this decision the defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Mr. H. Bell (with him Baboo Srinath Dass and Baboo Nil Madhub Bose) for the appellants.—The decree obtained by Woomamoyee was not a personal decree against Sharodamoyee. The [360] suit was for the recovery of a one-sixth share of the family property, and was brought against all the members of the family who were wrongfully keeping her out of possession. It was, therefore, a suit against Sharodamoyee and the other members of the family as representing the estate. The decree awarded Woomamoyee possession of the one-sixth share, and it also gave her mesne profits and costs. These mesne profits and costs were as much a part of the decree as the decree for her specific share. If the reversionary heirs are bound by that part of the decree which gave Woomamoyee her specific share, they must be equally bound by that part of the decree which awarded mesne profits and costs. Sharodamoyee might have borrowed money to pay off the mesne profits and costs, and the loan would have been a legitimate charge on the estate: Grose v. Amirtamayi Dasi (1). When, therefore, Woomamoyee attached the property of Sharodamoyee in satisfaction of her decree for mesne profits and costs, she was attaching for a debt for which her husband's estate was liable; and she was entitled to sell not only Sharodamoyee's life-interest, but the estate itself: Bisto Beharee Sahoy v. Lalla Byjnath Persad (2), and Mohima Chunder Roy v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (3). In considering what passes at an execution-sale against a widow, the nature of the debt must be considered. If the debt was one binding on the reversioners, the whole estate passes: Ishan C. Mitter v. Buksh Ali Soudagur (4), The General Manager of the Raj Durbhunga v. Maharajah Ramaput Sing (5). In execution-proceedings, it is not the form of the decree, but the substance of the transaction which is considered: Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Maharajah Luchmessur Sing (6).

Baboo Unnoda Prosad Banerjee, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the respondent. —The decree against Sharodamoyee for mesne profits and costs was merely a personal decree which she was bound to [361] satisfy. Even if it was a decree binding on the estate, the estate would not be liable, unless it was shown that she had no means at her disposal to pay the debt. She could only encumber the estate in case of a pressing necessity. A widow is bound to defray from the income of the estate all proper and reasonable charges: Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart (7). But the decree for mesne profits and costs was a simple decree for money, and was in no way binding on the estate. Where the decree against a Hindu widow is in its terms only a personal decree, the sale passes only a life-interest: Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lal Awusti (8). See also Kistomoyee Dassee v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry (9). In Nugender Chunder Ghose v. S.M. Kaminee Dossee (10), the Privy Council held that money paid by a mortgagee to the Collector to stop the sale of an estate was a mere personal debt binding on the widow in possession, but not binding upon the reversioners. The Privy Council there point out the form which a suit should take if it is sought to bind the reversioners. In the present case, it cannot be contended that the reversioners are bound because all that was sold under Woomamoyee's decree was the right and interest of Sharodamoyee. The recent case of Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lal Awusti (8) is a clear authority that where a widow's rights and interests are sold, only the widow's estate passes to the purchaser.

JUDGMENT.

LATE

CIVIL.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

7 C. 357= GARTH, C. J.—The two suits (Nos. 63 and 64) out of which this
9 C. L.R. 57. appeal arises were brought to recover possession of a share in an ancestral estate which originally belonged to Neelcanth Roy.

[362] Neelcanth Roy left six sons, who lived together in commensality and carried on a joint business, each having a sixth of the ancestral property.

The eldest of these sons was Bhoirub Rai, who died leaving a daughter, Woomamoyee, and two grandchildren.

Two days before Bhoirub's death, it was alleged by his brothers that he executed a hibanama, the effect of which was to disinherit his own daughter and grandchildren, and to convey his share of the property (subject to certain provisions for the maintenance of his own family) to his surviving brothers.

The existence of this alleged hibanama appears to have been kept secret for sometime. Bhoirub died in the year 1822, and after his death the family continued to live together as before in commensality, the eldest male member acting as the kurta. In 1851, however, disputes arose in the family. The hibanama was then brought to light, and a private partition took place amongst the brothers, excluding, of course, the heirs of Bhoirub.

Upon this a suit was brought by Woomamoyee and others, claiming, under Bhoirub, to set aside the alleged hibanama, and the partition that had been made in pursuance of it; and the ultimate result of this suit before the Sadr Dewany Adawlut, was, that the hibanama and the partition were both set aside, and Bhoirub's share of the property was restored to Woomamoyee, his next heir, who obtained a decree against the defendants for mesne profits and costs.

Amongst others of the family who were made defendants in that suit was Sharodamoyee, the widow of Norender Chunder Rai, who was one of Bhoirub's nephews, and after obtaining her decree, Woomamoyee took out execution against Sharodamoyee, and sold her share of the family property in execution to satisfy the amount of mesne profits and costs. Woomamoyee herself became the purchaser at that sale, and having bought Sharodamoyee's share, conveyed it by gift to her son Gourmohun, who again sold it to Maharajah Jotendro Mohun Tagore, who is the principal defendant in the present suit.

In the year 1869 Sharodamoyee died; and on her death, Behari Lall Rai, her nephew, became her reversionary heir. [363] One Raghub Chunder Banerjee had a decree against Behari, and under that decree he sold the right, title, and interest which Behari had in Sharodamoyee's share of the family property, Ramdhone Chetlanghi purchased this interest at the sale, and conveyed it afterwards to the present plaintiff in the names of two of his servants.

These suits have now been brought by the plaintiff to recover the property from the Maharajah defendant, upon the ground that the Maharajah only purchased the right and interest of Sharodamoyee, which ceased at her death, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the reversion of the property as the purchaser of Behari's rights.

Another question was raised in the Court below, which in our view of the case is immaterial to this appeal,—namely, whether, assuming the plaintiff to be entitled to succeed at all, he is entitled to recover the whole property claimed, or only an eight-anna share of it.

The defendant No. 2 is patnidar of the Maharajah defendant, and therefore defends the suit in the same right and upon the same grounds as he does.

The main question in the case is, whether, under the sale of the right, title, and interest of Sharodamoyee in her share of the family property, the whole inheritance of Norender Chunder Rai in that share passed to the purchaser, or only his widow's interest, subject to the right of the reversionary heir to succeed to the property at her death.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiff that, whatever the original object of Woomamoyee's suit may have been, the decree which she eventually sought to enforce by execution as against Sharodamoyee's share of the property, was a mere money-decree of a personal nature for mesne profits and costs; and that, consequently, the sale under that decree could only pass Sharodamoyee's interest, and could not affect Behari's rights as the reversionary heir after Sharodamoyee's death.

On the other hand, it is contended by the defendants that the express object of Woomamoyee's suit was to recover from all the defendants in the suit, and amongst them from Sharodamoyee, the whole of Woomamoyee's share in the ancestral [364] property. It was not brought to recover from Sharodamoyee merely her own life-interest, but the entire estate in the share which had been held by her husband, Norender, under the hibanama: and it is contended that the decree which was made against Sharodamoyee for the recovery of that share included not only Sharodamoyee's life-interest, but the interest which Behari would have taken as reversioner, if Woomamoyee had failed in her suit.

A somewhat nice question is thus raised for our determination, and several authorities have been cited on either side.

One point which has been strongly urged upon us on behalf of the plaintiff is this, that whatever might have been the nature of the decree obtained against Sharodamoyee and the other defendants, as in execution of that decree her right, title and interest only was sold in the property in question, the sale would only pass her life-interest, and would not affect the interest of Behari after her death.

We think, however, that this proposition is opposed both to principle and authority. It has been held over and over again, not only in this Court, but by the Privy Council, that the words "right, title and interest" of the execution-debtor must not be construed strictly, but with reference to the circumstances under which the suit is brought, and the true meaning of the decree under which the sale takes place. And this was the more necessary in the case of sales which took place under the old Civil Procedure Code, because by s. 249 of that Code, the proclamation in every case was for the sale only of the interest of the execution-debtor. And as a matter of form and practice, all sales under that Act were of the right, title, and interest of the execution-debtor. It is, therefore, the duty of the Court in each case to ascertain carefully what was intended to be sold.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of the application of this rule occurs in the case of Ishan Chunder Mitter v. Buksh Ali Soudagar (1) which has been more than once cited with approbation by the Privy Council. In that case a widow had been sued upon a bond given by her husband, and it appeared upon the proceedings, that the suit was really [365] brought against her, not in her own right, but as the guardian of her infant son, who was his father's heir. A decree was obtained against her in the suit, and under that decree her right, title, and interest in the property in question was sold to a purchaser. Now here the widow had in fact no right, title, or interest in the property in question. That property belonged wholly to her son; and yet it was held that, under the sale of her right, title, and interest, the property which belonged to her son passed to the purchaser.

Again, as an authority to the same effect, we may refer to the case of The General Manager of the Raj Durbhunga v. Maharajah Ramaput Singh (1). There a suit had been brought by A against B for arrears of rent, and B having died pending the suit, a decree was obtained by A against B's widow. In execution under this decree, the right, title, and interest of B's widow in certain property which had belonged to her husband was sold. In point of fact, the widow had no interest in that property, because it belonged to her husband's son and heir; but the Privy Council held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that, under that sale, the property which was then vested in the son passed to the purchaser.

Again, as an illustration of how the words 'right, title, and interest' may have a different meaning according to the nature of the suit, and of the decree under which the sale takes place, we may refer to the case of Bisto Beharee Sahoy v. Lalla Byjnath Persad (2). There, a suit had been brought and a decree obtained against a widow for a debt; and in execution of that decree her right, title, and interest in certain property which she had inherited from her husband had been sold. The reversioner then brought a suit to dispute the validity of the sale as affecting his interests; and it was held that the right of the reversioner to the property after the widow's death depended upon whether the debt had, or had not, been incurred by the widow for any necessity contemplated by Hindu law.

The learned Judges say:—"If such necessity had been established, her right and interest would have included the entire estate which would have passed under the decree to the purchaser [366] in execution; whilst if she had sold without such necessity, then all that would have passed under the sale would have been her life-interest," thereby clearly indicating, that, under the sale of her right, title, and interest, a different estate would have passed to the purchaser according to whether her debt had been incurred with or without legal necessity.

We think, therefore, that we must look to the nature of the suit, and of the decree against Sharodamoyee, to see whether under the sale of her right, title, and interest in the property in question her own life-interest only, or the whole inheritance passed to the purchaser.

And this, we think, must depend upon whether the suit was brought against her upon a cause of action personal to herself or one which affected the whole inheritance of the property in suit. This is the principle, as we understand, upon which the case of Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhohon Lall Awusti (3) was decided. The test applied in that case was, whether the decree for maintenance was a personal one against the widow, or whether it affected the estate of the reversioner;

(1) 14 M.I.A. 605.

(2) 16 W.R. 49.

(3) L.R. 2 I.A. 275 = 1 C. 133.

and as the Privy Council considered that the decree was a personal one against the widow, it was held, that, under the sale of her right, title and interest in the property sold, her own life-interest only passed to the purchaser.

Now applying the same test in this case, we think it clear that Woomamoyee's suit was not against Sharodamoyee personally. Her object was to recover back from Sharodamoyee and the other defendants in the suit her father's inheritance in the ancestral property, of which she had been dispossessed by the other members of the family under colour of the alleged hibanama.

The suit was defended in the interest of Behari, the reversioner, as well as of Sharodamoyee herself. It was defended successfully in the Court of first instance; and there is no reason to suppose that the defendants did not all honestly believe that the hibanama was a genuine instrument.

The reversioner Behari was just as much interested as Sharodamoyee in the result of the suit. It was defended for his benefit as well as hers; and the costs which were decreed against her were costs incurred by the plaintiff, not in prosecuting the claim against her personally, but also against the reversioner, whose rights she was bound to defend, and did defend, in resisting Woomamoyee's claim to the inheritance.

We have had rather more doubt with regard to the decree for mesne profits; but we think that this portion of the decree necessarily followed the other; and that Woomamoyee must be considered as having recovered the mesne profits in the same right and upon the same principle as she recovered the rest of her claim.

The appeal will, therefore, be decreed, and the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation—Exclusion of Time—Limitation (Act XV of 1877), s. 14.

The defendants cut down and carried away some trees which had been growing on the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff's manager brought a suit in his own name against the defendants for the value of the trees so cut and carried away. This suit was dismissed on the ground that the manager had no cause of action against the defendants. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendants for value of the same trees, he contended that the time occupied in the former suit ought to be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the second suit.

Held, that the provisions of Act XV of 1877, s. 14, did not apply, and that the time could not be excluded, as the reason why the previous suit was dismissed, was, because it was brought in the name of the wrong person, not from defect of jurisdiction, or from any cause of a like nature.

THIS was a suit brought by the Maharajah of Bettia for (inter alia) the value of certain trees which had been cut down [368] and illegally appropriated by the defendants. The cutting of the trees was alleged to have taken place on or about the 11th May 1870. Shortly after that date the plaintiff's manager instituted a suit for the value of the same trees; and this suit was, on the 21st of May 1873, finally dismissed, on the ground that the manager, as such, had no cause of action. The present suit was instituted on the 26th of November 1877, and at the hearing, the plaintiff argued that, in computing limitation, he was entitled to exclude the time occupied in the former suit under the provisions of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, s. 14. This contention was overruled in the Court of first instance, and the suit was dismissed with costs. The decision was upheld on appeal.

The plaintiff then brought this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. Collinson and Baboo Sreenath Bannerjee, for the appellant.

No one appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.), so far as is material for the purposes of this report, is as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

GARTH, C.J.—It has been contended before us, that as regards the claim for the value of the trees, the plaintiff's rights are saved by s. 14 of the last Limitation Act.

That section enacts, "that in computing the period of limitation, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another suit against the defendants shall be excluded, when the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action, and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Now it seems that the plaintiff, some time ago, brought a suit for the value of these trees in the name of a person who sued as his manager; and the suit was dismissed by the High Court on the ground that as manager he had no right to sue on behalf of the plaintiff. It is argued that this was a suit prosecuted by the plaintiff (within the meaning of s. 14) in good [369] faith, and in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, was unable to entertain it.

We think it clear that such a case is not within the meaning of s. 14. It was not from defect of jurisdiction or from any cause of a like nature that the previous suit brought by the manager was dismissed. The Court in which the suit was brought had a perfect right to entertain that suit.

The reason why it was dismissed was because it was brought in the name of the wrong person.

We think, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge in this case was quite right in holding that the claim for cutting down the trees was barred.

Appeal dismissed.

B, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died, leaving two minor sons, J and K, and also a widow L and two minor sons by her; the mother of J and K having predeceased him. On J's attaining majority, the Court of Wards, which had taken possession of all the property, withdrew from the management; and L then applied under Act XL of 1858, and obtained a certificate with respect to the shares of K and her two minor sons. Subsequently K having attained majority, his share was excluded from the operation of the certificate. On the death of J, leaving H, his widow, and an infant son by her, H applied for a similar certificate, under Act XL of 1858, with respect to the property of her son, and it appeared that K was incapable of managing the property.

Held, that, though the certificate granted to L had been improperly obtained, H was not entitled to one, as, no partition having taken place since B's death, the property was still the joint family property.

Held also, that neither the granting of the certificate to L, nor the registration of the specific shares of each of the co-owners under the provisions [370] of the Land Registration Act, amounted to a partition such as to justify the Court in granting the certificate asked for.

JUDGMENTS.

MITTER, J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the Judge of Patna rejecting the appellant's petition for a certificate for managing the property of her minor son. Her husband Joymungul, and Kassee, one of the respondents, were two uterine brothers, sons of one Byjnath, who left by another wife, Mussamut Larawun Koer (the other respondent), two other minor sons. The mother of Joymungul and Kassee is not alive. The present application was made after the death of Joymungul. It was opposed principally by Larawun Koer, on the ground that her minor sons, Kassee and Joymungul, were members of a joint Hindu family of which no separation has yet taken place. It was, therefore, contended that, under the Mitakshara law, the minor son of Joymungul was not possessed of such property as could be taken charge of under the provisions of Act XL of 1858. The Judge, in accordance with this objection, has refused the application.

It appears that, after the death of Byjnath, the whole of his property was taken charge of by the Court of Wards, all his sons then being under age. On Joymungul's attaining majority, the Court of Wards withdrew their management, and relin-[371]quished possession of the property. Mussamut Larawun Koer then applied under Act XL of 1858, and obtained a certificate in respect of the shares of Kasee and her two minor sons. On Kasee's attaining majority, and on his application, his share was excluded from the operation of the certificate granted to Mussamut Larawun Koer. After the Land Registration Act was passed, the names of the four brothers were recorded with the specification of the shares of each.

Notwithstanding these proceedings, the Judge finds on the evidence (and I think the finding is quite correct) that the property remained joint, and the profits of the property were enjoyed jointly by all the members, who lived in commensality without any reference to their respective shares. There has not been any separate appropriation of the funds of the family or the profits arising from the landed property.

It has been contended before us that the proceedings taken by Mussamut Larawun Koer under Act XL of 1858, and the registration of the names of the four brothers with the specification of their respective shares effected a valid partition under the Mitakshara law.

We do not think that this contention is valid. It is true that, according to the true notion of the joint family under the Mitakshara law, no individual member can predicate of the joint property that he is the owner of a particular share, yet a declaration to that effect not accompanied by an intention to deal with a particular share separately would not constitute a separation of the joint family. Under the Land Registration Act, the joint owners are required to specify their shares, and accordingly the shares of the four brothers were specified. As to the certificate obtained under Act XL of 1858 by Mussamut Darawun Koer, it was evidently applied for, as the Judge remarks, under the impression that a certificate under the Act in respect of the property of a minor, who is a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, can be granted.

I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is correct. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs, which we assess at Rs. 80.

[372] MACLEAN, J.—I fully concur as to the condition of the family as joint and undivided. I regret to be obliged to assent to the order dismissing the appeal. The family is in a peculiar position. The adult uncle of the minor is stated to be incapable of managing. The mother of other minor holds a certificate which she ought not to have obtained under the current exposition of the law, and no one can, as it seems, obtain a certificate to take charge of the estate of Joymungul's infant son. But the case of Gourah Koeri v. Gujadhur Pershad (1) is authority which I must follow.

IN THE MATTER OF ACT I OF 1875.

GOBIND LALL SEAL AND OTHERS v. ROBERT KNIGHT AND OTHERS.

[30th June, 1881.]

Distress Act (I of 1875)—Seizure of Property in Possession of Mortgagees.

Where moveable property upon leasehold premises has been mortgaged by the lessee, and the mortgagee is in possession, the landlord cannot seize under a distress warrant, as it is not property "belonging to the person from whom the rent is claimed," within the meaning of s. 10 of the Distress Act.

THIS was a claim made by Indra Chundra Singh and Kanti Chundra Singh, to three Gripper printing presses, seized by the Court of Small Causes under a distress warrant for rent due for the premises in which the presses were standing. The Singhs claimed as mortgagees under two several indentures of mortgage and further charge, dated the 20th August and 24th September 1880, and asked that the warrant should be discharged.

The case was transferred from the Small Cause Court to the High Court for hearing, under s. 16 of Act I of 1876.

It appeared from the affidavits, that Gobind Lall and Kannylal Seal, the trustees of a certain settlement, let out on lease a [373] house, No. 3, Chowringhee Road, to Robert Knight, Nichols and Co., and Edgar Bois, the proprietors of the Statesman newspaper, for a term of four years, from the 1st of January 1880 at a monthly rental of Rs. 450. By an indenture of mortgage, dated the 8th July 1878, made between Nichols and Co., Robert Knight, and Edgar Bois, of the first part; Robert Knight, as the proprietor of the Indian Agriculturist, of the second part; and Spicer Brothers, of the third part, the parties of the first part mortgaged to Spicer Brothers, their executors, administrators, and assigns, to secure an advance of £3,000, all the several newspapers (before mentioned), and the copyright and good-will thereof, and a lease then subsisting of the house No. 3, Chowringhee Road, together with all the plant, printing gear, and stock-in-trade in or about the said premises, used for the purpose of, or in connection with, the publication of the said newspapers. This mortgage contained a power for the mortgagees to enter on the premises and seize and take possession of any of the mortgaged properties on failure of payment of principal or interest on the advance made.

By another indenture, dated the 20th August 1880, Spicer Brothers assigned their interest in the properties mortgaged to them, under the deed of the 8th July 1878, to Indra Chundra Singh and Kanti Chandra Singh; and by an indenture, dated the 24th September 1880, the Singhs made further advance to the mortgagors on the same properties.

On the 18th January 1881, the Singhs demanded repayment of the monies advanced as provided for in the several deeds of mortgage, and on default being made in payment, instructed their attorney to enter on and take possession of the premises No. 3, Chowringhee Road, and the properties and effects assigned to them; and on the 7th February 1881 (amongst other things), possession was taken of the three Gripper presses on behalf of the Singhs, and the same, with other properties on the premises, were advertised for sale under the power-of-sale given in the mortgage securities.

On the 15th February 1881, the Seals applied to the Small Cause Court for the issue of a distress warrant for the recovery of eight months' rent then due under the lease of the 1st [374] January, 1880, and on obtaining the warrant, seized the three Gripper presses standing in the premises.

The Singhs, thereupon, claimed to be entitled to the properties seized as mortgagees in possession, under the several indentures of mortgage and further charge abovementioned, and denied all liability for the rent due. Interpleader summonses were issued by the Court of Small Causes for the hearing of the claim, and such hearing was transferred to the High Court by an order dated the 18th February 1881.

Mr. Piffard (with him Mr. Stokoe on behalf of the claimants.—Property has been seized which is not the property of the tenant. Under Act VII of 1847, no property, except that belonging to the tenant, could be seized: see Dwarkanath Biswas v. Udditchurn Addy (1). The present Act is Act I of 1875, and allows property found on the premises to be seized which belongs to the person from whom the rent is claimed. We were not the tenants, but mortgagees in possession; the precedent under Act VII of 1847 equally will apply to this Act.

Mr. Jackson for the Seals.

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This seems to me a clear case; it is one under this Distress Act (I of 1875). That Act directs, by s. 21, that no distress shall be levied for arrears of rent except under the provisions of this Act, and, therefore, the rights of all parties must be found within the Act. Part IV deals with the levying of distress, s. 8 giving the time for distress, and s. 9 the mode of procedure. Section 10 points out the property which may be seized; that property must be "the moveable property found in or upon the houses or premises mentioned in the warrant, and belonging to the person from whom the rent is claimed, hereinafter called the debtor." Under that clause what is distrained is the property of the debtor, and not the property of any other person. Under the earlier Act (VII of 1847), the same was held to be law by Mr. Justice Phear in the case of Dwarkanath Biswas v. Udditchurn Addy (1). Section 13 of the present Act, [375] goes on to provide for what is to be done if the validity of the distress is to be questioned. "The debtor or any other person alleging himself to be the owner of any property seized under this Act, may, at any time within five days from such seizure, apply to any Judge of the said Court to discharge or suspend the warrant or lease a distrained article." Under that section, the application in this case was made to the Small Cause Court, and afterwards the hearing was transferred, under s. 16, to this Court. The facts of the case are, that the distress was levied on the 1st of February 1881, and the claimants lay claim to the property seized, and their title is made out in this way,—viz., on the 8th July 1878, to secure certain monies advanced by Messrs. Spicer Brothers, a certain newspaper and a lease then subsisting, and stock-in-trade, were mortgaged to the Spicers with the usual proviso for redemption, and in default of repayment of the money advanced, the usual powers to enter and take possession were given. By a deed, dated the 21st August 1880, to the

(1) Ind. Jur. 361.

Spicer and others were parties, the mortgagees, assigned to the present claimants the whole of the mortgaged premises to secure an advance made by them. A third deed, dated the 24th September 1880, was executed in consideration of further advances by the claimants, and the further advances were secured in the same way, viz., on the same property mortgaged in the two other deeds. It appears that default was made, and the present claimants entered into the premises and took possession of the printing apparatus, and remained in possession from the 7th September till they were disturbed by the distress on the 15th February. The question then arises, whether the present claimants are entitled to retain possession. I think they are. Where legal and equitable estates are recognized, the claimants should be considered as the sole owners of the property subject to the equity of redemption.

They being entitled to apply under s. 13, then follows the question, was the property such as the landlord was entitled to seize under s. 10. The same reasoning leads to the conclusion that the property did not belong to that description of property mentioned in s. 10. I think the claims must be allowed, the Court officers will withdraw from this property, and the claim-[376]ants are entitled to their costs in the Small Cause Court, and costs in this Court on scale No. 2.

fully competent as such to deal with the case himself, [377] seeing that the parties could not in any way be prejudiced by the irregularity committed, the High Court would not interfere to set aside the order.

Held also, that, treating the action of the Deputy Commissioner as that of a Settlement Officer, the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

THIS was an appeal from the finding of the Deputy Commissioner of Nya Doomka, given on the 18th June 1879, on certain issues referred to him by the Settlement Officer under s. 5 of the "Sonthal Pergannas Settlement Regulation," Reg. III of 1872.

The material facts of the case were as follows :—

On the 17th August 1864, the plaintiffs, respondents, purchased, at an execution-sale of the Beerbhoom Civil Court, the rights of three judgment-debtors in certain lakhiraj lands in the Sonthal Pergannas. In execution of another decree they again, on the 25th November of the same year, purchased the rights of the same judgment-debtors in the same property as well as the rights in it of two other persons.

On the 31st July 1866, the plaintiffs applied for possession of their auction-purchase under s. 263 of Act VIII of 1859, by ejectment of the judgment-debtors. The present defendants objected, but the Court of execution did not think proper to decide their objections, and reserving such matters for a separate suit, passed an order under s. 264.

On the 13th June 1876, the plaintiffs sued under s. 26 of Reg. III of 1872, for possession of the purchased properties, together with mesne profits, stating that their cause of action had arisen in Magh 1273,—i.e., January-February 1867,—the date on which they were dispossessed from the possession obtained under s. 264.

On the 8th January 1877, the plaintiffs obtained a decree for possession. From this decree the defendants appealed, but, on obtaining a settlement of the disputed lands on 2nd July 1877, they subsequently withdrew their appeal.

On the 13th August 1877, the plaintiffs gave a receipt acknowledging that they had been put into possession of the disputed property under a purwanah of the Court.

On the 22nd August 1877, the defendants raised objections to the order of delivery to the plaintiffs, and on the 25th August [378] 1877, the purwanah, under which delivery was given to the plaintiffs, was cancelled, on the ground that, as the land in question had been settled before the execution of the decree, the decree must, in compliance with s. 26 of the Regulation, remain unexecuted, and the former holder be kept in possession. From this order the plaintiffs appealed to the Commissioner. Their appeal was rejected on the 19th December 1877, a promise being at the time recorded, that, at the time of hearing the plaintiffs' settlement appeal from the order of the 2nd July 1877, which had at that time been filed, the whole question should be fully considered.

On the 11th June 1878, the Commissioner, sitting in appeal from the order of the 2nd July 1877, and referring to the promise given in his order of the 19th December 1877, reviewed the whole case and directed it to be reopened by the Settlement Officer. He observed that, under s. 5 of Reg. III of 1872, officers empowered to hear suits for land might refer issues to Courts established under Act VI of 1871, and the Local Government had selected Settlement Officers to hear such suits. Accordingly he directed the Settlement Officer to call upon the plaintiffs to file statement of their claim, to enter it as a suit upon his file, and to refer five issues, which he drew up, to the Courts established under Act VI of 1871.

In compliance with this order the plaintiffs, on the 16th June 1878, filed their petition, and, on the 15th July 1878, an amended petition containing further particulars.

The Settlement Officer, on the 20th of July 1878, forwarded to the Deputy Commissioner of Nya Doomka the petition, together with the settlement proceedings and his certificate under s. 5, Reg. III of 1872, referring the five issues for decision by the Deputy Commissioner as a Civil Court.

On the 18th June 1879, the Deputy Commissioner of Nya Doomka, who had, previously on the 8th April 1879, been invested with the powers of a Settlement Officer, gave a decision upon the five issues referred to him, which he certified to the Settlement Officer. On the 24th July 1879, the Settlement Officer, dealing with the Deputy Commissioner's decision on the five issues, and referring to the circumstance that the Deputy [379] Commissioner had been invested with the powers of a Settlement Officer, returned all the proceedings to that officer, in order that he, being thoroughly conversant with the case, should amend the settlement record in conformity with his findings of the 18th June. In compliance with this order the Deputy Commissioner, on the 12th August 1879, acting in his capacity as a Settlement Officer, passed orders in the case, amending the settlement record in accordance with his finding of the 18th June 1879, and defining the areas to which the plaintiffs were entitled.

After having failed to obtain an order from a Division Bench of the High Court to set aside the order in the course of its extraordinary powers under s. 15 of the Charter Act, the defendants, on the 11th September 1879, petitioned the High Court to admit an appeal from the finding of the 18th June 1879. As the right of appeal was doubtful, the Division Bench of the High Court, before admitting an appeal, granted a rule in order to give the respondents an opportunity of showing cause against it. In showing cause against this rule, it was urged, first, that the decisions of the Sonthal Officers, vested with powers of Courts under Act VI of 1871, were not appealable to the High Court; and, next, that the order of the 18th June 1879 was not a decree appealable under Act X of 1877. The Court held that an appeal from judgments of the Civil Court on cases properly certified under s. 5 of the Regulation would lie to the High Court, and expressing a doubt as to the legality of the reference made in the present instance by the Settlement Officer, which led to the finding of the 18th June 1879, left the question open for decision on the hearing of the appeal.

That appeal accordingly now came on to be heard.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by

CUNNINGHAM, J. (who, after stating the facts as above, [380] continued).—The first question which calls for consideration is, whether we can regard the decision of the Deputy Commissioner of 18th June 1879 as a finding of a Civil Court on a case properly certified under s. 5 of the Regulation.

By Reg. III of 1872, s. 5, it was provided that, pending the settlement, suits regarding land and rent should be excluded from the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts established under Act VI of 1871. "Such suits," it was provided, "shall be heard and determined by the officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor under s. 2, Act XXXVII of 1855, or by the Settlement Officers hereinafter mentioned, according as the Lieutenant-Governor shall from time to time direct."

By a notification of the 7th May 1872 the Lieutenant-Governor directed that, until further orders, the officers appointed under s. 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855, should entertain and adjudicate suits for land under s. 5 of the Regulation. According to this notification the officers appointed under s. 2, of Act XXXVII of 1855, and not the Settlement Officers as such, are the persons empowered to try suits, and consequently to certify issues to the Civil Courts under s. 5 of Reg. III of 1872. We are not aware of the grounds on which the Commissioner finds that, under a Resolution of the Lieutenant-Governor "the Settlement Officers are selected to deal with cases under s. 5," and consequently to certify under that section. No such Resolution has been brought to our notice, nor upon inquiries directed by ourselves could any such Resolution be found; we are, therefore, constrained to hold that the notification of the 7th May 1872 is still in force, and that no such power has been conferred on the Settlement Officers. So far, then, as he was acting as a Civil Court, the Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Oldham, had no jurisdiction to try the issues sent to him. It appears, however that he was vested with powers as a Settlement Officer, and as such would be fully competent to deal with the case himself. Regarding, therefore, all proceedings taken as purely settlement-proceedings, we do not think that the parties can in any way be prejudiced by the irregularity committed in sending the case to him under s. 5. But if he has been acting as a Settlement Officer, we have no jurisdiction to hear any appeal from [381] his orders. Such orders are appealable elsewhere, and provision has been made by the Regulation for enabling them to be questioned in a civil suit by the party injuriously affected.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

THIS was a suit brought to recover possession of five bighas of land. The plaintiff alleged that the land in dispute was the property of one Phagoo Dobey, and that he had become the purchaser of it at an auction-sale on the 20th March 1874, such sale being held in execution of a decree which he had obtained against Phagoo Dobey ; that he had obtained the sale-certificate on the 4th June 1874, and that delivery of possession by the execution Court was effected on the 27th June of the [382] same year, but that the defendants had resisted him in taking possession. He further stated that the defendants had subsequently brought a suit for confirmation of their possession, alleging that the land in dispute did not belong to Phagoo Dobey, but to one Bishen Dyal Dobey, and that they were in possession of it having purchased it at an auction-sale, in execution of a mortgage-decree, in the year 1867 ; but that that suit had been dismissed from the first to the final Court of appeal. He, therefore now contended that the question of title to the land had been decided in that suit, and that he was entitled to recover possession thereof.

The defendants set up the same title in this suit as they had alleged in the former suit ; and further stated, that the sale at which the plaintiff had become the purchaser was collusive and that he had previously attempted to have the property sold, but on their objection the Court had ordered the property to be exempted from sale, holding that they, the defendants, were in possession. They also contended that the question of title had not been determined in the previous suit, and that it had been dismissed solely on the ground that they had been unable to prove their possession which they then sought to have confirmed.

It also appeared that the defendants had brought a suit for recovery of possession, but the question in both suits being the same, the Munsif decided that his judgment in this suit should govern that as well.

Both the lower Courts awarded a decree in favor of the plaintiff and refused to deal with the question of title, holding that it had been decided in the previous suit, the question having been adjudicated on by the Munsif's and the District Court, and the findings of those Courts had not been set aside, although the High Court had dismissed the special appeal on the ground of possession only.

Against this decree the defendants now specially appealed to the High Court.

MITTER, J.—This was a suit to recover possession of five bighas of land under the following circumstances. The plaintiff alleges that it was the property of one Phagoo Dobey, and that, in execution of a decree against him, it was sold and purchased by him on the 4th of June 1874, and possession was delivered by the execution Court on the 27th of June following; but the defendants having resisted the plaintiff in taking possession, he is obliged to bring this suit. It is also stated in the plaint that the defendants had brought a suit against the plaintiff for confirmation of their possession over, and declaration of their title in respect of, the land in suit, and that that suit was dismissed from the first to the final Court of appeal. The plaintiff, therefore, contends that the question of title has been decided conclusively in a previous suit against the defendant and in his favour. The defendants deny that the question of title was finally decided in the previous suit. Then upon the merits they say, that the land in suit belonged to one Bishen Doyal, and that, in execution of a mortgage-decree, it was sold and purchased by them in 1867; that subsequently in 1873, when the plaintiff attempted to sell it in execution of his decree against Phagoo Dobey, they intervened, and their intervention was allowed; but in the next year—i.e., in 1874—the plaintiff managed to have the property sold again without their knowledge. The two Courts below have awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiff without deciding the question of conflicting titles to the land in suit arising between the contending parties. They are of opinion that the effect of the previous suit was to declare the plaintiff's title, and negative that of the defendants. It is contended before us in this appeal that the lower Courts are wrong in the view which they have taken of the effect of the previous litigation. We are of opinion that this contention is well founded. It appears that the former case was decided in favor of the plaintiff in the two Courts below. The decision was confirmed in special appeal to this Court. There was a further appeal to this Court under s. 15 of the Letters Patent, and the final judgment was expressly [384] based upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession. The learned Judges who decided the appeal say, "we consider, therefore, that this suit should be dismissed upon this ground only, that the plaintiff has not established that he is in possession of the land in question of which he seeks to be confirmed in possession." Therefore, the effect of that litigation was, that the final Court declared that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed upon this ground only, viz., that he failed to prove his possession although he sought for confirmation of possession; and therefore in the view of the final Court of appeal, the decision upon the question of title between the parties was wholly unnecessary. That being so, it cannot be said that this case comes within the provisions of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section says, that no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit. In this case, supposing that there was a decision by the Courts below in the previous suit on the question of title, it was not a final decision, as it was brought up in appeal before the High Court, and that Court, in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, decided that it was not necessary to go into the question of title, and based its decision entirely on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession. That being so, we think that the question of title is still open between the parties. The decisions of the lower Courts are, therefore, erroneous, and must be set aside. The case will go back to the Court of first instance for the determination of the question of title; that question being whether the lands in suit belonged to Phagoo Dobey as alleged by the plaintiff, or to Bishen Doyal Dobey as alleged by the defendants. Costs to abide the result.

DAMODUR BIDDYADHUR MOHAPATRO AND ANOTHER (Petitioners)
v. SYAMANUND DEY (Opposite Party).^{*} [27th May, 1881.]

Breach of the Peace—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 530—Omission of Magistrate to record Preliminary Proceeding.

In order to justify a Magistrate in interfering under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is necessary that he should be satisfied that there exists a dispute concerning land which is likely to induce a breach of the peace.—i.e., there must be a reasonable apprehension that a disturbance of the peace is likely to occur, rendering it necessary for him to take immediate steps to prevent it, and not merely that it is probable a breach of the peace may occur if proceedings under s. 530 be not taken.

Quære—Whether it is necessary that a preliminary proceeding should first be recorded to give the Magistrate jurisdiction?

[Appr., 33 C. 33 (44) = 2 C.L.J. 271 = 10 C.W.N. 257 = 2 Cr.L.J. 670; R., 23 C. 557 (561).]

THIS rule arose out of a proceeding under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It appeared that the Magistrate had, in the first instance, omitted to record a preliminary proceeding, as required by that section, stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existed. But in his final judgment he stated that he was satisfied that there was a dispute going on; that there had been criminal cases during the past few months between the two parties in connection with the disputed land; and that it was not, therefore, unlikely that, under the circumstances, there might be a breach of the peace. He, accordingly, declared that Raja Syamanund Dey was entitled to retain possession of the disputed land until ousted by due course of law. The petitioners, accordingly, obtained a rule from the High Court calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Magistrate should not be set aside.

record shows that no preliminary proceeding, stating the grounds upon which the Magistrate was satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existed, was recorded. Probably on this ground at the final hearing, objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and he deals with this question in the final judgment.

One of the grounds upon which this rule was obtained was that the Magistrate having omitted to record the preliminary proceeding referred to above, the whole proceeding was ultra vires, and therefore should be set aside. It has been contended on behalf of the opposite party that as the final judgment shows that the Magistrate was satisfied of a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace existing, the mere omission to record a preliminary proceeding, as is required by the 2nd para. of s. 530, is an immaterial irregularity, which would not warrant this Court, under s. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to quash the proceedings of the lower Court. On the other hand, it was broadly contended, that the omission to record this proceeding is, under all circumstances, a fatal error which would justify this Court in setting aside the proceeding, the provisions of s. 283 notwithstanding. The decision cited before us, Sheikh Munglo v. Durga Narain Nag (1), certainly supports this contention. But there is a decision, Gour Mohun Manjee v. Doollubh Manjee (2), which rules the contrary.

[387] Whether the one or the other contention is correct, it is clear to us, upon the authority of the cases cited below, that a Magistrate would have no jurisdiction under s. 530 unless he was satisfied that there exists a dispute concerning land, and which dispute is likely to induce a breach of the peace,—i.e., there must be a reasonable apprehension that a disturbance of the peace is likely to occur rendering it necessary for the Magistrate to take immediate action under s. 530 to prevent the apprehended breach of the peace—Harvey v. Brice (3), Dewan Elahee Newaz Khan v. Suburunnissa (4), Mussamut Anundee Kooer v. Ranee Soonat Kooer (5), Kashi Kishor Roy v. Tarinee Kant Lahori (6) In re Sutherland (7), Gour Mohun Manjee v. Doollubh Manjee (2), In re Mussamut Zuhoorun (8), Raneejunge Coal Association Limited v. Hem Lall Ghatwal (9).

We have considered the finding of the Deputy Magistrate upon this point in his final judgment, and we are of opinion that it is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction under s. 530. It seems to us that what he says is, that it is probable that a breach of the peace will occur if a proceeding under s. 530 be not taken. This finding would not give him jurisdiction.

We, therefore, set aside his order and make the rule absolute.

Proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, X of 1870, ss. 38 and 39—Finality.

In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), ss. 38 and 39, the persons entitled to take land compulsorily, deal only with those who are in possession of it, or who are ostensibly its owners. It may happen that the real owner being an infant, or a person otherwise under disability, does not appear, and is not dealt with in the first instance. There is, therefore, a proviso in s. 40 to the effect that nothing contained in that or the preceding sections "shall affect the liability of any person who may receive the whole, or any part of any compensation awarded under the Act to pay the same to the person lawfully entitled thereto." This applies only to persons whose rights have not been dealt with in adjudications in pursuance of ss. 38, 39, and 40; and does not permit a person whose claim has been disposed of in the manner pointed out in the Act, to have that claim re-opened, and again heard, in another suit.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court of Bengal (6th June, 1878), confirming a decree of the Court of the District Judge of East Burdwan (12th May, 1877).

The object of this suit was to establish the appellant's right as proprietor of certain village lands, fifty-eight bighas of which had been taken by the Government of Bengal under the Land Acquisition Act, X of 1870; and his consequent right to receive the sum of Rs. 13,543 awarded as compensation. The land formed part of a pargana within a zemindari, in Manbhum, belonging to the appellant as Raja of Pachete. In the same land the respondents claimed to hold certain hereditary tenancies, called in the locality 'jagir,' which were ancestral [389] tenures at a fixed rent. Upon proceedings being taken under the Land Acquisition Act X of 1870, by the Government of Bengal, to acquire the holdings of certain of these alleged 'jagirdars' for railway purposes, their value was fixed, without dispute, at Rs. 15,681; but a question arose as to the apportionment of the compensation between the Raja and the tenants, or 'jagirdars.' The Raja claimed Rs. 13,627. The dispute was referred by the Collector of the district of East Burdwan to the District Judge, under Act X of 1870, s. 38, the Raja denying the title of the tenants as 'jagirdars' to the amount claimed by them. The question as to the proportionate amount of compensation to be awarded to the latter, was decided in their favor on the 31st July, 1876, the Raja receiving only Rs. 84.

He did not appeal to the High Court from the Judge's decision; but instituted the suit, out of which the present appeal arose, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, whence it was transferred to that of the District Judge. The defendants contended (inter alia), that the suit was barred

4 Sar. P.C.J. ed to think that it has no direct reference to the question before 234=5 us. It excludes suits to set aside an award under the Act, and we think Ind. Jur. the term 'award,' there used, does not include the decision of 388. the Court under s. 39; but, at all events, it is so far useful in considering this question, that it indicates the intention of the Legislature [390] to make proceedings under this Act final, and to make the mode of dealing with the questions to be raised under this Act exhaustive and self-contained. The proviso in s. 40 follows a declaration, that "payment of the compensation shall be made by the Collector, according to the award, to the persons named therein, or, in the case of an appeal under s. 39, according to the decision on such appeal." That, no doubt, is intended to include the case of a decision under s. 39. It provides, that any person, who may receive the whole or any part of the compensation awarded under this Act, shall be liable to pay the same, and, no doubt, compellable by suit to pay the same, to the person lawfully entitled thereto, just in the same manner as a person who may have received a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 is compellable by suit to pay any money which may have come into his hands under that certificate to the person entitled thereto; and what the Legislature had in view, we think, was, that if any person, by virtue of a particular title, which was not really vested in him at the time should prevail against any person claiming under a different title before that Court upon the question of apportionment, he should be liable and compellable to pay over the money which he might have received under that decision, to some other person not a party to the proceedings, in whom that title really vested; not that it should be competent to the parties, after a full investigation before the Court under
 s. 39, and after an appeal as allowed by that section, to bring a regular suit and re-open the identical question before a different Court. If that were so, as observed by the District Court, we might have a decision arrived at by the District Judge after an investigation conducted with all the formalities prescribed by the law, and under the procedure of the Code, whether it is called a decree or not and a formal decision by the High Court on appeal from that decision, liable to be set aside upon a further sit in a Munsif's Court, and, in certain circumstances, the decision of the Munsif in such suit might become final. Some stress was laid by the appellant upon the fact that s. 37, in express terms, gives finality to certain awards, and declares that, as between the persons interested, who may argue in the apportionment of the [391] compensation, the award shall be conclusive evidence of the correctness of the apportionment, and it was said that if the Legislature had intended to give finality to the decision of the Civil Court under s. 39, the intention would have been expressed in distinct terms; and a somewhat similar use was made of the terms of s. 58 itself, viz., it was contended, that, whereas that section forbids the bringing of a suit to set aside an award under the Act, it does not forbid the bringing of a suit to set aside the decision of a Court. We apprehend that what is intended by the terms of s. 37 or of s. 58, is nothing more than this, that it places awards made under the Act by express legislation upon the same footing of finality as a decision of the Court under s. 39 is by the ordinary principles of law."

On this appeal,

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellant.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., for the respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR R. P. COLLIER.—The history of this case, as far as it is material to the judgment, is as follows:—The Government of India, requiring land for a public purpose under the provisions of Act X of 1870, gave the requisite notices, and proceeded to take fifty-eight bighas of land within the zemindari of the Raja of Pachete. These fifty-eight bighas were occupied by persons who held under the title of jagirdars, but were undoubtedly subject to the superior tenure of the Raja, and may be described as mal lands of his zemindari. The Act referred to, No. X of 1870, contains a number of elaborate provisions applicable to the acquisition of lands and the payment of the purchase-money for them. Under the circumstances of this case it will be enough to refer to three of the clauses. It appears that, in certain cases, an award of compensation may be made by the Collector, as between the Government and the claimants. Section 14 is in these terms:—"If the Collector and the persons interested agree as to the amount of compensation to be allowed, the Collector shall make an award under his hand for the same;" and then follow provisions that it shall be final. Clause 38 is in these terms:—"When the amount of compensation has been settled under s. 14, if any dispute [392] arises as to the apportionment of the same, or any part thereof, the Collector shall refer such dispute to the decision of the Court." Section 39 goes on to say:—"When a reference to the Court has been made under s. 38, the Judge sitting alone shall decide the proportions in which the persons interested are entitled to share in such amount." It further provides that "an appeal shall lie from such decision to the High Court, unless the Judge whose decision is appealed from is not the District Judge, in which case the appeal shall lie in the first instance to the District Judge."

The proceedings in this case were under these sections. Under s. 41, the Collector made an award for the whole amount of the compensation, which was, in round numbers, Rs. 15,000. There was a dispute between the Raja and the tenants, as they may be called, with reference to the apportionment of the amount between them. The question was duly referred to a Judge sitting alone, to decide the proportions in which the persons interested were entitled to share, and that Judge made a decision in pursuance of such reference, whereby he awarded to the Raja Rs. 84, and to the other claimants, of whom there are a great number, the rest of the compensation money. The Raja did not appeal from this decision, as he had a right to do, but he brings the present suit for the purpose of, in effect, setting it aside. In his plaint he characterises his suit as: "a suit to recover Rs. 13,000 in deposit in the collectorate of this district, on account of compensation for fifty-eight bighas five cottas," and he contends that he is entitled to a far larger amount than that which has been awarded to him. In other words, he brings the suit for the purpose of determining the very question which had been determined according to special statutory process by a Judge from whose decision he did not appeal.

It has been very fairly admitted by Mr. Doyne that, unless he can avail himself of s. 40, the proceedings which have been taken are conclusive as to the amount and apportionment of the compensation. Section 40 is in these terms:—"Payment of the compensation shall be made by the Collector, according to the award, to the persons named therein, or, in the case of an appeal under s. 39, according to the decision on such appeal; [393] provided"—and this is the part of the section on which he relies—"that nothing herein contained shall affect the liability of any person who may receive the whole or any part of any compensation awarded under this Act to pay the same to the person lawfully entitled thereto." He contends that, under that proviso, the Raja is entitled to bring this suit. It appears to their Lordships that the proviso has no such effect. Such a proviso, which appears to have been but a repetition of a provision in a previous Act in pari materia, is necessary in this, as in almost all Acts of a similar character. It is necessary for the Government, or the persons or company entitled to take property compulsorily, to deal with those who are in possession, or ostensibly the owners; but it may happen, and frequently does happen, that the real owners, possibly being infants or persons under disability, do not appear, and are not dealt with in the first instance; and therefore a provision of this sort is necessary for the purpose of enabling the parties who have a real title to obtain the compensation money.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Courts in India, who both concur on this point, have rightly held that this proviso applies only to persons whose rights have not been adjudicated upon in pursuance of the sections (38 and 39), and that it has not the effect, which it would certainly not be reasonable to attribute to it, of permitting a person whose claim has been adjudicated upon in the manner pointed out by the Act to have that claim reopened and again heard in another suit. Their Lordships are of opinion that the provisions in this Act for the settling of compensation are intended to be final; and that the amount and distribution of the compensation having been settled in this case by a competent Court, and the decision not having been appealed against, the settlement is final, and the present suit cannot be maintained. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that this judgment be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Sale or Foreclosure—Limitation—Adverse Possession.

In 1823 the trustees of a mortgage settlement invested the trust funds in the mortgage of a house and premises at Entally in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. The mortgagor was the first tenant-for-life under the settlement, and it was agreed that he should be entitled to remain in the house as long as he pleased the rent of the premises being set-off against the income of the trust-funds to which he was entitled under the settlement. In execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor his right, title, and interest in the premises were purchased by the judgment-creditor, a lady who at the time of execution and sale, lived in the mortgagor's house. After the purchase, all parties continued to live in the house as before. The mortgagor died on the 14th of August 1867, and on the 13th of August 1879, the present suit for sale or foreclosure was instituted by the plaintiff in whom the legal and beneficial interest in the trust-funds had become vested.

Held that the position of the judgment-creditor under the sale of 1865 was not adverse to the plaintiff or those under whom he claimed; that the suit was not barred by limitation; and that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for sale.

Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mokerjee (1) distinguished.

Form of decree in a suit for foreclosure or sale in the mofussil, where the mortgage is in the English form and all parties concerned are English.

By an indenture of post-nuptial settlement, dated the 6th of September, 1823, between Robert Manly of Calcutta, of the first part, Sarah Manly his wife, of the second part, and John Palmer and William Anderson Livingstone, of the third part, it was witnessed that, in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, Robert Manly assigned to Palmer and Livingstone the sum of Rs. 10,000, in trust, to invest and pay the interest thereof to [395] Robert Manly for life, and from and after his death to Sarah Manly for her life, and after her decease, in trust for the issue of the marriage. The deed conferred on Robert Manly and his wife, or the survivor of them, a power of appointment by deed or will among the issue of the marriage, and, failing issue, in favor of the person or persons entitled in default of appointment. The deed also contained the usual clauses authorizing investment in real securities and Government stock, and the appointment of new trustees, &c.

By indentures of lease and release in fee, dated the 30th and 31st of December, 1823, respectively, the latter of which recited the provisions of the deed of the previous September, Robert Manly, in consideration of an advance of "the said Rs. 10,000," conveyed to Palmer and Livingstone the house and premises which were in dispute in this suit, and which were situated at Entally in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. It was declared, that the property conveyed should be subject to the trusts of the Rs. 10,000 declared by the deed of September 1823; and it was provided, "that if the said Robert Manly, his heirs or assigns, do and shall, as and when the said trusts in and by" the deed of September, 1823,

The deed went on to declare, that it was the true intent and meaning thereof, [396] and of the parties thereto, that "Robert Manly, his heirs or assigns or his or their tenants, or undertenants, should hold, use, and occupy, possess, and enjoy" the property conveyed "and to have, receive, and take to his or their own use and uses the rents, issues, and profits thereof and every part thereof, without any lawful let, suit, trouble, molestation eviction, hindrance or disturbance of, from or by them, the said John Palmer and William Anderson Livingstone, or the survivor of them," or any succeeding trustees or trustee. The deed contained no covenant for the repayment of the money. There were several children of the marriage, one of whom, Alexander Manly married the daughter of one Mrs. Verplough, a widow lady, who took up her residence with Robert Manly and his family, in the house at Entally, sometime previous to the year 1865. It appeared from the evidence that Robert Manly, in the year 1856, had borrowed Rs. 2,800 from Mrs. Verplough, for which he gave a bond. Mrs. Verplough instituted a suit on this bond and obtained a decree, in execution of which she, in the early part of 1866, caused to be sold the house and premises at Entally, and became herself the purchaser for—the plaintiff alleged—a sum of Rs. 420. After this sale, the Manlys and Mrs. Verplough continued to live in the house at Entally as before. Mrs. Verplough died in December, 1866, leaving the defendant, Jane Manly, her sole heiress and legal representative. Robert Manly died on the 14th of August 1867.

By a deed of appointment, dated the 16th of June, 1879, Sarah Manly exercised her power of appointment in favor of her daughter, Mrs. Woodly; and by an indenture, dated the 8th of July, 1879, between the then trustees of the settlement of 1823 of the first part, Sarah Manly of the second part, Mrs. Woodley of the third part, and the plaintiff Patterson of the fourth part, the sum of Rs. 10,000, with all interest thereon, and benefit thereof, together with the premises at Entally, were assigned and sold to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 7,000.

On the 12th of July 1879, the plaintiff's attorney wrote to Mr. Jane Manly, who resided in Rajputana, and to David Manly, one of the sons of Robert Manly (and who was in sole possession of the house and premises at Entally), calling upon [397] them for payment of the Rs. 10,000 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and stating that, in default of payment, the plaintiff would institute a suit for a sale or foreclosure of the premises. His demand not being complied with, the present suit was instituted on the 13th August, 1879, in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of the District of the 24-Pargannas, praying a decree for payment of the Rs. 10,000 and interest, and in case of default, for foreclosure or sale, and should the proceeds of sale be insufficient, then for a personal decree against the defendants for the amount of the deficiency.

The defence was, that the assignment to the plaintiff was collusive and fraudulent; that the suit was improperly framed; and that it was barred by limitation. The Court held that though the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for foreclosure, yet he was entitled to a decree for sale, which was directed; and, in case the proceeds of the sale should prove insufficient, the Court gave a personal decree for the deficiency against the defendant Mrs. Jane Manly, on the ground that being the sole heiress and legal representative of Mrs. Verplough, the purchaser of the equity of redemption, she stood in the shoes of the mortgagor.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Twidale for the appellant.

Mr. Evans.—The circumstances attending the transfer to the plaintiff are extremely suspicious, and there is no trustworthy evidence that any consideration whatever has been paid. Again, no decree can be passed in a suit framed as this is. A suit on a mortgage for property situated in the mofussil must be brought under Reg. XVII of 1806. Before the Foreclosure Regulations were passed, a conditional sale, which in effect is the same as an English mortgage, became absolute on non-payment at the time appointed. Those Regulations supply the only remedy in use in the mofussil, and no Court has power to go outside or beyond them—Thumbusawmy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (1). There is no power of sale contained in this mortgage, and if there was, the Court would not give effect to it; [398] the only remedy is foreclosure—Arman Pande v. Nouruttun Koorwur (2) and Bhuwanee Churn Mitr v. Joykishen Mitr (3). [PONTIFEX, J.—Those cases dealt with Hindus. Here all the parties concerned are English.] Again, this suit is premature. The period fixed for redemption is when the trusts require the moneys to be called in. That can only be on the death of Mrs. Sarah Manly, who was alive at the institution of the suit. The deed gives no power to the trustees to call in the money when they please; but if your Lordships be against me on that contention, then they should have called it in long ago. The evidence is, that after Mrs. Verplough purchased the house in execution of her own decree in the early part of 1876, she allowed Robert Manly and his family to remain, because she did not wish to put them to inconvenience. She alone was in possession as owner, and being a judgment-creditor, her possession became at once adverse to the trustees, and the suit is, therefore, barred by limitation—Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (4).

for the children of the marriage, as Robert Manly and his wife or the survivor of them should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children. Shortly after the settlement, the husband Mr. Manly, being possessed of a piece of land, persuaded the trustees to advance him the Rs. 10,000 in order to build a house upon it.

The deed under which the Rs. 10,000 was advanced was drawn in the form of an absolute conveyance to the trustees without any proper proviso for redemption, and, without any covenant for payment of the money to the trustees. The conveyance was to the trustee of the settlement and the succeed-[399] ing trustees to be appointed thereunder, to be held upon and subject to the several trusts of the settlement, and thus an express trust was impressed on the property. There was a proviso in the deed that the tenant-for-life, Robert Manly, should be entitled to the use and enjoyment of the house at all events, during his life, though the terms of the clause are rather vague. Of course, during his life, he being entitled to the interest of the trust-money, it was immaterial whether interest was paid to him or whether he enjoyed possession of the house. A decree by a stranger to the settlement having been obtained against Robert Manly, execution was taken out against him in the year 1866, and all his right, title and interest in the house was sold and purchased by Mrs. Verplough. The defendant, Jane Manly, who is the present appellant, represents Mrs. Verplough, and is now entitled, by virtue of such sale and representation, to the equity of redemption. Notwithstanding the purchase by Mrs. Verplough, Robert Manly was allowed to remain in possession of the house, and was ostensibly in possession of it up to his death in 1867. This suit is instituted within twelve years from the date of his death. The trustees having died, new trustees were appointed; and the survivor of them, with the concurrence of Sarah Manly and her daughter, to whom the Rs. 10,000 had been apportioned, conveyed to the present plaintiff all their rights in the house. There are some suggestions in these proceedings that the conveyance was not a bona fide conveyance; but we think it does not lie in the mouth, at all events of the present appellant, to take that objection. It has been objected on behalf of the present appellant, that the plaintiff is barred by limitation, and the case of Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (1), has been cited, in which the Privy Council seem to have laid down, that when, by an act of law, there has been an alienation from a mortgagor to a third person, the limitation law applicable between mortgagor and mortgagee ceases to apply, and the ordinary limitation thenceforward applies. That seems to have been decided under the Limitation Act of 1859. Whatever may have been the principle on which that case was decided, it is sufficient to say that it does not [400] apply here, because (even if the property was not impressed with a trust) the tenant-for-life under the deed was entitled to possession of the house during his life, and having been in ostensible possession until the time of his death, there was nothing to show that the property had passed to a stranger; and we are of opinion that limitation, at all events, would not run until the death of the tenant-for-life, and that would be within twelve years of the institution of this suit. We think, therefore, that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The plaintiff has sued the present defendant Jane Manly, who is the owner of the equity of redemption, and also Mr. D. W. Manly, who seems to have been in possession of this house so far as we can see, as a trespasser. The Subordinate Judge has decreed, that the principal money, with interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the date of demand, should be paid by the sale of the property, and that any deficiency should be borne by the present appellant, Jane Manly, the owner of the equity of redemption, and that both the defendants should pay the costs of the suit.

Now, we are of opinion that this decree in some respects is improper. We think that the owner of the equity of redemption ought not to be directed to pay any deficiency of principal and interest moneys and costs, which the moneys to arise from the sale may be insufficient to meet, this suit being in the nature of a foreclosure suit. We also think that the plaintiff is not entitled to interest from the date of demand, at all events as against Jane Manly, the present appellant, inasmuch as Jane Manly has not been in possession of the property and offered no obstacle to the plaintiff entering into possession and receiving the profits of the property. We also think that the decree was wrong in ordering an immediate sale. We think that Jane Manly, the owner of the equity of redemption, ought to have been afforded time for the purpose of raising money, if possible, to redeem the estate, if so advised. In the mofussil, under the Regulations, a year is the time allowed before foreclosure becomes absolute, and we think by analogy that that period ought to have been allowed to the present appellant. The decree was passed on the 22nd April 1880; the year would, therefore, expire on the [401] 21st April 1881. We shall, therefore, modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it concerns the present appellant, and declare that, unless the appellant, Jane Manly, pays the 10,000 sicca rupees secured by the deed, together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 22nd April, 1880, the date of the decree of the Court below, on or before the 21st April 1881, the property shall be sold, and out of the proceeds of the sale, if sufficient (but not otherwise), the plaintiff will be entitled to 10,000 sicca rupees and the interest and the costs of suit both in this Court and in the Court below. The decree as against the other defendant will stand. If, however, the appellant, Jane Manly, does, on or before the 21st April 1881, pay the principal sum of 10,000 sicca rupees with one year's interest and the costs of the suit both in this Court and the Court below, the plaintiff shall execute a conveyance free from all encumbrances to the said Jane Manly.

The appellant Jane Manly will be entitled to a refund of the money paid by her into this Court as security for costs.

SHAIK DOMUN v. SHAIK EMAUM ALLY. [6th and 7th July, 1881.]

Practice—Costs—Order directing Client to Pay Costs.

It is not the practice to make an order directing a client to pay his attorney the costs of suit when taxed. Such an order can only be made in a regular suit by the attorney against his client.

Iswar Chandra Dutt v. Iswar Chandra Ghose (1) not followed.

[F., 21 C. 85 (91); 27 C. 269 (271); Cons., 7 Bom. L.R. 547 (554); R., 16 B. 152 (154); D., 25 C. 887 (891).]

IN this case the plaintiff applied to be allowed to withdraw his suit on the terms of each party paying his own costs.

Mr. Trevelyan, for the plaintiff, asked the Court to fix the scale on which the costs should be taxed.

Mr. Mitter, for the defendant, consented to the application, and asked for an order directing the defendant to pay the attorney's costs of suit when taxed, and referred to Iswar Chandra Dutt v. Iswar Chandra Ghose (1). Mr. Belchambers, the Registrar of the Court, stated that that case had not been [402] correctly reported, and that it was not the practice to make an order for payment of costs as between attorney and client, except in a regular suit against the client.

CUNNINGHAM, J., asked the Registrar to furnish a note as to the practice.

CUNNINGHAM, J.—The Registrar has furnished the following note:

"The order asked for by Mr. Mitter was an order against his own client. The effect of such an order would be to place the client at a disadvantage, for it would deprive him of the opportunity afforded him, when sued for costs, of raising questions of negligence, which are altogether excluded from the adjudication of the Taxing Master, and questions of set-off, which are beyond the functions of that officer to decide, except under a special reference to him; and would render the client liable to immediate execution in respect of the amount allowed on taxation, although there might be a good defence to the whole or a part of the claim. This suggestion, of what would be the position of the client if proceeded against summarily, furnishes a sufficient reason for the practice which exists, and has always existed, of not directing the payment of costs as between attorney and client, except in a regular suit against the client. I am not aware of any instance in which this practice has been departed from. It was certainly not departed from in the case of Iswar Chandra Dutt v. Iswar Chandra Ghose (1), cited by Mr. Mitter although in that case the client compromised without the intervention or knowledge of his attorney, then refused to pay his attorney's costs, and finally failed to appear upon the application made against him upon notice. The order, as drawn up in that case, directs the taxation of costs, but does not direct payment, thus leaving the attorney to his ordinary remedy by suit."

It is clear that, upon this statement of the practice, Mr. Mitter's application cannot be granted. The order will be for taxation of costs on scale No. 2.

Appeal—Representatives—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244, cl. (c), & ss. 278, 283.

The holders of a taluq hypothecated certain other property belonging to them as security for the rent. A decree for rent was obtained against them. Prior to attachment, the taluqdars assigned their interest in eight annas of the hypothecated property to A, and made a mourosi lease of the remaining eight annas to him. The decree-holder then obtained an order for summary sale for the rent due for 1876-77. She then attempted to sell the property hypothecated to her. An objection by A was allowed. A regular suit was then instituted by the decree-holder against A, and it was declared that she was, after selling the taluk, entitled to sell the hypothecated property. The decree-holder again attempted to execute her rent-decree by attaching and selling the hypothecated property, and an objection by A was disallowed.

Held, that no appeal lay from the order disallowing the objection, as A could not be considered to be a 'representative' of the taluqdars within the meaning of s. 244, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, and was, therefore, debarred from appealing under ss. 278 and 283.

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX, J.—In this case certain Chowdhries held a taluq under Maharani Surnomoyee; and by an ekrar they hypothecated certain other property belonging to them as secu-[404]rity for the rent of the taluq. The Maharani instituted a suit against them for the rents of taluq from Kartick to Cheyt 1281, amounting to about Rs. 9,000, and obtained a decree. Under the ekrar, the property hypothecated by them would be liable, no doubt, to satisfy that decree; but subsequently to the execution of the ekrar, and prior to any attachment by the Maharani under her rent-decree, the Chowdhries assigned all their interest in eight annas of the property hypothecated to Rashbehary Mookerjee and another; and with respect to the other eight annas, made a mourosi lease thereof to the same persons. Subsequently the Maharani, under Reg. VIII of 1819, obtained an order for summary sale for the rents from Srabun to Cheyt 1283, and the property was sold; but it is alleged by the applicant before us that such sale was invalid, inasmuch as the taluq was purchased by the taluqdars themselves. For the purposes of this judgment it is not necessary for us to decide any question as to that, as in consequence of a preliminary objection by the respondent, we are unable to go into the merits of the case. In execution of her rent-decree Maharani Surnomoyee subsequently attempted to bring to sale the property that had been hypothecated by the Chowdhries to her under the ekrar. In such execution-proceedings, Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor appeared as objectors and alleging that there had been a subsequent assignment of the Chowdhries' interests to them, disputed the right of the Maharani to sell this property in execution of her rent-decree. This objection was properly allowed; whereupon the Maharani instituted a regular suit against Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor, and by the decree in that suit it was declared that the Maharani had a right to bring the property comprised in the ekrar to sale for the purpose of realizing her rent-decree; but that, as a condition precedent, she was bound, first of all, to sell the taluq itself for the purpose of satisfying her rent-decree. Subsequently to that decree and to the summary sale, the Maharani has again attempted to execute her rent-decree by attaching and bringing to sale the property comprised in the ekrar, and Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor have again intervened as objectors in the execution-[405] proceedings. It has been decided by the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence, that the Maharani, notwithstanding the objection of Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor, is entitled to proceed to sell all the properties comprised in the ekrar. Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor, being dissatisfied with that order, have appealed to us; but a preliminary objection has been taken on the part of the Maharani that the appellants have no right of appeal to this Court, inasmuch as, being merely objectors, they are barred by ss. 278 and 283 of the Procedure Code from appealing to this Court. We are referred by the appellants' vakeel to s. 244, cl. (c), in support of their right of appeal. In that clause it is enacted that "any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree," shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree; and it is urged on behalf of the appellants that they are representatives of the Chowdhries within the meaning of that clause. Now, we think, that though the word 'representatives' in that clause may include subsequent representatives in point of interest, and is not confined only to heirs or executors, yet, inasmuch as Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor had become assignees of the taluqdars before the rent-suit was instituted by the Maharani, they cannot, within the terms of that clause, be considered as representatives of the taluqdars. Their interest, in fact, came into existence before the suit against the taluqdars, and they can, therefore, scarcely be considered in that suit as representatives of the taluqdars, the judgment-debtors. We think, therefore, that the preliminary objection that has been taken by the Maharani must prevail, that Rashbehary Mookerjee and his co-proprietor are not entitled to appeal on the merits to this Court; and we are, therefore, unable to go into the merits, and decide between the parties, whether the Maharani is now entitled to proceed against the property, which was hypothecated to her by the ekrar, in order to realize the amount of decree in the rent-suit.

Appeal dismissed.

The facts of these cases fully appear from the judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) which were delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PONTIFEX, J.—The compensation case under the Land Acquisition Act, out of which appeal No. 14 of 1879 arises, was tried by Mr. Verner, who had to decide as to the manner in which the sum of Rs. 99 should be apportioned amongst certain persons claiming to be joint mourosidars. Mr. Verner decided that only one of these persons was entitled as mourosidar to compensation for the particular land taken under the Act [407] in that case; and he directed that the amount should be paid to him. Against that decision, appeal No. 14 of 1879 has been preferred. The cases of compensation, out of which appeals Nos. 121, 122, 123 and 124 of 1879 arise, were tried by Mr. Tottenham for apportioning compensation in those four cases, amounting respectively to Rs. 9, 18, 20 and 37, between the same mourosidars as claimants. He came to the conclusion that the person to whom Mr. Verner had directed, in appeal No. 14 of 1879, that the compensation should be paid, did not prove his exclusive title to the money, but that he was jointly entitled with the other mourosidars. He, therefore, directed that the several amounts of compensation should be divided among them according to their respective shares.

Now, Mr. Verner, in trying the case before him, seems to have considered, that, under s. 39 of the Land Acquisition Act, it was not necessary for him to decide the question of title; and he expressly states in his judgment that he had no materials before him to decide the question of title. He, therefore, decided the case solely on the evidence as to possession. Mr. Tottenham, on the other hand, decided, in all the cases before him, the question of title. We think it right to say that, under s. 39, it is the duty of the Judge, in apportioning the compensation-money which he is directed to apportion, to decide the question of title between all persons claiming a share of the money. These cases having come before us at the same time, we think that the judgment of Mr. Tottenham in appeals Nos. 121, 122, 123 and 124 must be affirmed. He has taken a right view of the evidence in holding that the person to whom Mr. Verner directed the compensation-money to be paid did not prove an exclusive title thereto. We think, therefore, that Mr. Tottenham's order, that the amounts should be divided amongst the several claimants, was correct.

In respect to appeal No. 14 from the judgment of Mr. Verner, we think we are entitled to decide it upon the evidence already taken in the case; for although Mr. Verner seems to have been under the impression that, under s. 39, he was not bound to decide the question of title, yet the parties could not be aware that such would be his decision, and they were bound [408] to adduce evidence both on the question of possession and title. As the party to whom Mr. Verner has directed the compensation-money to be paid exclusively has furnished no evidence, which in our opinion proves his exclusive title, we set aside Mr. Verner's order, and direct that the amount of compensation given in appeal No. 14 of 1879 be divided amongst the several claimants in the same proportion as in appeals Nos. 121, 122, 123 and 124 of 1879.

We now come to the other appeals by the dur-mourosidars, viz., appeals Nos. 95, 96 and 97 of 1879. All these cases were tried by Mr. Tottenham. Claims were made much in the same way as the claims to the compensation for the mourosi tenure. One of the dur-mourosidars claimed to be exclusively entitled to the money awarded for the dur-mourosi tenure. But Mr. Tottenham, upon the evidence, came to the conclusion that he failed to prove such exclusive title; and therefore, he held that all the dur-mourosidars were entitled to have the money awarded distributed amongst them according to their respective shares. We agree with Mr. Tottenham in the conclusion which, upon the evidence, he has come to in the matter. But an objection has been taken that, in a case (No. 68), which was for compensation-money paid for certain other portions of land belonging to these very dur-mourosidars, and held upon the same title, and which was tried before Mr. Verner decided that one of these dur-mourosidars was entitled exclusively to the compensation-money so awarded, against which decision there has been no appeal, and it is argued before us that the decision of Mr. Verner, which has not been appealed against, must be treated as res judicata affecting these appeals, the land being held under the same dur-mourosi title, and the parties being the same. Now, for my part, and speaking for myself, I should be extremely reluctant to hold that any decision under the Land Acquisition Act should be treated as res judicata with respect to the title to other parts of the property belonging to persons who may come before the Judge under s. 39, because although a decision under s. 39 with respect to the particular money then before the Court is a decision which is final with respect thereto unless appealed from, and any party who [409] has been summoned before the Judge and has not appeared is bound by such decision, I do not think that a decision of the Judge with respect to compensation money, where the amount may be extremely unimportant (as in one of these cases it is only Rs. 9), and were the parties, although summoned, may not think it worth their while to set up a claim to a share, should be treated as res judicata affecting other parts of the claimant's property held under the same title. For it must be remembered that the parties are brought before the Judge compulsorily; and the proceedings differ considerably from regular suit. However, in these cases we think, that the decision of Mr. Verner, in case No. 68 before him, cannot otherwise be treated as res judicata, for this reason that in his judgment he expressly states that he has not tried the question of title; and if he has not tried the question of title, the judgment cannot possibly be treated as res judicata in these appeals Nos. 95, 96 and 97, in which the question of title has been raised and tried. We are of opinion, therefore, that appeal No. 14 of 1879 must succeed; that appeals Nos. 121, 122, 123 and 124 of 1879 must fail, and appeals Nos. 95, 96, and 97 of 1879 must also fail. We do not think it proper to give any costs in any of these appeals.

FIELD, J.—I concur in this judgment, but as to the question of res judicata, I think it unnecessary to decide what would be the effect of the former decision in the case under the Land Acquisition Act if the question of title had been put in issue and fairly tried. As Mr. Verner expressly refrained from trying this question, it was not heard and determined; and therefore the former judgment cannot have the effect of res judicata upon the title of the parties.

Jurisdiction—Act VI of 1871, s. 18—Sale in Execution of Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 285.

A, who had obtained a decree in the Court of the Second Munsif of B, in September 1877, attached certain property within the jurisdiction which had been assigned to the Munsif by the District Judge, under s. 18 of Act VI of 1871. In the previous month, C, who had obtained a decree in the Court of the Additional Munsif of B [to whom jurisdiction had similarly been assigned], had attached the same property. The sale in execution of A's decree took place first, and A became the purchaser. A then objected in the Court of the Additional Munsif that the property could not again be sold; but this objection was overruled, and two days subsequently, the property was again put up for sale in execution of C's decree, and he became the purchaser. A brought various suits against the tenants for arrears of rent, in which C intervened.

Held, that the jurisdictions of the Munsifs were confined to the particular limits assigned to them, and that, as the property was situate within the limits assigned to the Second Munsif, the Additional Munsif had no jurisdiction to attach or sell it, and that the attachment by C was made improperly and without jurisdiction.

One Golam Ali had also obtained a decree against Ram Kanhye Shaha, but in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Barisal, to whom another thana had been assigned by the District Judge. Both the plaintiffs and Golam Ali attached the property in [411] execution of their decrees; Golam Ali in August, 1877, and the plaintiffs in September 1877. The same day was fixed for the sale, and it was held by the same officer. The properties advertised by the Second Munsif were sold first, and the plaintiffs themselves, on the 4th December, 1877, purchased the property which they had attached. On the following day, the plaintiffs objected before the Additional Munsif, that the same property could not be sold again in his Court. The objection was overruled, on the ground that the plaintiffs' purchase was collusive, and the property was again put to sale, and was purchased by Golam Ali on the 6th December. The plaintiffs took formal possession through the Court, and subsequently Golam Ali also took formal possession, through the Court. The plaintiffs then brought several suits for rent against the ryots, in which Golam Ali intervened. The Munsif of Barisal gave the plaintiffs a decree, which was reversed by the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX, J.—The plaintiffs in this case having obtained a decree in the Court of the Second Munsif of Barisal, attached certain property within the jurisdiction of the Second Munsif. That attachment was made in September, 1877. But one Golam Ali had obtained a decree in the Court of the Additional Munsif of Barisal, and had, under such decree, directly attached the same property prior to the plaintiffs' attachment, viz., in August, 1877. A sale took place under the plaintiffs' attachment first, and the plaintiffs purchased on the 4th December in execution of their own decree. Subsequently, a sale took place on the 6th December under Golam Ali's attachment and he purchased in execution of his decree. The plaintiffs afterwards brought several rent-suits against the ryots occupying [412] the land, and Golam Ali intervened in those suits. Two of those suits have now come on appeal before us, and the question to be decided in these appeals is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover rent from the ryots. Now, the Subordinate Judge has held, that inasmuch as the plaintiffs' purchase took place under an attachment later in point of date than the attachment by Golam Ali, nothing passed to the plaintiffs at the sale in execution of their decree; and he, therefore, dismissed their suits. It was argued before the Subordinate Judge that, inasmuch as, under s. 18, Act VI of 1871, the District Judge had assigned to the three separate Munsifs in his district certain local limits, and inasmuch as this particular land was situate within the limits assigned to the Second Munsif, the Additional Munsif had no authority to attach this particular land directly, it not being within the limits of his jurisdiction; and that, in accordance with s. 286 of Act VIII of 1859, he ought to have transmitted Golam Ali's decree for execution and attachment by the Second Munsif. That the Additional Munsif having no jurisdiction to attach, he had no jurisdiction to bring this property to sale, although the attachment made under Golam Ali's decree was earlier in point of date than the attachment under which the plaintiffs claimed. The Subordinate Judge decided, that, under s. 18 of Act VI of 1871, the assignment of limits to the separate Munsifs by the District Judge is only material with respect to the institution of regular suits. We think he is wrong in that conclusion. There is nothing in s. 18 to limit the purposes for which local jurisdictions are assigned to each Munsif; and we are of opinion, that when the District Judge assigned limits to each Munsif, the jurisdiction of each Munsif was confined to the particular limits assigned to him. And as the land in question is situate within the limits assigned to the Second Munsif, we think the Additional Munsif had no jurisdiction to attach or sell this land, which was within the jurisdiction of the Second Munsif. Therefore, in our opinion, the attachment by Golam Ali was made improperly and without jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge has also held that s. 285 of the present Procedure Code applies to this case, that is, of course, assuming that the Additional Munsif had jurisdiction [413] to attach and sell this property. It appears to us extremely doubtful whether s. 285 applies to immoveable property at all. The words of it—"where property not in the custody of any Court has been attached in execution, the Court which shall receive or realize such property," &c.—seem to us to be more applicable to moveable than to immoveable property. But even assuming that the section does apply to immoveable property, there is nothing in it, so far as we can see, which would absolutely destroy the validity of a sale already made, provided the proceeds of such sale were paid into the Court under whose decree the property was first attached. Now, the circumstances of this case are, that the plaintiffs' sale and Golam Ali's sale were, according to the practice which governs such matters, both conducted by the same officer of the Judge's Court, and the same date was fixed for the two sales. Probably, by accident, the sale under the plaintiffs' decree and attachment was first proceeded with; and after their sale was concluded, they took objection in the Additional Munsif's Court that the sale in execution of Golam Ali's decree should be stopped. That objection must have been taken in the presence of Golam Ali. The objection was not allowed, but the Additional Munsif made an order that the sale under Golam Ali's decree and attachment should proceed, subject to the validity of the prior sale under the plaintiffs' decree and attachment if such sale was valid, and sale was proceeded with and Golam Ali purchased at it. But, as a matter of fact, inasmuch as these attachments were made in August and September 1877, the procedure would be governed by the old Code, and not by the present Code; for, by s. 3 of the present Code, it is provided, that nothing in the new Code contained "shall affect any proceedings after decree that may have been commenced and were still pending at that date." Now, the attachments under both these decrees were pending at the time when the new Code came into operation. They would, therefore, be governed by the practice under the old Code; and for the reasons stated by me in the case of Chutka Panda v. Goburdhone Dass (1), it appears that, under the old Code, it was held, that a sale [414] under a second attachment was valid, and would prevail over a sale subsequently held under a prior attachment. Under these circumstances, therefore, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in this suit; but inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge reserved for trial in a regular suit the question of title between the plaintiffs and Golam Ali, and as there are circumstances connected with the plaintiffs' purchase, as for example, the very inadequate price paid by the plaintiffs on the sale to them, which render it desirable that the question should be left open, we reserve liberty to Golam Ali to institute any suit with respect to the title to this land that he may be advised to bring against the plaintiffs. The appeal will be allowed with costs, the judgment of the Munsif being restored. This judgment will apply to No. 2466.

THE plaintiffs purchased at an execution-sale, in 1869, a twelve-anna share in a certain taluq, formerly belonging to one [415] Akramuddin. Pending execution-proceedings, one Reazuddin intervened, claiming the twelve-anna share as his own: this claim was rejected, as was also a suit brought to have his title declared to the property. The plaintiffs took possession of this property in 1871; and in 1872, they and their co-sharer in the whole sixteen annas were dispossessed by the Collector of Noakhali, whereupon they jointly brought a suit under Act XIV of 1859 against Government, and recovered possession. During the time the plaintiffs and their co-sharer were put out of possession, the Collector let into occupation, of four kanis of land within the taluq, certain persons, Esuf and Gar Banu (the defendants Nos. 1 and 2). The plaintiffs, thereupon, served on these persons notices to quit; but on their refusing to do so, they brought this suit against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (making their co-sharer a pro forma defendant) to obtain khas possession of the four kanis of land to the extent of their twelve-anna share, claiming mesne profits for the time the defendants were so in possession.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 2147, 2148 and 2149 of 1879, against the decree of F. McLaughlin, Esq., Officiating Judge of Noakhali, dated the 2nd June 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo K. D. Chatterjee, Second Munsif of Soodaram, dated the 7th September 1878.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended, that they were in possession of the land in question before the Collector took possession of the taluq, and that they held the land under howladars; and the pro forma defendant (co-sharer of the plaintiff) supported their contention.

The Munsif decided in favour of the plaintiffs, and gave them ijmalī khas possession of their twelve-anna share, and ordered the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to pay mesne profits and costs.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge who, without going into the merits of the case, decided that the plaintiffs, being sharers only in the property, could not bring this suit without joining their co-sharer, and that, inasmuch as this co-sharer was adverse to the suit, the plaintiffs' remedy was either to obtain a partition, or induce their co-sharer to join in the suit; he therefore allowed the appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Doorga Mohan Das, for the appellants.

Baboo Sreenath Bonnerjee, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

[416] The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—In this case the District Judge has, unfortunately, made a mistake. According to the view which he has taken of the law, the plaintiffs, however just their claim may be, cannot possibly obtain redress except by a partition.

Their case is, that they are the twelve-annas shareholders of a certain shikmi taluq, the remaining four-annas share belonging to the defendant No. 4. They say that the Collector of Noakhali unjustly dispossessed them of this taluq; whereupon they and the defendant No. 4 brought a suit against him under s. 15, Act XIV of 1859, and obtained a decree for possession.

Meanwhile, the principal defendants, Nos. 1 and 2, had been let into occupation through the Collector, of four kanis of land within the taluq; and as the Collector himself was a trespasser, the plaintiffs say that these defendants are also trespassers. They, therefore, bring this suit to obtain khas possession of the four kanis of land to the extent of their twelve-annas share jointly with the defendants, and also mesne profits for the time during which the latter have held the twelve-annas share unlawfully.

The case of the principal defendants is, that they were rightfully occupying the land as tenants before the Collector took possession of the taluq; and the defendant No. 4 supports their case, and desires to retain them upon the property.

The Munsif found entirely in favour of the plaintiffs, and gave them a decree for ijmalī possession of the land to the extent of their twelve-annas share, with mesne profits and costs.

The District Judge has taken a different view. He has dismissed the suit, upon the ground that, even if the plaintiffs' case be well founded as to the principal defendants having been let into possession by the Collector, they cannot bring a suit of this kind without joining their co-sharer as a plaintiff; which means, of course, that they cannot sue at all, because their co-sharer, the defendant No. 4, is adverse to the suit.

If the Judge were right in this, one share-holder out of many might always set his co-sharers at defiance, by introducing [417] objectionable persons upon the joint property against the wishes of his co-sharers ; and the latter would have no remedy, except by obtaining a partition.

We know of no authority which justifies such a view of the law ; and it seems to us, that the District Judge has quite misunderstood the meaning of the cases to which he refers.

The plaintiffs' case is, that the principal defendants are trespassers, because they were introduced upon the land by the Collector, who was himself a trespasser ; and if the plaintiffs are right in this, and if they have not since recognized the defendants as their tenants, it is clear, that as against the plaintiffs they are trespassers ; and no consent to their occupation by the other defendant, No. 4, will make them any other than trespassers as regards the plaintiffs' twelve-annas share.

If the defendant No. 4 has given the other defendants permission to occupy the land to the extent of her share, the decree to which the plaintiffs are entitled, assuming that they prove their case, is that which they ask for in the plaint, and which the Munsif has given them,—that is to say, a decree for khas possession of the four kanis jointly with the defendants to the extent of their twelve annas share.

A similar decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs by the High Court in the case to which the Judge refers: Hulodhur Sen v. Gooroodoss Roy (1). The other case which he cites, Balaji Baikaji Pinge v. Gopal bin Raghu Kuli (2), relates to a tenant, not a trespasser.

The view which the Munsif has taken of the law appears to us perfectly correct.

When a tenant has been put into possession of ijmal property with the consent of all the sharers, or what is the same thing, has been placed there by the managing shareholder, who has authority to act for the rest, no one or more of the co-sharers can turn the tenant out without the consent of the others. But no man has a right to intrude upon ijmal property against the will of the co-sharers or of any of them. If he does so, he may be ejected without notice, either altogether, if all the co-sharers join in the suit, or partially, if only some [418] of the co-sharers wish to eject him ; and the legal means by which such a partial ejectment is effected, is by giving the plaintiffs possession of their shares jointly with the intruder, as explained in the case of Hulodhur Sen v. Gooroodoss Roy (1), per Jackson, J.

The judgment of the lower appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside ; and the case must go back to that Court for retrial in accordance with the view of the law which we have above explained.

The appellants will have their costs in this Court ; and the costs in the lower Court will abide the result.

Appeal Nos. 2148 and 2149 will be governed by this decision.

[30th May, 1881.]

Suit for Possession—Formal Possession—Transfer of Possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 223, 224.

In a suit for possession, it appeared that, in 1863, the plaintiff had sued some of the present defendants for khas possession of the same land. In that suit the defendants pleaded that they were tenants of the plaintiff and entitled to hold under a patta, which they failed to prove, and the plaintiff obtained a decree. Three years afterwards the plaintiff was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859, instead of under s. 223.

Held, that as the plaintiff was put in possession under his decree by the officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was immaterial.

The formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates in point of law and fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from the one party to the other.

THE plaintiff in this case sued to recover from the defendants possession of seventeen bighas of land. The plaintiff [419] obtained a decree in the first Court; but the lower appellate Court dismissed the suit, upon the ground that the plaintiff had not been in possession for twelve years.

It appeared that in the year 1863, the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and the father of the defendant No. 1, to recover khas possession of the land, the subject of the present suit. The defendants at that time set up that they were tenants of the plaintiff, and entitled to hold the land as such under a certain patta. They failed, however, to prove their patta; and, consequently, the plaintiff obtained a decree against them for khas possession. Three years afterwards execution was taken out by the plaintiff under that decree, and he was put in possession by order of the Court. This happened within twelve years before the present suit. The Subordinate Judge, however, decided that, under the execution, the plaintiff did not obtain actual possession, but that he only obtained possession as malik; and from the return of the proceedings made by the officer on that occasion, it appeared that the plaintiff was professedly put into possession by proclamation and beat of drum under s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859, instead of under s. 223.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J. (who, after stating the facts as above, continued):—We are of opinion that as the plaintiff was put in possession under that decree by the officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was quite immaterial. All that was necessary was for the officer of the Court to go upon a portion of the land, and give the plaintiff possession of that portion in respect of the whole; and any formal mistake which may have been made by the officer in the mode of giving possession could not prejudice the plaintiff. It does not appear [420] that the defendants resisted the officer when he gave possession, or that it became necessary to turn them out by main force.

The Subordinate Judge has, unfortunately, fallen into the common error which prevailed in the Mofussil Courts a few years ago, that the formal possession which the Civil Court gives under an execution is not actual possession; whereas, as between the parties, it operates, in point of law and in fact, as a complete transfer of actual possession from the one party to the other. It would not be so against third parties of course; but, as between the parties to the suit, the formal delivery passes the actual possession as it can be passed. This has been decided by a Full Bench of this Court: Juggobundhu Mookerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (1).

The Subordinate Judge is quite in error in supposing that possession was given to the plaintiff as malik only, and that the defendants continued to hold the actual possession, because this would have been entirely inconsistent with the decree pronounced by the Court. The defendants had set up that they were the plaintiff's tenants, and by the decree that defence was directly negatived.

The case will, therefore, go back to the Court below for retrial; and it must be taken for granted, that the plaintiff did obtain khas possession against the defendants within twelve years of the commencement of this suit. So that, unless the defendants can show that something has happened since that time to create a new tenancy between them and the plaintiff, or to justify them in some way in retaining possession as against the plaintiff, the latter must succeed in this suit.

The appellant must have his costs of this appeal, and the costs of the lower Court will abide the result of the new trial.

The appeal No. 1767 is admittedly governed by this decision, and will be remanded accordingly, the same order being made in that case as regards costs.

Case remanded.

[421] INSOLVENCY.

Before Mr. Justice Broughton.

IN THE MATTER OF T. H. MARSHALL, AN INSOLVENT.
[26th July, 1881.]

Order and disposition of Insolvent—Indian Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 23.

Where goods are in the order and disposition of any person under such circumstances as to enable him by means of them to obtain false credit, then the owner of the goods, who has permitted him to obtain false credit, must suffer the penalty of losing such goods for the benefit of those who have given the credit.

[Affirmed, 10 C.L.R. 591.]

(1) 5 C. 584.

IN the month of February 1881, Mr. T. H. Marshall and Mr. Stevenson, who carried on business together as contractors and builders, agreed to dissolve partnership. At this time it appeared from the accounts that a sum of Rs. 5,500 was due from the firm to Stevenson. In order to pay off this debt, Marshall applied to one Theodore Boileau for a loan, and in consequence of such application, on the 10th March 1881, Boileau paid to Stevenson's attorney a sum of Rs. 5,000, which Stevenson agreed to accept as payment in full of the debt due to him; and on the 19th March 1881, a deed was executed by Boileau and Marshall, under which the latter, in consideration of an advance of Rs. 10,000 (Rs. 5,000 of which had already, on the 10th March, been advanced) assigned to Boileau, his executors, administrators, and assigns, as security for the loan, "all and singular the outstanding and book debts due to T. H. Marshall, and all and singular the securities for the said debts, and the benefit and advantage of all and singular the stock-in-trade, goods, wares, plant, machinery, and implements of his business, and all other goods, wares, machinery, and implements which did or might thereafter constitute the stock-in-trade of such business;" and it was further agreed between the parties, that Boileau should, until repayment, remain in possession of the stock-in-trade, wares, goods, machinery, and implements belonging to the business; and that nothing should be [422] removed from the premises without the consent of Boileau. Under this deed, Boileau was to be employed as superintendent and manager of the office of the business for one year at a monthly salary of Rs. 200.

This deed was duly executed on the 19th March 1881, and registered on the 24th, and the balance of the sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid to various creditors of the firm at Marshall's request. Boileau at this time was resident in Calcutta, and continued to be so until the 10th April 1881, when he removed to Barrackpore, placing two of his own durwans in possession, and himself attending to the business during office hours.

Marshall left Calcutta on the 23rd May, leaving Boileau in sole possession of the stock; and on the 26th May, a seizure of a portion of the stock-in-trade was made by the Small Cause Court on three decrees obtained against Marshall. On the 31st May, Marshall filed his petition in insolvency; Boileau meanwhile interpleaded in the Small Cause Court, but his claim was disallowed.

The Official Assignee, thereupon, took possession of the property, undertaking to sell and hold the proceeds to a separate account, subject to the order of the Court.

Certain creditors applied for and obtained an order for the examination of Boileau and Marshall, and the case came on for hearing, on the 12th July 1881, before Mr. Justice Broughton.

It appeared from the examination of Boileau and Marshall, that Marshall did all the outside work, whilst Boileau took the office work, making contracts and purchases in the name of Marshall Brothers, signing Marshall Brothers per T. Boileau. Marshall also purchased bricks, timber, and chunam, and gave other orders in the name of Marshall Brothers. It did not appear clearly that the creditors had notice of the assignment.

Mr. Trevelyan, for the creditors, admitted the bona fides of the assignment; but contended that the goods were in the possession, order, and disposition of Marshall at the time he became insolvent within the meaning of the 23rd section of the Insolvent Act.

ORDER.

BROUGHTON, J—The insolvent in this case had assigned his goods to Mr. Boileau prior to his insolvency, and the question is, whether they were in his own possession, order, or disposition when he became insolvent, within the meaning of the 23rd section of the Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21. The petition of the insolvent was filed on the 31st May 1881. There is no question in this case as to the validity of the assignment, which was dated the 19th March, in favour of Mr. Boileau. It is shown to have been made more than two months before the filing of the petition, and for good consideration; and it is shown, that the money he advanced—Rs. 9,500—was applied partly in buying out a partner, who was paid Rs. 5,000, and the balance in paying the debts of the more pressing creditors of the insolvent. It was not an assignment in contemplation of insolvency, for the insolvent swears he did not know he was in difficulties. Mr. Boileau had no idea of it, or, as he says, he would not have paid Rs. 5,000 to a partner just retiring from an insolvent firm. Mr. Trevelyan does not seek to impeach this testimony, nor does he suggest that either the insolvent or Mr. Boileau did not fairly state the case.

Mr. Boileau was, under the assignment, to become the manager of the insolvent's business at a salary of Rs. 200 a month, and he immediately entered upon his functions as manager, and brought an assistant, named Mr. Depenny, to help him with the accounts. The business was that of a builder and contractor, and the insolvent attended to the outside work, coming only occasionally to the office, where Mr. Boileau saw the customers.

Mr. Boileau states—and this is an accepted statement—that, in taking over the management, he had in view the protection of his own interest in the property, which consisted of the stock-in-trade, at the same time assisting the insolvent, his brother-in-law, who, he says, would have lost credit had the business been carried on in another name. The deed itself provided that Mr. Boileau should remain in possession; that the property [424] should not be removed without his consent; and that any property sold should be replaced. Accordingly, the old name was used; the contracts, purchases, letters, and so on were signed by Mr. Boileau—"Marshall and Company, per T. B.," or "per T. Boileau." Mr. Boileau's durwan was, however, placed at the door, and the goods were not allowed to leave the premises for the purpose of the business without the order of Mr. Boileau given to the persons in charge of them and to the durwan, except that, on some occasions,—the latest of which occurred some time before the filing of the petition—the insolvent himself was allowed to take goods when Mr. Boileau was not at the office. This happened for the most part in the early morning, before Mr. Boileau had arrived from Barrackpore, where he resided. When goods were so taken, the fact was reported to Mr. Boileau on his arrival, and he gave his sanction on this report. So the work went on for over two months, Mr. Marshall, being a practical builder, doing the outside work, and Mr. Boileau, with his staff of employés, doing the work at the office, making contracts and purchases, but in the name of "Marshall Brothers;" and all the money passing through his hands. He opened an account in his own name, and made payments by his own cheques to various persons connected with the business. Mr. Allen points out, that, among the payments made by Mr. Boileau on the making of the assignment, and with part of the money he advanced, was a payment to Hurrish Chandra Mitter, of Rs. 1,000 on the 19th of March, by a cheque.

signed "T. Boileau," in payment of a debt due by the insolvent to Hurrish Chandra for bricks and soorkie supplied to the business. Hurrish Chandra had, prior to the assignment, spoken to Mr. Boileau about the business, which he described as a profitable one, and advised him that he might make the advance; yet Hurrish Chandra now comes forward and claims that the stock-in-trade, which he knew was assigned to Mr. Boileau, was in the apparent ownership of the insolvent. But notice to one creditor is not notice to all.

A great many cases have been cited in argument, but questions arising upon this clause and the similar clauses contained in the English Bankruptcy Act depend so much upon their own [425] actual circumstances, that it is necessary to be very careful in applying these precedents. Among the cases which have been quoted, the case of Agabeg (1), decided by Mr. Justice Phear in 1867 upon the same Statute, bears perhaps the closest resemblance to this. There, Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall and Co., having an assignment of Mr. Agabeg's furniture, put a durwan at the gate, and sent a man to make a catalogue, with a view to the disposal of the furniture by public auction; and it was held, that the furniture, which Mr. Agabeg was allowed to use as before up to the date of his insolvency was in his exclusive possession, and further that it was in his order and disposition.

But Mr. Boileau in the present instance, by the action I have already described, did a great deal more than Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall & Co. did in the case of Mr. Agabeg's furniture.

There has been, moreover, a recent decision of the Lords Justices upon the construction of the like section of the English Bankruptcy Act (32 and 33 Vict., c. 71 s. 15), which seems to me to throw some doubt upon the decision in Agabeg's case (1). In the case of Ex parte National Guardian Assurance Company, In re Francis (2), a man was in friendly possession of a house and furniture which the bankrupt was allowed to enjoy; he was put there to get the goods out of the defendant's order and disposition, so as to avoid the effects of his bankruptcy. "The only question," said Lord Justice James, "is, whether possession was taken by the true owner of the goods with the intention of asserting his rights;" and Lord Justice Thesiger added, "the debtor had, as in Vicarino v. Hollingsworth (3), the use of goods, but it was subject to the control of the man who was put in possession, and who was there to see that the use was in accordance with the rights of the bill-of-sale holder."

These cases, however, are very different from a case like the present, in which the property consists not of furniture which remains the same, but of goods to be used in the business, and daily altered in quantity and character.

[426] It appears to me that the goods were in the possession of Mr. Boileau, and are prima facie, his, unless it can be shown that they were in the order and disposition of the insolvent, for the Insolvent Act, like the more recent Bankruptcy Acts, uses the expression possession, order or disposition, unlike the Act of James the 1st, which uses the words possession, order, and disposition.

The principle upon which this section ought to be applied is very clearly stated in another recent case, Ex parte Wingfield, In re Florence (4), by Lord Justice James:—"This section (32 and 33 Vict., c. 71, s. 15) must be read however, as the similar provision in the Bankruptcy Statutes from the time of James the 1st has always been read, with some attention to common sense. It has always been construed as meaning this:—that if goods are in a man's possession, order or disposition, under such circumstances as to enable him by means of them to obtain false credit, then the owner of the goods who has permitted him to obtain that false credit is to suffer the penalty of losing his goods for the benefit of those who have given the credit. But if no such credit has been given, then the maxim applies cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex."

Applying this principle to the case before me, I find that Mr. Boileau stated in the course of his examination: "I sent notice to the debtors, I believe, on the 30th of May. The notice was written in the solicitor's office, &c." But this subject was not pursued, and it is not shown that the notices were ever issued. Mr. Boileau continued: "Mr. Leslie (his solicitor) suggested that I should give notice. I said it would be tantamount to shutting him up, as he depended upon the debtors for work—they were his customers. It was not to keep his customers from this knowledge, but simply that it might harm him individually. I expected his customers would withdraw their custom from him, because it would evidence that he was obliged to borrow money; besides people are generally very touchy about their bills being handed over to others. I did not wish to injure his credit."

Accordingly, when a debt due from one of the large cus-[427]tomers—Mr. Ezra—had to be realized, it was realized by the insolvent personally, and the money was handed over to Mr. Boileau by him. This was on the very eve of the insolvency. The assignment was equally kept secret from the dealers in materials which had to be bought to carry on the works. Mr. Marshall himself says: "I purchased timber, bricks, and chunam for the business in the name of 'Marshall Brothers,' and any orders sent for materials were signed either by me as 'Marshall Brothers,' or by Mr. Boileau as 'Marshall Brothers per T. Boileau or per T. B.' This went on in the usual course of business up to the time of my insolvency."

These persons, therefore, from whom goods were bought, were led to believe that their goods were bought by Marshall Brothers—not by Mr. Boileau or for his benefit, and Mr. Boileau's statement regarding the mode of dealing with the goods, shows that they were allowed to leave the premises from time to time, as the insolvent directed, with the consent of Mr. Boileau.

Fresh goods were thus brought in from time to time for the purpose of the business, that is to say, that they might be used in the business, to earn funds for the business, which could be applied in payment for them, on the faith of the credit of Mr. Marshall, and not of Mr. Boileau.

It appears to me that the property was in the order and disposition of the insolvent, and that it would be unjust to apply the proceeds of these goods to satisfy the assignment to Mr. Boileau, which he himself says was kept secret.

It is agreed that the costs of both parties shall be paid out of the proceeds of the goods.

In a suit for an account of partnership transactions, the Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit was instituted, framed certain issues with the object of ascertaining who managed the business; with whom the partnership property was; whether the defendants ought to account; what was the capital, and what the expenditure and profits of the firm; and after taking evidence on these points, dismissed the suit.

Held, that the Subordinate Judge should have followed the course pointed out in forms 132 and 133 of sch. iv of the Civil Procedure Code, and at the first hearing should have determined whether there had been a partnership; what were its conditions; was it dissolved, or ought it to be dissolved; and who were the parties interested, and in what shares; and upon determining these questions, should have directed accounts to be taken; and after the accounts had been taken, should have made a final decree.

Held also, that the suit should not have been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the case was transferred to the Court of the District Judge.

The plaint in a partnership suit ought to be framed on the lines of form 113 in sch. iv of the Code and the accounts should be taken as prayed in that form.

Under ordinary circumstances, the costs of a partnership suit should be paid out of the assets of the partnership, or, in default of assets, by the partners in proportion to their respective shares, unless any partner denies the fact of a partnership, or opposes obstacles to the taking of the accounts, and so renders a suit necessary, when he is usually made to pay the costs up to the hearing.

THIS was a suit to recover an eight-anna share of the capital money and profits of a partnership business. The plaintiffs alleged that their ancestor, one Sorup Chunder Shaha, and one Ram Kristo Banikya, the father of the defendants, [429] started a joint karbar in 1251 (1844), which was carried on after the death of the original partners by the plaintiffs and defendants until Kartic 1280 (1873), when the partnership was dissolved. Disputes arose between the partners, and the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration; but no award was made. The plaintiffs then instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, alleging that large sums were due to them from the defendants, and praying for an account. The defendants, by their written statement, on the other hand, contended, that the plaintiffs were indebted to them. The Subordinate Judge framed the following, among other issues:

“By whom the principal karbar and the branch karbars in respect of which the plaintiffs sue for a nikas, were managed?”

“With whom the money, papers, and stock appertaining thereto were kept, and in whose possession they are now?”

“If it be proved that the karbar was managed by the defendants, and that the defendants used to keep the money and papers relating thereto, should they not be bound to render an account to the plaintiffs?”

“What sums of money were supplied, and by whom, as capital money and as Jogan money; and what was the amount of expenditure, as also the amount of profits down to the date of the dissolution of the partnership business?”

“What sum has been appropriated by each of the parties from the fund of the karbar?”

“Has there been a loss, and to what amount, and through whose fault?”

“Agreeably to the findings on the above issues, which of the parties should be held liable to the other party, and to what amount?”

The Subordinate Judge found that the karbar was managed by both parties, and not only by the defendants alone; that the khatahs of the karbar were neither kept by the defendants, nor taken possession of by them at the time the partnership business was dissolved, and holding that the plaintiffs could not call upon the defendants to submit a nikas, or to pay them any sum, dismissed the suit.

JUDGMENT.

PONTIFEX J.—In this case the parties, or their respective ancestors, joined together in carrying on a joint karbar, or partnership, which continued for many years down to the year 1280. The plaintiffs on the 15th September 1876, within three months after the termination of the business, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, whereby they claimed that, on an adjustment of accounts between the parties, they would be entitled to a very considerable sum. The defendants, by their written statement, insisted, on the other hand, that, on an adjustment of accounts, they would be entitled to a still more considerable balance. The parties being thus at issue, the Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, framed seven issues, to be found in his judgment. Now, assuming for a moment that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try the case, the course which he ought to have pursued is clearly pointed out in Forms Nos. 132 and 133 of sch. iv of the Code of Civil Procedure. At the first hearing of the suit, really what the Court had to determine was, whether there had been a partnership, and what were its conditions; was it dissolved, or ought it to be dissolved; and who were the parties interested in the partnership, and in what shares; and upon determining these questions, it ought, in the first instance, to have directed that accounts should be taken as set forth in Form No. 132, subject, of course, to any such alterations as the nature of the case might require. It is only after taking these accounts and obtaining the report of the officer of the Court, or, if there is no such officer, when the Judge himself has arrived at a decision on the accounts, that a final decree should be made according to Form No. 133 of the 4th schedule of the Code. Instead of following this procedure, the Subordinate Judge has dealt [431] with the case as if the whole matter was to be completed at the first hearing, and has, as I have said, raised at the first hearing, issues which ought more properly to have been raised after the first hearing. He has dealt with the third and fourth issues raised by him. The plaintiffs, who also carried on a separate business, in their plaint tried to make a case that the defendants were in fact the managing partners in this business, to which the suit relates, and that the plaintiffs were only concerned in making advances, for the purposes of the business, whenever they were required. Their case also was, that the defendants were, as compared to them, in a much poorer condition of life, and that they never made advances, or were able to make advances, for the purposes of this business. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, raised the issues for the purpose of ascertaining by whom the business was in fact carried on, and by whom the advances were made; and he seems to have determined, upon the result of his view of the evidence that the defendants were not alone the managers of the business and that the plaintiffs were not the persons who alone made the advances. Having arrived at that conclusion, he held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to call upon the defendants to submit a nikas in respect of the business, and dismissed their suit. Now, whether the plaintiffs were right or not in the allegations made in the plaint, and if it were proved that they were joint managers, or even the sole managers, of the business, they were nevertheless, entitled, after the dissolution of the partnership, to have the accounts taken; and even if upon those accounts it should appear that the plaintiffs were, contrary to these allegations, under liability to the defendants, yet they would be entitled to have a decree of Court determining the amount of their liability and to get the indemnity of the Court from further litigation, or future demands by the defendants in respect of the accounts. We think, therefore, that even if the view of the evidence taken by the Subordinate Judge was a correct view, as to which we express no opinion, he was, notwithstanding, bound to proceed with the accounts in the manner shown in Form No. 132 of the 4th schedule, and to have the matter settled. Now, a considerable part of the evidence [432] that was taken before the Subordinate Judge was addressed to the question who occupied the principal guddi, where the business of this partnership was carried on; and the Subordinate Judge seems to have come to the conclusion, that it was the defendants who continuously occupied that guddi, and that they not only joined in the management with the plaintiffs in the partnership business there, but also did their own separate business in that guddi. It appears that the account books of the joint partnership are no longer forthcoming, or if forthcoming, are in such a condition that it would be difficult or impossible for the Court to utilize them for the purpose of settling an account between the parties. Now, if it were the fact that the defendants were the principal occupants of the guddi, it might be inferred that they would be at least as equally responsible for the books as the plaintiffs. But assuming that the books cannot be obtained or utilized, still an account must be taken of the partnership and of the property if any, still belonging to the partnership, in the best manner the Court can arrive at it. For example, if no books are forthcoming, the Court must call upon each party to furnish a statement of facts in respect of the business and its transactions, and to support such statement by evidence; and upon these statements of facts, as supported or contradicted by the evidence bearing thereupon, the Court must come to a conclusion and shape its decree accordingly. It is of great importance that in suits for account and administration, the proper procedure should be followed, and it may be useful to refer to the observations of Phear, J., in Syud

Shah Aliahmad v. M. S. Bibee Nusibun (1), though in that case his observations were addressed to an account to be taken against one accounting party only, whereas in a partnership, all the partners are, of course, accounting parties. The plaint in a partnership suit ought to be framed on the lines of Form 113, schs iv of the Procedure Code, and the accounts should be taken as prayed in that Form. Now, we have considerable doubt whether this partnership suit should have been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Under s. 265 of the Contract Act, it is enacted that [433] where parties wish to apply to the Court to wind up the business of a partnership firm, to provide for the payment of its debts, and to distribute the surplus according to the shares of the partners respectively, the Court to which they must apply, is the Court of the District Judge. That appears in the explanation to the section, and there has been a case in this Court, decided by McDonell and Field, JJ., Prosad Dass Mullick v. Russick Lall Mullick (2), in which they held that such a suit could only be brought in the Court of the District Judge. Under the circumstances in which this case comes before us, we think the proper course will be to direct that the District Judge proceed with the further trial of the case, and we shall now order that an enquiry be made as to the conditions on which the parties carried on the partnership, and as to the shares in which they were respectively interested. That an account be taken first of the credits, property, and effects now belonging to the partnership; and secondly, an account of the debts and liabilities of the partnership; and thirdly, an account of all dealings and transactions between the plaintiffs and the defendants with respect to the partnership. In taking these accounts, the parties will have to show what advances have been made by either of them from time to time; and also what monies have been drawn out by either of them from time to time; and they will have to prove whether any and what interest is payable upon the advances made by them, and the Court will make orders in accordance with the form of the prayer in Form No. 113 of sch. iv to the Procedure Code. Upon the evidence taken, the Court will frame its decree in accordance with Form No. 133 of the 4th schedule in favour of the plaintiffs or defendants according as it decides on which side the balance is due.

We had some little doubt at first as to how we should deal with the costs of the suit up to this hearing. It is true that the plaint is not very artistically framed, but it is also clear that the defendants, by their written statement, asked that an account should be taken and claimed that, upon the taking of such account, they would be entitled to a balance; but so far, [434] as we can see, it appears to us that the defendants have really thrown every obstacle they could in the way of the plaintiffs having this account taken. In the examination of the principal defendant himself, a question in cross-examination was put by the plaintiffs—a very pertinent question as it seems to us—with respect to property alleged to be now belonging to this partnership, viz., "which of the talooks was purchased with joint funds?" That question was objected to by the defendants, and was disallowed. Under ordinary circumstances, the costs of a partnership suit should be paid out of the assets of the partnership, or in default of assets, by the partners in proportion to their respective shares in the partnership business. But when one of the partners either denies the fact of a partnership, or opposes obstacles to the taking of the accounts, and so renders a suit necessary it is usual to make such partner pay the costs up to the hearing. However, under the circumstances of this case we think that the costs of the proceedings up to this time must be dealt with as costs are ordinarily dealt with in a partnership suit: accordingly we leave them to be dealt with by the District Judge, and we make no other order concerning costs. In taking the account before the District Judge, the parties will be at liberty to use any part of the evidence adduced by them before the Subordinate Judge, and also to adduce further evidence. The course is consented to by the parties before us. Neither party will be bound by the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge, but the whole case will be open for decision by the District Judge.

Case remanded.

IN THE MATTER OF HOSSEINI BEGUM, AN INFANT, AND IN THE MATTER OF ACT X OF 1875. [28th July, 1881.]

Mahomedan Law—Shiah School—Minors—Custody—Mother.

According to the Shiah School of the Mahomedan law, a mother is entitled to the custody of her female children, unless she has been guilty of unchastity.

[435] IN this case a rule had been obtained by one Phoodia Bibee, calling upon two persons, named Aga Mahomed Kazim Ispahani and Moonshi Mahomed Ibrahim, to show cause why they should not bring up before the Court the persons of Hosseini Begum and Koolsum Begum, the infant children of Phoodia Bibee, to be dealt with according to law. It appeared that Phoodia Bibee was the widow of one Meer Mahomed Kazim Jowhuree, to whom she had been married according to the Shiah rites of the Mahomedan law, and with whom she had resided up to the time of his death, which happened on the 13th April 1881. Meer Mahomed left a will, of which Aga Mahomed Kazim Ispahani and Moonshi Mahomed Ibrahim were the executors; and they had applied for, but had not obtained, probate of the will at the time of the present application. By this will Meer Mahomed had appointed one Hadjee Aga Syed Saduq the supervisor of the matters connected with the will. Phoodia Bibee had two children by her husband,—namely, the infants Hosseini Begum and Koolsum Begum who were of the age of six and four years respectively, and she alleged that these children had, since their respective births, been brought up, suckled and reared by her personally. She further stated, that since the death of her husband, she continued to live at his dwelling-house until the 22nd of May 1881, when she left the house owing to an attempt by Aga Mahomed Kazim Ispahani, to commit an indecent assault upon her, and went to the house of one Fatima Begum, a niece of her husband, and that she was obliged to leave her children behind. She then applied, through her attorney, to Aga Mahomed Kazim Ispahani and Moonshi Mahomed Ibrahim to give up the children to her, which they refused to do, stating that she had left her house without cause, and that, acting under the advice, and in obedience to the wishes of Hadjee Syed Aga Saduq, they would retain the custody and guardianship of the infants. They further stated that they had reason to apprehend that proper and sufficient care would not be taken of the infants, and that the moral atmosphere of their mother's new dwelling-house would be far from wholesome for the children. And they refused to allow Phoodia Bibee to have access to the children.

[436] The rule was obtained upon an affidavit by Phoodia Bibee setting out the above facts. Counter-affidavits were filed alleging that Phoodia Bibee was the "moota," wife of Meer Mahomed Kazim Jowhuree, and charging her with various acts of unchastity. These charges were denied by Phoodia Bibee.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Gasper in support of the rule.

Mr. Ameer Ali and Mr. Abdul Rahman showed cause.

Mr. Ameer Ali.—Under the Shiah law, Phoodia Bibee is not entitled to the guardianship of her children. In Mohomuddy Begum v. M. S. Oomdutoonissa (1), the Court say,—“The appellant before us now states that she is a Shiah. If she be a Shiah, then, as we see in Baillie's Digest of the Mahomedan Law, Imameea Doctrine, p. 232, a mother can neither be herself the guardian of her children, nor can she make a testamentary appointment of guardian to them.” [CUNNINGHAM, J.—Though she may not be entitled to the guardianship of her children, she is entitled to their custody.] The word ‘guardian’ is used to imply both guardianship of person and of property. Unchastity takes away the right of the mother to the custody of her children. In the Tagore Law Lectures for 1873, Baboo Shamachurn Sircar, quoting the Etawa Alamgiri Vol. I, p. 728, says:—“The mother is of all the persons best entitled to the custody of her infant child, unless she be wicked or unworthy to be trusted. Wickedness which disqualifies a mother for the custody of her child, is such wickedness as may be injurious to it, adultery or theft, or the being a professional singer or mourner.” In Baillie's Digest, Imameea p. 95, it is said, that the mother has a preferable right to the custody of a female child until the child has attained the age of seven or ten years. But that must be taken subject to the qualification stated in the Tagore Law Lectures, 1873. In Ali's Personal Law of the Mahomedans, p. 203, it is laid down, that “the qualifications necessary for the exercise of the right of hizanat are the following:—(i) that the hazina should be of sound mind; (ii) that she should be of an age [437] which would qualify her to bestow on the child the care which it may need; (iii) that she should be well conducted; and (iv) that she should live in a place where the infant may not undergo any risk, morally or physically.” All the cases are decided with reference to the interests of the children; if these are imperilled, the mother loses her right. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—Unless she has committed some act of impropriety, she is entitled to the custody of her infant children.] The executors must be able to exercise supervision. If the mother goes to a place where they cannot do this, she loses her right.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Gasper were not called upon.

CUNNINGHAM, J., made the rule absolute, and directed that the children should be given up to the mother in the course of the day.

A person claiming a right to rent-bearing land in Assam, held under a patta from Government in the names of the persons against whom he claims, is entitled to sue in the Civil Court for a declaration of his title and right to have his name registered as co-owner in the Collectorate; and the Civil [438] Court has jurisdiction to determine such suits, although the Collector has not been first applied to; but should not pass any order against the Collector in any suit to which he is not a party, but merely declare what the plaintiff's rights are.

THIS was a suit for declaration of coparcenary right and for registration of the name of the plaintiff, with those of the defendants, in the Collector's books, in respect of 52 bighas 4 cottas 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ lechas of rent-bearing land. The plaintiff stated that one Kamdas, who held 317 dighas 15 lechas in certain villages, of which the lands in dispute formed a portion, left three sons surviving—Andharu, Chana Apa, and Condho—who were each entitled to an equal third share of the land, that Gondho left two sons, Bhogjar, the father of the plaintiff, and Papara, the fourth defendant; that the first defendant was the grandson and sole descendant of Andharu; and that the second defendant Ajala, and third defendant Kuherain, were the sons of Chana Apa. The plaintiff, accordingly, claimed that he was entitled, along with his brother Jara, to one-sixth of the land held by Ramdas. The plaintiff further stated, that, after the death of his father, he commenced to hold possession of the land in question in conjunction with the defendants, and that the mouzadar had entered his name and that of the defendant No. 4, Papara, along with those of the other defendants, in the measurement papers of 1283; but that, subsequently, the Deputy Commissioner had, on the 27th December 1876, ordered his name and that of Papara to be struck out, on the ground that they had been entered without orders; and, without any application having been made, had directed the patta to be issued in the names of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 & 3. The plaintiff, accordingly, brought this suit to have his coparcenary right declared and to have his name registered as co-owner. The defendants Nos. 1 and 4 admitted the claim, but the other two defendants contested it as being false, and in addition pleaded limitation, and submitted that the Collector was a necessary party.

The Assistant Commissioner, finding the facts in favor of the plaintiff, gave him a decree, declaring that he and Jara were entitled to a coparcenary right in one-sixth of the land, and to [439] have their names entered in the revenue records; and directed that Kuherain should pay all costs. Against this decree the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appealed, and the lower Appellate Court reversed it and dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue in the Civil Court without having first applied to the Collector to have his name registered as a

The facts in this case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and MACLEAN, JJ.), which was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

PRINSEP, J.—The lands in this suit originally belonged to one Isharam. The plaintiff states that they were sold to Parsuram in execution of a decree against Isharam, and were purchased from Parsuram by her father in 1854 (1260). Isharam's name, however, remained on the Collector's register notwithstanding these purchases.

The defendant Rotekant Dass obtained a decree against Isharam, in execution of which the lands were sold to defendant No. 2, Komolakanto Surma, to whom the Collector, in 1281, granted a patta.

Plaintiff now sues for a declaration of her right to the land, for registration [440] of her name in the Collectorate, and to have the sale to defendant No. 2 set aside.

The plaint was filed on 15th November 1875, the suit has twice been remanded by the lower appellate Court, and we regret that it is impossible for us now to put an end to these proceedings.

The District Judge has found that, before coming to the Civil Court, the plaintiff is bound to go to the Collector and to endeavour to obtain a patta from him in cancelment of the patta granted to defendant No. 2. The Judge further states, that, "if the Collector, on enquiry, finds that there has been no mistake or collusion in the granting of his patta to defendant No. 2 and refuses to accede to the plaintiff's request, his decision on this point must be taken as final."

This opinion is certainly opposed to what was declared by the same District Judge on the 23rd December 1876 where this case came before him previously. He then stated—"Plaintiff is entitled, on the facts stated by her to ignore the second sale in execution of Isharam's right altogether, and to ask the Court to declare her right in the land as well as her right to have her name registered in the Collector's book as the Government ryot."

It appears to us that the Civil Court which has twice sold the land as belonging to Isharam is the proper tribunal to decide. Whether anything passed to the purchaser at the execution-sale held on the 24th September 1874 or whether the rights of Isharam were at that time vested in the plaintiff as stated by her.

The District Judge should decide this appeal with as little delay as possible.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result, and appellant will recover the value of the appeal stamp.

The facts in this case also were sufficiently set out, for the purposes of the report, in the judgment of the Court [MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.], which was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—The grounds upon which the lower Appellate Court has dismissed this suit, as well as the suit in appeal No. 66, appear to us to be untenable. In appeal No. 599, the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of one bigha odd of land as their proportionate share in a certain plot of rent bearing homestead land belonging to them and to the defendant whom they allege to be their own brother. They also ask to obtain a separate patta from the Revenue Court in respect of this land.

The defendant denied that he was the uterine brother of the plaintiffs. He alleged that the land, of which he had obtained a patta from the Government, was his own property, and that the plaintiffs had no share in it.

The first Court decided, and with its decision the present plaintiffs-appellants are content, that the plaintiffs were brothers of the defendant; that they had established their title to their proportionate share in the land; and accordingly it gave a decree, declaring their right in it ijmali, and that they were entitled to have their names registered conjointly with that of the defendant.

On appeal the Judge threw out the suit in toto, on the ground that the Collector had refused to recognize the plaintiffs as the Government tenants in occupation of the lands in suit; that, consequently any possession of these lands, if they ever possessed any, was unlawful, for no ryot "in Assam Proper has any title to hold and cultivate land without a patta from the Collector."

We are not aware of the law or authority under which the Judge advances so broad a proposition as this, that no ryot can enjoy possession of any lands in Assam without direct permission of the Collector, or hold or cultivate land without a patta from the Collector; but it seems to us unnecessary to consider this point, because in the present suit the Collector is not a party. The present is a suit affecting the rights of private individuals inter se; and for the determination and decision of such rights, whether relating to lands ryoti or otherwise, we can have no doubt that the Civil Courts in Assam have jurisdiction.

We observe also that the provisions of the Rent Law, Act X of 1859, are in force in Assam, and that the Government recognizes hereditary succession in tenancies. In a case such as this, if, as a matter of fact, land has been held under a patta in the name of an elder brother, and the younger brothers of the family can show that they have held the land conjointly with their elder brother, the nominal holder, the Civil Court is clearly the proper Court, in the event of dispute as to possession or share in such land between the two, to determine their respective rights and interests. We are, therefore, of opinion, that in this case, the first Court acted rightly in determining the matters at issue between the parties, and that the Judge on appeal was not competent to decline to decide them.

We, therefore, remand the case, in order that the lower Appellate Court may hear the appeal and decide the case on its merits. Costs will abide the event.

The same order is applicable to the appeal No. 600.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field.

NILMADHUB SHAHA AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. SRINIBASH KURMOKAR (Plaintiff).^{*} [26th May, 1881.]

Suit for possession—Limitation—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27.

In a suit for possession of land, it appeared that the defendants had obtained a darpatni lease of the land in question in 1271 (1865), and that they had immediately dispossessed the plaintiff, and had never acknowledged him to be their tenant. The plaintiff instituted his suit within twelve years from the date of dispossession.

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

That section only applies to cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, and cannot be pleaded in bar by a defendant who does not admit that such relation has existed.

THIS was a suit to have the plaintiff's purchased right declared in respect of an eight-anna share of certain land, and to recover khas possession, together with mesne profits. It appeared that the land had originally belonged to the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3, one Uma Sunduri Dasi, the widow of one Kesub Chunder Kurmokar, and that they were in joint possession. The plaintiff was dispossessed in the year 1272 (1865). He then brought a rent-suit in respect of his share, and obtained a decree. In 1284 (1877), the plaintiff purchased the share of Uma Sunduri Dasi, but was not allowed by the other defendants to take possession, whereupon he instituted the present [443] suit. The defendants contended that, in 1271, and immediately prior to the dispossession of the plaintiff, they had obtained a darpatni of the land in question, when they at once dispossessed the plaintiff, and that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. Both the lower Courts gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the appellants.

Baboo Soshi Bhosen Dutt for the respondent.

The judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows :—

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 373 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Kishna Chunder Chatterjee, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 27th December 1879, modifying the decree of Baboo Kristo Behari Mookerjee, First Munsif of Kooshtea, dated the 29th of June 1878.

JUDGMENTS.

PONTIFEX, J.—It is admitted in this case, on the findings of the lower Courts, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, unless he is barred by s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 from suing. That section gave him a limitation of one year, and the plaintiff instituted the suit after the expiration of eleven years from the date of the alleged dispossession. Now, taking the words of that section by themselves, and putting, what I think is, a reasonable construction upon them, it seems to me they do not apply to this case, and the defendants are not entitled to insist upon them. The facts of the case are, that the defendants claim that immediately prior to the dispossession of the plaintiff, a darpatni was created in their favour, and upon its creation they at once proceeded to dispossess the plaintiff from his holding. Now the words of the section are: "All suits to recover the occupancy or possession of any land, farm, or tenure from which a ryot, farmer, or tenant has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to receive rent for the same," should be commenced within one year. It seems to me that the course of action pursued by the defendants in turning out the plaintiff from his occupation immediately their darpatni was created, showed that at that time they did not then admit that he was a tenant. As he was immediately dispossessed after their title accrued, it is clear that they could neither have received rent from him, nor could he have paid rent to them; and as they did not admit that at that time he was their tenant, I do not think it [444] lies in their mouth now to insist that he was a tenant within the terms of s. 27; and not being a tenant, the limitation of one year would not apply to the case. There seems to be a question whether these suits under s. 27 are not merely possessory suits. As to that I am not at present prepared to give any opinion. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

FIELD, J.—I also think that in this case the defendants cannot be permitted to approbate and reprobate. It appears that, after the grant to them of the patni, they ousted the plaintiff without giving him an opportunity of attorning to them and becoming their tenant, and they cannot now be permitted to say that there was a tenancy existing between him and the defendants, for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the one year's rule of limitation. But it appears to me also, that the one year's rule of limitation provided by s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was not intended to apply to a case of this kind. The particular words in that section, upon which the defendants rely in this case, are: "All suits to recover the occupancy of any land, farm, or tenure from which a ryot, farmer, or tenant has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to recover rent for the same." In order to understand the meaning of these words, we may examine the history of their use in Acts of the Legislature, which are in pari materia. That history is as follows: Section 23 of Act X of 1859 contained a specification of the different kinds of suits which could be brought under the provisions of that Act, and over which the Revenue Courts were given jurisdiction. Clause 6 of that section specifies the following suits, viz., "all suits to recover the occupancy or possession of any land, farm or tenure, from which a ryot, farmer, or tenant has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to receive rent for the same." Now, it was decided in the Full Bench case of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Ram Narain Mitter (1), that these words refer only to possessory actions against the person entitled to receive the rent, and not to suits in which the plaintiff sets out his title, and seeks to have his right declared and possession given him in pursuance of that title. "Full meaning," said Peacock, C. J., [445] who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench, "may, and we think must be given to the words 'illegally ejected' without treating them as giving a wider sense to the words above mentioned." He then proceeds to give instances of such "illegal ejectment," as, for example, when a zemindar ejects a ryot forcibly and without having recourse to the Court; and he concludes thus: "Looking to the whole Act, it appears to us that cl. 6 of s. 23 does not take from the Civil Court the power to try the question of title as between a ryot farmer or tenant and the person to whom he pays rent. It follows, therefore, that in this action which is brought, setting out a title by the plaintiff, and asking, 'under the above facts,' to be declared entitled, on the strength of his documents, to recover possession of the lands, he will be entitled, if he makes out his case, to a decree that he be put into possession of the land with mesne profits." See also the following cases decided before the Full Bench decision:—Bishumbhur Boil v. Okoor Pandey (1), Banee Madhub Bznerjee v. Joy Kishen Mookerjee (2), Lalla Gokool Pershad v. Raja Rajendra Kishore Singh (3); and the following cases decided after the Full Bench case, —Laljee Sahoo v. Bhugwan Doss (4) and Dhonaye Mundul v. Arif Mundul (5). In the Full Bench case—Chunder Coomar Mundul v. Nunnee Khanum (6)—it was held that the decision of a Revenue Court, in a case under cl. 6, s. 23, Act X of 1859, as to the genuineness of a mourosi patta, is not res judicata so as to estop a Civil Court from trying the validity of the patta in a subsequent suit in such Court between the same parties or parties under whom they claim. In this case one Bakar Ali had sued under cl. 6 of s. 23 to recover possession of land from which he alleged that he had been illegally ousted, and which was included in a certain mourosi patta. The defendants alleged that the mourosi patta was spurious. Bakar Ali succeeded, whereupon the defendant brought a suit in the Civil Court to have the patta declared to be a spurious document and to recover possession of the land. Jackson, J., doubted if suits [446] under cl. 6, s. 23 of Act X of 1859, were of the nature of possessory suits; but the other Judges who composed the Full Bench were agreed that the decision of the Revenue Court, except so far as it established the right of Bakar Ali to the possession of the land when he was ejected, was a finding upon a collateral matter, and had not the effect of res judicata in the civil case.

I think the result of these cases is, that a case under cl. 6, s. 23 of Act X of 1859, was very similar in its nature to a case under the old section (15) of Act XIV of 1859, now s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877; and this being so, suits under cl. 6, to recover the occupancy or possession of land from which a ryot has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to receive rent for the same, differ materially from suits like those referred to in the Full Bench case of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Ram Narain Mitter (7)—suits in which the plaintiff sets out his title and seeks to have his right declared and possession given him in pursuance of that title. To this latter class the twelve years' rule of limitation is applicable. In the Full Bench case, the suit was instituted by persons who had been ten years out of possession. While to the former class is applicable the one year's rule of limitation provided by s. 30 of Act X of 1859, which speaks of "all suits instituted under this Act," any specification being unnecessary, as such suits had been specified in s. 23. When Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was enacted, the specification of suits contained in s. 23 of Act X of 1859 became no longer necessary. And Act VIII enacted in general terms that all suits brought for any cause of action arising under Act X of 1859 were to be cognizable by the Civil Courts according to their several jurisdictions (see s. 33). The object of the Legislature in passing Beng. Act VII of 1869 was to transfer the trial of rent cases from the Revenue to the Civil Courts, and there was no intention to interfere with the special law of limitation provided for rent cases by Act X of 1859. In consequence, however, of the omission of the specification of suits in the Act of 1869, it became necessary, instead of the general words "all suits instituted under this Act" in s. 30 of Act X of 1859, to insert in the limitation section (27) of Beng. [447] Act VIII of 1869, a specification of the class of suits to which these special limitation provisions were applicable. Accordingly we find the words of cl. 6, s. 23 of Act X of 1859, "all suits to recover the occupancy [or possession] of any land, farm, or tenure from which a ryot, farmer or tenant has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to receive rent for the same," used, with the omission of the two words in brackets, in s. 27 of the Act of 1869. It appears to me reasonable to suppose that it was intended by the use of these words to make the one year's limitation provided by the Act of 1869 applicable to the same class of suits only to which cl. 6 of s. 23 of Act X of 1859 had been decided to be applicable and to which the one year's rule of limitation was applicable under the same Act of 1859. I find that the same view has been taken by a former learned Judge of this Court (Phear, J.) in the case of Nistarini v. Kali Pershad Dass Chowdhry (1).

REVISIONAL CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Morris and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

IN THE MATTER OF POONA CHURN PAL. [1st August, 1881.]

Sanction to Prosecute—Presidency Magistrates' Act (IV of 1877), ss. 41, 42, 43 and 168—General and Specific Sanction—Order of discharge—Superintendence of High Court—Charter Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 104), s. 15.

The only course to be pursued where it is sought to set aside an order of discharge made by a Presidency Magistrate, is that laid down in s. 168 of Act IV of 1877, and as by that section there is no appeal allowed to a complainant, who is a private individual, it is not open to him, by invoking the aid of the High Court under s. 15 of the Charter, to obtain under the Court's extraordinary powers that which he might obtain had he a right of appeal.

[F., Rat. Unrep. Cr. Rul. 335; R., 9 C. 397 (403).]

ON the 2nd May 1881, Poona Churn Pal obtained liberty, under the provisions of ss. 41 and 42 of Act IV of 1857, [448] from Mr. Justice

* Criminal Rule, No. 190 of 1881, against an order of F. J. Marsden, Esq., Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 9th July 1881.

Broughton, to prosecute one Dwarka Mohun Dass and his gomasta Anunto Hurry Pal, on the ground that the former, at the hearing of the suit of Dwarka Mohun Dass v. Poona Churn Pal, used as evidence on his behalf two documents purporting to be contracts, which were found by Mr. Justice Broughton not to be genuine, and that the latter had affirmed and filed a false affidavit in support of an application for leave to verify the plaint. At the prosecution at the Police Court, the two accused were charged under ss. 471, 193, and 209 of the Indian Penal Code. After summonses were issued and the parties had appeared, the Magistrate objected that no matter could be gone into which required sanction under s. 41 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, and that the sanction obtained was a limited sanction. He held, therefore, that the prosecution under ss. 193 and 209 could not be entertained, but that the prosecution might proceed on the charge under s. 471. The complainant, not agreeing to waive his right to prove that the accused had fraudulently instituted a false suit and given false evidence at the trial of the suit, the Magistrate ordered the accused to be discharged, and fined the complainant Rs. 50, to be awarded to each of the accused by way of compensation.

A rule nisi was applied for and obtained by Mr. Lee on behalf of the complainant, calling upon the Magistrate to show cause,—1st, why the fines should not be remitted; 2nd, why the sanction obtained should not be recognized in so far as it gave leave to prosecute under ss. 41 and 42 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act; 3rd, and why he should not be directed to record the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses.

Mr. Jackson on behalf of the accused applied for and obtained a rule, calling upon the complainant to show cause why the accused should not be heard, the Court directing that the two rules should be returnable on the same day.

Mr. Lee, at the hearing of these rules, contended, that the accused had no locus standi, and no claim as of right to appear at the argument of the rule, because this was not an appeal from the Magistrate's decision but an application to the High [449] Court to exercise its general powers of superintendence under s. 15 of the Charter, and that, inasmuch as the Court had no power to compel the accused to refund the Rs. 50 given to him as compensation, he would have no right to appear to defend at that point of the case. [On Mr. Bonnerjee, who appeared for the Magistrate and the Crown, informing the Court that he had no objection to the accused being heard, the Court decided, that as the accused was present and represented by counsel, he had a right to appear.]

Mr. Bonnerjee, on behalf of the Magistrate and the Crown, showed cause against the rule, contending, that the application was in the nature of an appeal, and that being so, the petitioner had no locus standi, as appeals against acquittals could only be instituted by the Local Government as laid down in s. 168 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act. That the Magistrate had not acted illegally, for the sanction to prosecute was limited and not general, and that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear a complaint of any offences which were not specifically mentioned in the sanction. The prosecution have no right to make this application. Section 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not wide enough to allow the High Court to entertain it. The Empress v. Gasper (1).

[MORRIS, J.—Section 147 is for the promotion of justice.] The power of the Court has been curtailed by the Presidency Magistrates' Act.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. M. Ghose and Mr. Trevelyan) for the accused.—If the right of setting aside an order exists under s. 147, it exists as well for the public as the Government; but if so, how is it that the Legislature has provided that no appeal from an acquittal shall lie except one presented by Government: Empress v. Miyaji Ahmed (1). Then, can persons come up to the Court by way of revision when they have no right by way of appeal. The case of The Corporation of Calcutta v. Bheccunram Napit (2) lays down that s. 147 is only applicable to cases of conviction, whereby a defendant is aggrieved; complainants cannot come up under it. Nor will [450] the Court exercise its extraordinary powers under s. 15 of the Charter when there is an appeal: Rajcoomar Singh v. Dinonath Ghuttuck (3). The case of In re Balaji Sitaram (4) gives the requisites of a proper sanction. The petition on which the rule was obtained is not accurate, and it does not appear that the person signing it was present at the Police Court. The following cases show that where material facts have been kept from the Court, the Court has always refused to entertain any application founded thereon:—The Attorney-General v. The Mayor of Liverpool (5), Wilson v. Callender (6), Sibnarain Ghose v. Hullodhur Doss (7). As to the question of refund of the fine, the Court has no power to make such an order: The Queen v. Hadjee Bux (8).

Mr. Lee in support of the rule.—The Court has undoubted power to interfere under s. 15 of the Charter, even supposing that the application cannot be made under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The application is not made by way of appeal, because there has been no trial, and s. 168 has reference to acquittal, dismissal or discharge after an enquiry of some sort. The Magistrate refused to do his duty by refusing to take evidence on the first two charges, and by wrongfully interpreting the sanction given by the High Court to be a limited one only. Further, the award of compensation was illegal. Section 242 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act provides that a sum not exceeding Rs. 50 should be allowed for compensation if it appear that there be not sufficient ground for the complaint, but the sanction granted by the Court must be taken to be sufficient ground; nor has the Magistrate power to fine until he has heard the case, or a sufficient portion of it, to enable him to decide that there was no good ground for the complaint. As regards the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere, see Chunder Coomar Roy v. Omesh Chunder Mojomdar (9).

JUDGMENT.

MORRIS, J.—We are asked to exercise our powers of superintendence under s. 15 of the Charter Act, by remitting certain compensation awarded to two persons, who have been complained against by the petitioner, and by setting aside an order of discharge made by the Presidency Magistrate, and directing the trial of the case to be proceeded with, in the light of a construction which ought to have been put, but was not put, upon an order of sanction to a prosecution made by Mr. Justice Broughton, after judgment passed in a civil suit on the Original Side of the High Court, in which the petitioner was defendant, and the persons complained against, plaintiffs.

After hearing the learned Standing Counsel in support of the action taken, and orders passed, by the Presidency Magistrate, and also Mr. Jackson who appeared, and whom we permitted to address us, on behalf of the persons who would be affected by any order directing a further trial of the case, and after considering the arguments addressed to us in reply by Mr. Lee, we are of opinion that we cannot properly exercise powers of superintendence under the Charter Act in this matter, and that the application must be rejected.

In the first place, s. 168 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act prescribes the course, and it seems to us the only course, which must be taken when an order of discharge made by a Presidency Magistrate is sought to be set aside. The Government alone have a right of appeal, and clearly, as was argued before us, no such special exception would have been made by the Legislature in favour of the Government, if both the Government and private individuals could obtain the same end by an application invoking the aid of the Court under s. 15 of the Charter Act.

Mr. Lee contends, that s. 168 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act relates only to cases in which a trial has been had, and that it has no application to a case, such as the present, in which the order of discharge was given in the course of proceedings preliminary to trial. Mr. Lee refers to the fact that, on the day fixed for the trial, when both parties were before the [452] Court, no examination of the complainant and of his witnesses was made, the reason being that the Presidency Magistrate, upon the view which he took of the sanction given by Mr. Justice Broughton, refused to allow the prosecution to proceed on all the charges, specified in the summons.

This objection, though, perhaps, started by the Presidency Magistrate himself, was, undoubtedly, taken by Mr. Ghose, the counsel for the accused; and this being so, it seems to us, having regard to the provisions of s. 119, Act IV of 1877, that that trial, in the sense in which the word 'trial' is used in the Act, had then commenced. By this objection, we understand the accused to have shown cause why they should not be convicted, and their objection prevailing, they were ordered to be discharged.

Then again, in the matter of setting aside the order, which practically amounted to a fine upon the complainant, by which compensation was awarded to the accused, we think that we are powerless to interfere. The award of compensation is a matter which lies entirely within the discretion of the Presidency Magistrate, and from the statement of the facts of the case, which has been presented to us, we are quite unable to say that that discretion has been unreasonably, or improperly, exercised. The accused were certainly put to a considerable amount of harassment by being brought on two different occasions before the Court, and on neither occasion did the complainant see fit to prosecute his case. On the last occasion,—that is to say, on the 9th July, even on the view taken by the Magistrate of the limited character of the sanction given by Mr. Justice Broughton, there was nothing to prevent the complainant from adducing evidence against the accused.

The counsel for the complainant admits that he refused to go on with the case, in the hope that the Magistrate would allow an adjournment to enable him to refer to Mr. Justice Broughton, and obtain from him an expression of opinion as to the nature of the sanction granted by him. It seems to us that the Magistrate was quite within his right in refusing to allow the trial to stand over, and his order of discharge was in accordance with law.

[453] This order is no bar to further proceedings being taken by the petitioner, if he be so advised, and this renders interference by this Court, under s. 15 of the Charter Act, entirely unnecessary.

This application is dismissed, and the rule discharged.

Rule discharged.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

PROVABUTTY DABEE (Plaintiff) v. MOHENDRO LALL BOSE
(Defendant).^{*} [24th June, 1881.]

Ancient Lights—Enlargement of Window—Obstruction—Notice—Delay—Mandatory Injunction.

Where a person, who has a right to light from a certain window, opens a new window or enlarges the old one, the owner of an adjoining house has a right to obstruct the new or enlarged opening, if he can do so without obstructing the old, but if he cannot obstruct the new without obstructing the old, he must submit to the burden.

A plaintiff entitled as of right to light and air through a certain window, subsequently enlarged it, and on the light thereto being interfered with by the defendant, gave him notice to remove the obstruction two days after it had been completed.

Held, that he had been guilty of no delay in taking steps to prevent the obstruction, and that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to remove it.

[R., U.B.R. (1897—1901), Vol. II, 126 (127).]

THE plaintiff, a Hindu lady, stated that she was the owner of a certain house, numbered 56, Panchanuntollah Lane, and that adjoining these premises to the north and west stood a house belonging to the defendant; that, in October 1880, the defendant, notwithstanding remonstrance, commenced to build a wall which when completed, obstructed a window in the north wall of her house, and deprived her of the access of light and air [454] to the room to which the said window belonged, an easement which the plaintiff claimed to have enjoyed without interruption for twenty years and upwards. She further stated, that, in building such wall, the defendant had dismantled the cornice of the terrace which rested on the north wall of her house; and after calling upon the defendant, on the 11th October, without success, to remove the said wall, she, on the 14th October, sent him a formal notice, and subsequently brought this present suit to compel him to remove the wall and to restore the said window and cornice to their pristine condition, asking at the same time for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from, in any way, interfering with the plaintiff's property, and in the alternative for damages.

The defendant denied the easements claimed, and stated that the window in question had been opened about seven years before the date of suit, by one Goonjaree Coomar Bose, with the consent of his (the defendant's) predecessor in title; and further denied the encroachment.

It appeared from the evidence that the window in the north wall had been in existence a sufficient time to give the plaintiff a right to claim the easement; but that, originally, the window had been of about 2 feet by 2½ feet in size, but that, ten or eleven years before the date of suit, it had been enlarged to 5 feet by 2½ feet. That, as regards the encroachment, it was clear, that the defendant had so built his wall as to encroach upon the plaintiff's cornice. That, as to the question as to whether the plaintiff had disentitled herself to an injunction by delaying to send to the defendant notice of her objection to the interference with her lights, it was shown, that she had sent notice to the defendant to remove the wall a day or two after it had been finished.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. Bonnerjee), for the plaintiff.—This is not a case of diminution, but of total obstruction, of light. If the window was opened with permission, as is stated in the written statement, then, on the authorities, the defendant would be out of Court. The original window was enlarged [455] a few years ago, and on the authority of Tapling v. Jones (1), if the defendant cannot obstruct one new light without obstructing the old one, he cannot obstruct at all. As to the alleged permission it amounts this: "you enlarge your window, and I will not obstruct it." It comes to a question of acquiescence; see Cotching v. Bassett (2). We allege an absolute encroachment as to the cornice, and that is apart from the question of light. A perfect title is not necessary to support the right.

Mr. Palit (with him Mr. Allen), for the defendant.—The case opened and proved is not that which is stated in the plaint. [WILSON, J.—To my mind it is a matter of serious importance, where there is a diversity between the case stated in the plaint and the case made out: but that is in cases where the plaintiff speaks from personal knowledge.] Supposing the window to have been enlarged, the plaintiff is not entitled to light and air—Cotching v. Bassett (2). Where the owner of a building, having ancient lights, replaces them by new larger windows, the Court will not interfere by injunction to restrain the owner of the servient tenement from obstructing them—Heath v. Bucknall (3). Tapling and Jones (1) applies only to the right of an owner to recover damages at law. [WILSON, J.—The case of Straight v. Burn (4) shows that Tapling and Jones (1) applies to the equitable as well as to the legal remedy.] The Court will not grant an injunction unless there has been substantial damage Aynsley v. Glover (5).

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—The plaintiff in this suit is the owner of the house No. 56, Panchanuntollah Lane, the defendant is the owner of the house No. 63 in the same lane; and as to a portion of the two houses, No. 63 stands immediately adjacent to and north of the north wall of No. 56. The plaintiff complains that, in the course of certain building operations which took place in No. 63, the defendant has built a wall so as to block up altogether the light to a window of the north wall of No. 56, by which light was afforded to one of the rooms of that [456] house, and has encroached laterally on the soil of No. 56, interfering with the cornice, which has been variously described by the witnesses as a brickband, a string course, and a sailing course.

The first question is, whether the plaintiff has shown a right to access of light through that window; 2ndly, whether there has been a lateral encroachment; and 3rdly, what is the remedy.

CIVIL.
7 C. 453.

The first question is of great importance to the plaintiff,—namely, whether she has a right to access of light through that window. If the window is twenty years old, she has acquired the right to light, subject to the question I shall refer to presently, as to the enlargement of the window. If the window is not twenty years old, she has not acquired that right.

On the part of the plaintiff a large body of evidence has been given : evidence of a satisfactory kind,—that is, evidence of the right class of persons. The first witness called by the plaintiff was Omritololl Gangooly, the owner of the premises No. 57, part of what was formerly No. 31, out of which several plots, including 56 and 63, the premises of the plaintiff and defendant, have been carved out. He says, that, from the earliest time, he recollects that that room was in existence, and the north wall, and a window in that wall. I think he speaks the truth. The next witness was Radha Gobind Chatterjee. He has lived a great number of years on the premises, and remembers the wall and the window. The next witness is Ramlall Loberaj, a very important witness ; he swears to having lived a long time in the house. His father was the family koberaj. I think he speaks the truth. The next witness is Preonath Mookerjee. He remembers the window and wall. The next was Nityanund Pyne. He remembers the wall and the window.

Some of the witnesses recollected the alteration to the window.

There are at least three persons, Omritololl Gangooly, Ramlall Mookerjee, and Preonath Mookerjee,—all of whom lived in the house and used the privy. That is evidence of a character which must carry very great weight, unless there be anything to discredit it.

Then we have the evidence on the part of the defendant of the man who was the intermediate owner of the premises Soorjee Coomar Bose. He must know whether this window [457] existed there at the time of his purchase or not. He must know, or have wilfully stated what was false.

He says there was no window down to the reading of the Mahabarat, and that he then made the window.

He is not an independent witness like those on the other side. He has acted under the defendant with reference to this very building.

The next witness was Mohendro Nath Dass, the previous owner of No. 63. He swears to the making of the window before the time in question. Mohendro Nath Dass is a man very much mixed up with the defendant in business matters, and he cannot be called an independent witness.

The next is an important witness, Khoda Nawaz, the mistry. He swears he was employed to open the window. He is by no means an independent witness. He was under the direction of the first witness, Soorjee Coomar Bose, and employed by him and by the Seal family ; and with regard to him it would take a very small slip of memory, or a very small perversion of fact, to mistake the enlargement of a window for the opening of a window. He has no books, he depends on his memory, and he might, without any intention of making a false statement, represent the enlargement of the window as the opening of it.

Then Rakbaldass Chunder says,—he has known the plaintiff's house for a very considerable number of years, and has not known the window before. I do not value the evidence of such witnesses. People who have no interest might not notice those things. The same remark applies to Kali Kurmokar.

The plaintiff's evidence is far more reliable and free from suspicion than that of the defendant's witnesses. I think it had been shown that

JUNE 24. there was an old window in this wall, which was enlarged at the Mahabarat reading.

ORIGINAL I find in favour of the plaintiff on the first question, whether she has CIVIL. acquired a right to access of light through this window.

The second question has been settled by Mr. Bayne's evidence. There was some doubt on the point till he was examined.

7 C. 453. On Mr. Walker's evidence the matter was left in some doubt. [458] He assumed that the wall rose from the ground. The plaintiff had better means of ascertaining, and she gave the same account as Mr. Bayne, though Soorjee Coomar said exactly the contrary. He said it was a wall built on foundations from the ground.

On the outer face of the north wall of the plaintiff's house, below the foot of the window in question, there was a string course projecting from the general surface of the wall. Mr. Bayne explained that the wall was made to rest on a beam, which was supported on one end on a back wall of the house No. 63, and on the other end by a pillar. The beam was on a level with this string course, and rested not in contact with, but above it, and in contact with the surface of the plaintiff's wall and built so up to the top. That shows an encroachment, because the defendant had no right to build beyond the outside limit of the plaintiff's building. On Mr. Bayne's evidence and the other evidence it is shown, that there was on the top of the building a cornice projecting over and described to be 5 to 7 inches in width. From Mr. Bayne's account it is clear that, to the extent of that cornice, there has been an encroachment.

He stated, that if there be a cornice there has been an encroachment to the extent of that cornice.

The third question is, what is the remedy. The plaintiff, whose light has been obstructed, is entitled to a mandatory injunction, unless she has disentitled herself to the right.

With regard to the law, the question is set at rest by the judgment of the House of Lords in Tapling v. Jones (1), and it is clear that if a man has a right to light from a certain window and opens a new window, the owner of an adjoining house has a right to obstruct the new opening if he can do so without obstructing the old, but if he cannot obstruct the new without obstructing the old, he must submit to the burden.

This window was enlarged. It appears to me that the defendant acquired no right to obstruct that window for that reason—[459] Straight v. Burn (2) and Aynsely v. Glover (3). Therefore, unless some other circumstances are shown to deprive the plaintiff of her right to an injunction, it seems to me she is entitled to an injunction.

The only other ground to disentitle her is delay. It is right to see the evidence on this point.

The evidence is that of Nobin Chand Bural, Shosheebhusun Chuckerbutty, and Trigonanath Mookerjee.

Nobin Chand Bural tells us that, having received a communication from the husband of the plaintiff, he saw the premises, and sent first a private note and then a formal notice to the defendant. Assuming that Nobin Chand Bural used proper diligence, and there was no delay, was Nobin Chand Bural's notice in proper time? It must be remembered that it was not the building on the place in question that was wrong. The defendant had a right to raise his building as high as he liked, so as not to obstruct the light. No one could interfere until it became apparent that the defendant was going to obstruct the light.

(1) 11 H.L.C. 290.

The work began on the 6th day of the poojah, and was finished the day after.

That is confirmed by the Sircar, who says that the building of the wall took two or three days.

Then he says he was sent by the plaintiff's husband, who came on the last day.

Then Trigonanath Mookerjee was called. He is the plaintiff's husband. He went to the defendant's premises and found them locked, and the next day he went to the place and saw the mistress, and the same day went to Nobin Chand Bural. I am of opinion that the plaintiff and all who acted with her acted with all diligence.

The proceeding of the defendant was a very rapid one, and the plaintiff gave formal notice to the defendant in proper time.

There was some obscurity as to whether the notice had been received by the defendant. The witness Mohendro Nath Dass [460] put that at rest, because he said, that he was told by the defendant himself that he had received a notice.

That the letter and notice were received by the defendant at the time is clear, for he has not chosen to go into the box to deny it.

I find there was no delay on the part of the plaintiff in taking steps to prevent the defendant from building his premises.

There was some conflict as to the state of the building at the time of the service of the notice. The Sircar says the walls were finished and the roof on, but that was impossible. The notice was given in a day or two after the wall was run up. It is impossible that in two days of roof could have been laid on and the floor completed.

I am quite satisfied that this wall and the other walls were completed, but that that was all.

I don't think, the plaintiff was guilty of any laches or carelessness. She gave notice as quickly as she could.

It appears to me that the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction she asks for, and that is an injunction requiring the defendant to remove so much of the building as obstructs the light of the window, and so much of the encroachment as interferes with the upper cornice of the plaintiff's house. Injunction to be, that defendant remove so much of his building as obstructs the light of the plaintiff's window or interferes with the upper cornice of the plaintiff's house.

The fact that the Raj of Chota Nagpore is an impartible one does not prevent the Maharaja for the time being from alienating a portion of it in perpetuity.

Under Act IX of 1871, sch. ii, cl. 127, the limitation for a suit by a person excluded from joint family property, to enforce a right to share therein, was twelve years from the time when the plaintiff claimed and was refused his share. Under Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, cl. 127, the limitation for such a suit is twelve years from the time the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff.

Held, that the period of limitation prescribed by the latter Act is shorter than the period prescribed by the former Act within the meaning of s. 2, Act XV of 1877.

[R., 10 A. 272 (278)=15 I.A. 51 (P.C.) ; 2 O.C. 348 (350).]

IN this suit the plaintiff, Narain Khootia, claimed to recover a one-third share of seven villages under the following circumstances. Juggernath, Gobind, and Ram Chunder were brothers, employed in the worship of Juggernath at Puri, in the district of Cuttack. The plaintiff alleged that he was the adopted son of Gobind; that certain villages belonged to his adoptive father and his father's brothers, under certain grants made to their ancestors by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore, for the performance of services in the temple of Juggernath. He further alleged, that the defendant No. 1, Lokenath Khootia, was the adopted son of Juggernath; that Soobadra, the defendant No. 2, was the daughter of Ram Chunder; that Juggernath, Gobind, and Ram Chunder, during their lives, enjoyed the property in question; and that, after their deaths, the defendant [462] No. 1, conjunction with the plaintiff's adoptive mother (Kumla), and Nilmoney, the mother of Soobadra, continued in possession of it. The plaintiff went on to say, that, after the death of Kumla and Nilmoney, the defendant No. 1 deprived the plaintiff of his share, and on the 11th September 1875, got his (defendant's) name registered on the Court of Wards of Pargana Chota Nagpore, as the sole owner of the entire property.

The plaintiff has, therefore, brought this suit to recover his one-third share from the defendant No. 1, making Soobadra a defendant, who, however, has not appeared to defend, and has taken no part in the proceedings. The defendant admitted that, as regards five of the villages claimed, a putro putrodik grant was made of them by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore to the three brothers, Juggernath, Gobind, and Ram Chunder; and he also admitted that, during their lives, they all used to perform the worship of the idol jointly out of the proceeds of the property. He further said, that Ram Chunder and Gobind died, one after the other, childless, and that, since then, he, the defendant No. 1, had been in possession of the property, and had performed the services without the interference of any of the family. He further stated that Maharaja Juggernath Sahi Deo, the son of the original grantor granted to him, the defendant, a registered deed in respect of the said five mouzas, and also another deed in respect of two other mouzas, which were claimed by the plaintiff, of which he had been in possession ever since, and that he had defrayed the expenses of the worship out of their proceeds. The defendant further denied that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Gobind.

The Deputy Commissioner dismissed the suit upon the following grounds: He considered that the original grant by the Maharaja, which the defendant admits to have been a putro putrodik grant, was resumable at the pleasure of each succeeding Maharaja. He found that, during the lives of the widows of Gobind and Ram Chunder, those ladies enjoyed the property in question jointly with the defendant No. 1 (the latter, however, performing all the religious services in respect of which the property was granted), and he seemed to [463] think, that, after the death of those widows, the defendant No. 1 had a right to appropriate the whole of the property, and that, by the grant, which was made to him by the succeeding Maharaja, the right to the villages became vested in him to the exclusion of the plaintiff and any other persons claiming under the original grant. He also seemed to think, the evidence showed the plaintiff would not be a fit person to perform the services of the idol; and lastly that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not been in possession of the rents for more than twelve years before suit, his claim was barred by limitation. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—[His Lordship here stated the facts above set out, and, having gone through the evidence, found, that, though there was sufficient proof that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Gobind, yet there was no sufficient proof of the plaintiff's title or possession. His Lordship then continued.]

If the case, therefore, had rested on the plaintiff's evidence we must have dismissed the suit, although not upon the grounds relied upon by the Deputy Commissioner.

We think, however, that the case must be decided upon the admission of the defendant No. 1. He admits distinctly that a putro putrodik grant was made by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpore to his own adoptive father, Juggernath, and his two brothers Gobind and Ram Chunder. The nature of such a grant is well known. It is an hereditary grant, in which all the members of a Mitakshara family would be entitled to share, and which would descend (from father to son) like any other ancestral property.

The defendant No. 1, who claims to be the adopted son of one of the original grantees, would have no better right to the [464] property than the plaintiff, who is the adopted son of another of the grantees; and we do not understand upon what ground the Deputy Commissioner supposes that such a grant is resumable at the pleasure of any succeeding Maharaja.

It may be, that the Raj of Chota Nagpore is impartible, and we believe that it is so; but that only means, that the Raj descends to the eldest son, and is not divisible amongst the other sons or grandsons of the Maharaja.

The fact that the Raj is impartible does not prevent the Maharaja for the time being from making grants of the land in perpetuity. As long, therefore, as there were any other of the descendants of the original grantees capable of taking under that grant, the defendant No. 1 had no right to appropriate the property to himself, nor had the Maharaja any power, as far as we can see, to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of the original grant, or to make any exclusive grant to the defendant No. 1. So long as the plaintiff's adoptive mother, Kumla, and Nilmoney lived, it would appear that they were allowed to share in the proceeds of the property; and we strongly suspect, that, after Kumla's death, the defendant No. 1 took advantage of the tender age of the plaintiff to deprive him of his rights, both as regards the property in question and his turn of worship, and to obtain for that purpose an exclusive grant to himself. It is clear from the evidence on both sides, that the plaintiff has taken some part in the services of the idol, although an inferior part to that taken by the defendant No. 1.

The only other point is with regard to limitation. It seems to have been considered by the Court below, that the ordinary twelve years' rule of limitation was applicable to this suit; but we think, that the appellant is right in his contention that the case comes under cl. 127 of the Limitation Act, as being a suit brought by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to a share therein.

It is true that, under the Act of 1877, the time in such a case begins to run when the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff; and it is probable that the plaintiff may have known that he was excluded from the property more than twelve [465] years before suit; but by s. 2 of the Act it is provided, that in any suit for which the period of limitation prescribed by that Act is shorter than the period prescribed by the Act of 1871, the suit may be brought within two years next after the 1st October 1877.

Now, under the Act of 1871, the twelve years under such circumstances would have been from the time, "when the plaintiff claimed and was refused his share" (see cl. 127). It does not appear in this case that the plaintiff ever claimed or was refused his share, at any rate until 1875, and consequently he had twelve years from 1875 within which to bring his suit. That period was shortened by the Act of 1877, because the time under the latter Act would run from the time when the exclusion first became known to the plaintiff; and therefore, under s. 2, the plaintiff was entitled to two years from the 1st October 1877 to bring his suit. He is, therefore, in ample time.

We have some doubt whether, having regard to the fact that this is a Mitakshara family, and that the plaintiff and defendant appear to be now the sole male members of it, the plaintiff has not a right to a larger share than he claims; but as he has abstained from giving the Court any information, we can only make a declaration, that he is entitled to hold the five villages jointly with the defendant No. 1 and any other persons who may be entitled under the original grant, provided that the share to which he is entitled does not exceed one-third of that property.

The appellant will be entitled to his costs from the defendant No. 1, in both Courts.

KALYTARA CHOWDHRAIN (Decree-holder) v. RAMCOOMAR GOOPTA (Judgment-debtor)* [25th May, 1881.]

Execution of Decree—Sale in Execution—Material Irregularity—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 274, 289, 311. 7 C. 466=9 C.L.R. 114.

Under ss. 289 and 274 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that a copy of the sale proclamation should be affixed to some conspicuous place on the property attached and the omission to do so is a material irregularity within the meaning of s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

If it is proved that the price obtained for property sold at an execution sale is greatly inadequate, and if it be also proved that there has been a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, the Court will presume that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequacy of price, until proof is given to the contrary.

Gopee Nath Dobey v. Roy Luchmeeput Singh (1) approved.

[Appr., 11 C. 74 (76); R., 11 A. 333 (336)=9 A.W.N. 115; 19 M. 219 (225); 1 O.C. 186 (187).]

THIS was an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Tippera, dated the 28th of February 1880, setting aside a sale in execution of a decree. The judgment-creditor, who was also the purchaser at the sale, appealed to the High Court and the appeal was decided on the 21st of August 1880. In their judgment the learned Judges (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) say:—"So far as the evidence goes, we think it clear that the price realized was very much below the proper value of the property sold. It is on record that, in addition to the decree-holder, who purchased, there were only two bidders; and this paucity of bidders, no doubt, accounts for this unfortunate result. Substantial injury to the debtor is, therefore, established; but the law (s. 311) also requires that such substantial injury must have been the result of some material irregularity proved to have taken place in publishing or conducting the sale. In the present case the irregularity complained of is stated to have been the omission to publish the sale-proclamation on the property attached by affixing it on some conspicuous place thereon." The learned Judges went on to say:—"Reading [467] s. 289 of the Civil Procedure Code with s. 274, we are of opinion that the sale-proclamation cannot properly be made, unless it be affixed on some conspicuous part of the property attached. Here the evidence shows that the sale-proclamation, though made by beat of drum near the debtor's cutchery, yet was not affixed on the cutchery itself, but only on a burh tree in Rampore Hat, the exact position of which, with reference to the attached property, is doubtful. As to this, it is contended before us, that it is not shown that this omission or irregularity was the direct cause of the small price bid at the sale. If strict proof were required of this, a sale would rarely, if ever, be set aside, although the gravest irregularity might have been committed, and although a grossly inadequate price might have been obtained. The best evidence on the point would, no doubt, be that of a person stating that he was prepared to attend and bid for the property; but that, although he was cognizant of the attachment, he was not informed of the sale, because no proclamation had been fixed up on any portion of the property. But it would be impossible for a Court always to insist on such strict proof, because the debtor would be nearly always unable to obtain it even if such evidence did exist. Whenever, therefore, there is any great inadequacy in the price obtained, and there is also proof that there has been some material irregularity in the sale-proceedings, a Court is always inclined to connect one with the other, and to presume that the substantial injury has been the result of the irregularity. Such is the principle on which the case of Gopee Nath Dobey v. Roy Luchmeeput Singh (1) was decided. Some cases have been brought to our notice, in which the Court required strict proof rather than presumption, but each case must be decided on the particular facts established. In the present case we think that it has not been shown that it was affixed in the manner required by law on any conspicuous spot within the attached property, because it has been left in doubt whether the burh tree in Rampore Hat is or is not within that property. If Rampore Hat is not within the attached property, then, in our opinion, there has been a material irregularity in the proclamation of sale, which may reasonably [468] be presumed to have caused the extreme inadequacy of price, which constitutes the substantial injury sustained by the debtor. The case will, therefore, be sent to the Subordinate Judge in order that the parties may have an opportunity of submitting evidence before him on this issue: 'Is the burh tree in Rampore Hat within or without the attached property?' After taking such evidence as the parties may produce, the Subordinate Judge will return the record with his findings thereon for the opinion of this Court." The Subordinate Judge, on the 5th of March 1881, found that the burh tree was not proved to be within the attached property, and returned this finding to the High Court. The appeal then came on for final disposal.

The judgments of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—Having found in concurrence with the lower Court that a copy of the proclamation of sale was not affixed to some conspicuous place within the property attached and to be sold, and that the very inadequate price realized may be fairly attributed to this omission, it becomes necessary to consider the point taken by the learned Counsel for the appellant that this was a formality not required by the law then in force. The proceedings were taken on the 30th July 1879, and were therefore to be regulated in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure as amended by Act XII of 1879. Section 289, as it now stands amended by Act XII, is to the following effect:—

"The proclamation shall be made in manner prescribed by s. 274 on the spot where the property is attached, and a copy thereof shall be fixed up in the Court-house; and in the case of land paying revenue to Government, also in the Collector's office."

(1) 3 C. 542.

It is contended by Mr. H. Bell, that the manner in which the proclamation is to be made on the spot refers merely to the [469] beating by drum, and that the provision made for the affixing of a copy of the sale-proclamation in the Civil Court and in special cases also in the Collector's Court, and the omission of any similar provision regarding a copy on the spot, indicates the intention of the Legislature not to require this formality. I am unable to accept this view of the law. A consideration of s. 289 as it originally stood will clearly show the reason for the addition made to it by the Amending Act.

"The proclamation shall be made in manner prescribed by s. 274 on the spot where the property is attached."

This is how the law was first expressed, and applying s. 274 to make a sale-proclamation on the spot where the property was attached, it was necessary to use the words of s. 274, that it should be "proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property, (i.e., the property to be sold) by beat of drum or other customary mode, and a copy should be fixed up in a conspicuous part of the property."

The law was altogether silent regarding the affixing of a copy of the sale-proclamation elsewhere. This omission was discovered, and accordingly an addition was made to s. 289, by enacting "and a copy thereof shall be fixed up in the Court-house, and in the case of land paying revenue to Government, also in the Collector's office."

This in no way affected the previous part of s. 289, which still remained in force. I cannot, moreover, suppose, that the Legislature can have intended to enact that the fixing up of a copy of the sale-proclamation on a conspicuous part of the property should be discontinued without some express provision to that effect, as it is one of the most important formalities in connection with the due publication of a proclamation, and is always necessary in the making of proclamation under other laws for other purposes, to supplement the proclamation by word of mouth after beating of the drum.

We therefore set aside the sale, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

MORRIS, J.—Assuming that Act X of 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879, regulates the procedure to be adopted in this case, I think that the construction put on s. 289 by my [470] learned colleague is the right construction. It seems to me that the Legislature never intended to discard one of the most important elements in the publication of a sale-proclamation, viz., the affixing a copy of the order of proclamation of sale on a conspicuous part of the property to be sold. Section 289, as originally drafted, by its terms, limited the making of the proclamation to "the spot where the property is attached," so it was to correct this apparent limitation that the Amending Act extended the mode of making the proclamation by adding the words "and a copy thereof shall be fixed up in the Court-house, and in the case of land paying revenue to Government, also in the Collector's office." These additional words, or at least the substance of them, are to be found in s. 274; and it is evident that, by supplying them to s. 289, the Legislature simply intended to prescribe the adoption of precisely the same mode of making the proclamation of sale as it had previously prescribed in s. 274, for making attachment of immoveable property.

Appeal dismissed.

Where it is optional with several joint lessors to avail themselves of a condition of re-entry upon breach of certain covenants, one or more of the lessors cannot insist upon a forfeiture without the consent of the others.

Held, therefore, in a suit which was brought for the cancellation of a mokurari lease, and the recovery of seer possession, on the ground of forfeiture for breach of covenant, that all the co-sharers should join as plaintiffs: and that as some of the co sharers, who were made defendants, appeared and opposed the cancellation of the lease, the suit must be dismissed.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for the cancellation of a mokurari lease, which had been granted by one Mussa-[471]mat Noorun, their predecessor in title, and for the recovery of seer possession of the land comprised in the lease. There were two sets of defendants,—the Singh defendants, and the Hossain defendants. The Singh defendants were the successors in title of the persons to whom the mokurari lease was granted. The Hossain defendants were those co-sharers who would not join as plaintiffs. The suit was based on the following passage in the kabuliat granted by the Singh defendants' predecessors.

"We shall not default any instalment. If any instalment is defaulted then we shall pay the salaries of the sazawals, motsuddee, and the peon (who may be deputed by the Sarkar), according to the list furnished by the Sarkar, together with interest on the defaulted instalment. If, notwithstanding the appointment of a sazawal, we fail to pay the rent of the Sarkar in full at the end of the year, then the said Sarkar shall be at liberty to take seer possession of the said mouza, and we, the declarants, shall have no claim in respect of the mokurari right to the said mouza. All the ordinary and extraordinary expenses incurred under the orders of the local authorities, Civil, Criminal, and Nizamut Courts, and Kanongoes, salaries of Chowkeedarees, &c., shall be paid by us, the declarants. The Sarkar shall have no connection whatever with the same. We shall not take possession of minhaee lands. We shall not, by our acts of oppression, force the tenants to run away. We shall not cut down fruit-bearing and non-fruit-bearing trees. We shall not allow any portion of the lands appertaining to the said mouza to be taken possession of by any other person. We shall not allow any extraordinary pyne or negar to be opened in the lands of the said mouza. If such things take place, then the said Sarkar shall have power to cancel the mokurari lease and take seer possession. In that case, we, the declarants, shall have no claim to the mokurari right, nor shall we have any cause to raise any contention."

The plaintiffs alleged that, notwithstanding the stipulations above set out, the Singh defendants had cut down and appropriated certain trees; that they had oppressed and driven off the land certain tenants whose names were given; that they had taken possession of certain lands not included in the mokurari lease, and allowed other lands, which were included in it, to be seized by the neighbouring proprietors; that they had allowed a new pyne and a new negar to run into the lands of a [472] neighbouring mouza; and that they had not paid their rent. The Hossain defendants did not enter any appearance. The Singh defendants denied the allegations of the plaintiffs, and, in addition, two of them, who had bought the interest of one of the plaintiffs' co-sharers (thus becoming themselves co-sharers with the plaintiffs) protested against the cancellation of the mokurari lease.

The Subordinate Judge found that every one of the plaintiffs' allegations was false; that they had forged documents to support their case: and he dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—The plaintiffs in this suit are some of the representatives in title of one Bibi Noorun, who granted a mokurari lease to the defendants' predecessors in title, so long ago as the 25th Bysack 1232.

The suit is brought to eject the defendants from the property upon the ground that they have been guilty of certain breaches of covenant; and that, consequently, under a condition of re-entry contained in the lease, they have forfeited their tenure. The other representatives of Bibi Noorun's interest, who are co-sharers with the plaintiffs in her estate, are averse to bringing this suit, and consequently they have been made defendants.

The Court below has dismissed the suit on several grounds and amongst others, that the defendants have not been guilty of the breaches of covenant with which they were charged.

From this decision the plaintiffs have appealed; and we think that we may dismiss the appeal upon this one ground only, that one or more of several joint lessors have no right to take advantage of a forfeiture against the will of their co-[473]lessors. The law is opposed to forfeitures; and unless we find that the right now claimed by the plaintiffs is clearly conferred upon them by the mokurari lease, we ought not to allow them to enforce it.

At the time when the lease was granted, Bibi Noorun was the sole owner of the property, and as such the sole lessor. Since that time her estate has descended to several persons, who are all joint owners of her interest, and jointly entitled to the rent of the mokurari. They are also jointly entitled to the benefit of the covenants, and of the condition of re-entry upon breach of those covenants, and it is optional with them all, whether they will take advantage of the condition or not.

The lease contains several covenants on the part of the mokuraridars, and then comes the forfeiture clause in this form: "If such things take place, then the Sarkar shall have power to cancel the mokurari lease and take seer possession." It is clear, therefore, that the lease does not become void upon breach of any of the covenants; but the lessor, or her assigns, may take advantage of the condition or not as they think proper.

Under these circumstances, by the English law, not only would one or more of the joint lessors have no right to take advantage of the condition without the consent of the others, but if the joint lessors had, by agreement, made a partition of their shares, the condition would be at an end, because only those entitled to the lessor's interest in the whole property could avail themselves of it (see Wright v. Burroughes (1) and Dumpor's Case (2), and cases there cited).

Whether a voluntary partition in this country would have the same effect, we are not called upon in this case to decide. But, quite apart from English law, it seems to us that, according to the just and reasonable construction of a condition of this kind, where it is optional with several joint lessors to avail themselves of the condition or not, one or more of those lessors cannot legally insist upon a forfeiture without the consent of the others. The case of Alum Manjhee v. Ashad Ali (3), to [474] which we were referred in the course of the argument, appears to be in point: but we think that no authority is required for such a position.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs; but we allow one set of costs only.

INDER PERSHAD SINGH (Plaintiff) v. CAMPBELL (Defendant).^{*}
[23rd March, 1881.]

Breach of Contract—Impossibility to perform a portion arising after execution—Suit to cancel such portion—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), chaps. iv and v.

A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant, for a specified number of years, in certain specified lands situated in different villages, with respect to a portion of which lands the plaintiff was a sub-tenant only. Subsequently, during the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent, and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him, under the above circumstances, to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled, on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part,—

Held that such a case came within the provisions of cl. 2, s. 56 of Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act) and that the mere fact, that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord and so retained possession of the land was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as to take it out of the provisions of that section.

Held also, that chap. iv of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act) did not apply to such a case, but that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought under s. 40 of that Act, inasmuch as the contract was evidence of different obligations --viz., to cultivate indigo in different villages.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiff to have a portion of a contract entered into between him and the defendant declared void, and to have the contract rescinded to that extent, [475] on the ground that, since it was entered into, the portion sought to be rescinded had become impossible of execution by reason of circumstances over which he had no control.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1735 of 1879, against the decree of W. Dacosta, Esq., First Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 14th May 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Gopinath Mathey, Munsif of Hajeepore, dated the 17th June 1878.

(1) 3 C.B. 699.

(2) Sm. L.C., 7th ed., 41.

(3) 16 W.R. 138.

By the contract, which was dated in the year 1874, the plaintiff agreed to grow indigo for the defendant for a period of nine years, from 1281 to 1289 F. S. (corresponding with the years 1874 to 1882), on 20½ bighas of land, 16½ of which were situated in Ruttonpoora, which he held under a sub-lease from the Bhatowlia Factory, and the remaining 4 in Mouza Keeralpore, of which he was the proprietor. In the year 1284 F.S. (corresponding with the year 1876-77), the Bhatowlia Factory was ejected from the lands in Ruttonpoora by the proprietor for the non-payment of rent, and consequently the plaintiff lost possession of his 16½ bighas, and was unable to carry out his contract with the defendant in respect of those lands.

He, accordingly, brought the present suit to be relieved of his liability under the contract to that extent, on payment of the sum of Rs. 33 to the defendant, being the zur-taccavee in respect of that portion of the contract.

The defendant contended, that it was perfectly open to the plaintiff to have paid off the rent, for the non-payment of which his immediate landlord had been ejected, and so retained possession of the 16½ bighas, the subject of the contract; that it was also open to him to fulfil his contract by sowing indigo in other lands which he held, in lieu of those in Ruttonpoora; that, in addition, the contract provided that, in the event of the plaintiff failing to fulfil any of the terms or to sow indigo as stipulated, he was to pay damages at the rate of Rs. 20 per bigha, and that, in pursuance thereof, he, the defendant, had already recovered the loss sustained by him by reason of a breach of the contract by the plaintiff in the year 1283 F.S. (corresponding with the year 1875-76), and that the plaintiff was bound to pay up the loss at Rs. 20 per bigha for the year 1284 to 1289 (1876—1882) before the contract could be cancelled. In addition the defendant stated that he had lent the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 600 on a bond bearing interest at the low rate of 6 per cent. per annum, repayable in nine years, in consideration of the terms of the contract; and that the plaintiff had never offered [476] even to return the Rs. 33, or asked to have the contract partly cancelled as prayed for and that, consequently, for all these reasons, the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he sought.

It appeared also, that the defendant had sued the plaintiff for the recovery of damages for the breach of the contract in the year 1284 F. S. (1876-77); and that a third suit had been filed by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the value of indigo at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha from the years 1282 to 1284 F.S. (corresponding with the years 1874 to 1876).

These three suits were dealt with by the Munsif at the same time, and he held that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought in the present suit; and, accordingly, gave him a decree with costs, but dismissed his suit for the value of the indigo, and gave the defendant a decree in his suit for damages for the breach of the contract in 1284 (1876-77), but in respect of 4 bighas only, and not for the 20½ as claimed.

The defendant, accordingly, appealed against the decree in the present suit, and the Subordinate Judge reversed the decree in the Original Court, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff now specially appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

APPEL-LATE CIVIL.

7 C. 474 =
8 C.L.R. 501.

MITTER, J.—In 1874, the plaintiff, Inder Pershad Singh, engaged to sow $20\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land with indigo yearly for nine years (1281—1289 F.) in consideration of a sum of Rs. 41 paid to him, at the rate of Rs. 2 per bigha, by Mr W. Campbell of Karhar Factory. The land lies in two villages, viz., $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas lie in the village of Ruttonpoora, the plaintiff being an under-tenant of this land; and 4 bighas in the village of Keratpur, the plaintiff being the proprietor of this land.

In 1284 F. (1876-77), the proprietor of Ruttonpoora ejected [477] the superior tenant, under whom the plaintiff held the $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas in that village: and the plaintiff's occupancy of that land ceased then.

The present suit is brought by the plaintiff to be relieved from the contract entered into in 1874 so far as the $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas in Ruttonpoora is concerned. It appears from the judgment in this case, that the defendant, Mr. Campbell, brought a suit, No. 59 of 1878, against the plaintiff, to recover damages for non-fulfilment of the entire contract. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit, No. 100 of 1878, as stated above, and another suit, No. 101 of 1878, for the price of indigo-plant supplied in 1282, 1283, 1284 (1874—1876), and the three suits were tried together in the Munsif's Court. The suit against the plaintiff was decreed in respect of the Keratpur lands, but dismissed as regards the Ruttonpoora lands. The plaintiff's suit No. 100 was decreed, and his contract cancelled in respect of the $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land in Ruttonpoora. The plaintiff's suit No. 101 was dismissed.

On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff's suit No. 100 was dismissed on two grounds: (i) that the impossibility to perform the contract by reason of loss of the $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas was caused by the plaintiff's neglect to preserve the lands, and therefore that cl. 2, s. 56, Act IX of 1872, did not apply; (ii) that the grounds upon which a contract can be rescinded as laid down in s. 35, Act I of 1877, are not applicable to this case.

The plaintiff has, therefore, brought this appeal to this Court. We are not definitely informed as to the subsequent history of cases Nos. 59 and 101, as being cases of a Small Cause Court class, they would not ordinarily come before this Court in Second Appeal.

The grounds of appeal are directed against the two propositions laid down by the Subordinate Judge.

The appellant relies on s. 56, Act IX of 1872, and argues that his contract has become, since it was made, impossible. There can be no doubt that his contention is strictly true, and the second clause of the section plainly shows that the contract to the extent that it had become impossible had become void. The Subordinate Judge considers that the plaintiff, or promiser, could have prevented the impossibility; but on this point we are [478] not in possession of full materials for an opinion. The mere fact that the plaintiff might have paid up the amount of the decree against the Bhatowlia Factory, and thus saved the factory and himself as its tenant from ejectment, is not enough. We are informed it was a decree for rent and for ejectment under s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869; but it may be that the decree was for a sum which the plaintiff could not reasonably be expected to pay, considering that he would have no security for his payment. The law which allows any one interested in protecting a tenure from sale to pay up a decree, gives him full security in the shape of a right to take possession of the tenure (s. 62, Beng. Act VIII of 1869); but this is not the case under s. 52 of the same Act. We cannot, therefore, say that the plaintiff lost his land from an omission made by his own neglect, and in our opinion the contract became void as to the $16\frac{1}{2}$ bighas when the proprietor of Ruttonpoora came into possession of the land.

We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that chap. iv of the Specific Relief Act does not apply. Strictly speaking, the plaintiff had no right to sue for rescission of the contract in part. We must refer back to the Contract Act itself to see under what circumstances a contract is voidable or terminable, and we think that none of the provisions for voiding or terminating a contract exist in this case. But we think that chap. v of the Specific Relief Act may be resorted to. We have shown that the contract was void in part; and s. 35 allows a person against whom an instrument is void to sue to have it adjudged void. Section 40 provides for the partial cancellation of an instrument, which is evidence of different rights and obligations, and we think that the instrument in this case is evidence of an obligation to cultivate indigo in different villages, and that it is a proper case for the application of s. 40. We shall, therefore, cancel it so far as it obliges the plaintiff to cultivate $16\frac{1}{2}$ out of 20 bighas with indigo, or to cultivate land in Ruttonpoora village.

It is only necessary to remark, that the defendant's contention that the plaintiff is bound to make good the full quantity of land from lands in his possession in villages other than Ruttonpoora, is not borne out by the terms of the contract.

[479] The instrument specifies the lands in each of the two villages of Ruttonpoora and Keratpur, which the plaintiff engaged to sow with indigo; but while it provided for the substitution of other lands for those contracted for in Keratpur, of which the plaintiff was a proprietor, it is silent as to the substitution of lands for those in Ruttonpoora, of which he was only a tenant.

We think it unnecessary to provide for compensation to the defendant beyond the restoration of the consideration of Rs. 33, or Rs. 2 per bigha for the lands in respect of which we cancel the contract, and this sum the plaintiff has offered to pay.

We reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and restore that of the Munsif. The defendant will pay the plaintiff's costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

*Before Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field.*GOLAM ALI (Defendant) v. KALI KRISHNA THAKUR (Plaintiff).*

[10th May 1881.]

Suit for Arrears of Rent—Accretions to Parent Tenure—Rate of Rent—Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1.

In a suit for arrears of rent, it appeared that the defendant had, in 1260 (1853), executed a kabuliat, in which the boundaries of the land were given and the rate of rent fixed, and which provided that the land might be measured after 1261 (1854). In 1281 (1874), a measurement was made, and it was found that some land had accreted; and the plaintiff now sued for rent for the accreted land, at rates varying with its nature and quality.

Held, that the accreted land should be governed by the terms and conditions applicable to the parent tenure, and that the same rent was payable for it as for the land included in the kabuliat.

The meaning of Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, is, that the incidents of the original tenure attach to the increment.

[Commented on, 11 C. 696 (698); R., 26 C. 739 (743).]

THIS was a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent for the year 1282 (1876) of a howla held by the defendant in Chur Panchkati, Pargana Edilpore, of which the plaintiff was zemindar. On the 4th Bhadro 1260 (27th August, 1853), the defendant [480] executed a kabuliat, in which the boundaries of the howla were given, and the quantity of land, after deduction of rugba, was stated to be three drones eight kanis, the amount assessed upon which was Rs. 280, at the rate of Rs. 5 per kani. It was stipulated in the kabuliat that the land within the boundaries might be measured after Pous 1261 (December 1854) upon fifteen days' notice to the defendant, and that the rent of the land found in excess of that stated in the kabuliat would be at the rate of Rs. 5 per kani.

Since the execution of the kabuliat, some land had accreted to the howla by the recession of the river on the south and west. In 1281 (1874), the land was measured by the plaintiff, and it was found that the total quantity of land within the boundaries given in the kabuliat, after deduction of rugba, was seven drones nine kanis one ganda and one cora. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant was in possession of about twenty drones two kanis of accreted land, and now sued for the recovery of rent at the rate of Rs. 6 per kani for the land within the boundaries, and at rates varying with the nature and quantity of the land for the lands without the boundaries. The defendant contended that the quantity of land within the boundaries described in the kabuliat had been understated; that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any higher rate than that stated in the kabuliat for the accretions; and that the rates demanded for the accretions were neither customary nor fair. The Subordinate Judge found that the accretions ought to be assessed at the pargana rate, but as the plaintiff had failed to prove that rate, he gave him a decree at the same rate for the accretions as that paid for the parent tenure.

Mr. Branson, Mr. W. M. Dass, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose appeared for the defendant in both appeals.

* Appeal from Original Decrees, Nos. 219 and 265 of 1879, against the decree of Baboo Promotho Nath Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Furridpore, dated the 23rd September, 1878.

The Advocate-General (The Hon'ble G. C. Paul), Baboo Kali Mohun Dass, and Baboo Ram Sikha Ghose, appeared for the plaintiff in both appeals.

[481] The judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PONTIFEX, J.—I am of opinion that the accretion, which, under Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, must be considered an increment to the defendant's tenure, should be governed by the terms and conditions applicable to the parent tenure as provided in the kabuliat under which such parent tenure is held. 7 C. 479 = 4 Shome L.R. 149 = 8 C.L.R. 517.

The defendant having admitted his liability to pay some rent, the question to be decided is, what construction should be placed on the words "increase of rent to which he may be justly liable" contained in that Regulation.

The use of the word increase seems to show that consideration is to be given to the rent reserved on the parent tenure. If rent was assessable without reference to the rent reserved on the parent tenure, then I should have expected it to have been expressed as follows:—"The accretion shall not be exempt from the payment of rent which may justly be assessed upon it."

Supposing a perpetual tenure had been created at a pepper-corn rent, without any salami or bonus being taken, the holder of such tenure would, in effect, be an absolute proprietor, so far as the zemindar was concerned, and, as absolute proprietor, would, in my opinion, be as absolutely entitled to any accretion.

Supposing, on the other hand, that a perpetual tenure had been created at a rent less than a rack or fair holding rent, and that a salami was taken on its creation, it might be right, if the circumstances of the lease permitted it, to take such salami into consideration when assessing the rent upon any accretion.

But that is not the present case.

In the kabuliat under which the defendant holds, it seems to me that the cost and trouble of reclamation were intended to be recouped by the tenant's privilege to hold rent-free for two years after the land first came under culture, as to any land taken into cultivation subsequently to the lease; and as to the lands specially referred to in the kabuliat as then under cultivation, by the reservation for the first three years of a [482] smaller rent than that the final rent of Rs. 5. And apart from evidence to the contrary, I must consider that the final rent of Rs. 5 was at the date of the kabuliat considered as a fair holding or rack-rent after the expenses of reclamation had been recouped.

It may be true that, by reason of general improvement and progress, a fair holding rent at the present day would be more, and perhaps greatly more, than Rs. 5. But there is nothing to show that Rs. 5 was not a fair rent in 1261. And it must be remembered that though the accretion may have formed only lately, the tenant's right to it under the Regulation accrued in 1261; and if it had immediately thereafter come into existence, a perpetual rent as of that date would have been assessed upon it. Why should the zemindar's position be improved and that of the tenant deteriorated, merely according to the date of the accretion coming into existence?

I think, therefore, that the new accretion, or so much of it as has admittedly been in cultivation for a considerable period, should be assessed at the fair holding rent of Rs. 5 as established in 1261.

If the plaintiff's contention was correct, that the rent of the accretion should be assessed at the rate prevailing in the parganas, the defendant would get no greater benefit under the Regulation than a stranger; but, in my opinion, it was intended that he should have all the benefit of his already assured position.

It seems to me that a Court would have extreme difficulty in arriving at any rent intermediate to the pargana rate and the rent reserved on the parent tenure.

If any intermediate rent was now adjudged, the zemindar might, on the same principle, insist at some future time that it would be liable to enhancement. But this would be contrary to the conditions governing the parent tenure. And if the accretion happened to be very large in extent, in comparison with the area of the parent tenure (and in this case the plaintiff claims that it is more than three times as large as the parent tenure), the value of the latter might almost vanish in consequence of the high rate assessed upon its offspring, in other words, the offspring might swallow up its parent.

[483] If, on the other hand, the zemindar could not insist on future enhancement, it is difficult to see on what principle he can now claim a higher rate of rent than that reserved on the parent tenure.

I think, therefore, the accretion should be assessed at the same rate as the parent tenure, and this renders it unnecessary for me to decide within what limits the parent tenure and the accretion respectively lie. But I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the report of the Amin in this case is not reliable, partly for the reasons stated by the Subordinate Judge, and partly because the reasons stated by the Amin for fixing the southern boundary where he places it, seem to me insufficient and inconclusive. I also agree with the Subordinate Judge, that if pargana rates were assessable on the accretion, there is no sufficient evidence of what such rates should be. It may possibly be, that if Government were to assess a higher proportionate revenue on these accretions than is borne by the parent tenure, the plaintiff might have an equity to ask for contribution in that respect from the defendant. But that case has not yet arisen, and we are unable to deal with it, as at present no revenue has been assessed by Government on these accretions. I think that question should be left open till the Government assesses the accretions.

The learned Advocate-General, for the plaintiffs, placed some reliance on the remarks of the Judicial Committee in the former suit between the parties, in which it was decided that the plaintiffs were not entitled to possession of these accretions. Those remarks were as follows:—"The defendant was a middleman, and not a ryot, having a right of occupancy within the meaning of s. 17, Act X of 1859, or liable to enhancement under that section. If liable to enhancement at all, he could only be enhanced according to the pargana rate of the rents payable by similar holders."

The observations are somewhat ambiguous, but it is sufficient to say that they were not intended to settle the question, and were made, apparently, without the question having been really argued.

According to our decision, the defendant's appeal fails in its [484] main objection to the decision of the Subordinate Judge. And I am also of opinion that it fails with respect to the manner in which the howladari rukha should be calculated, the decision of the Subordinate Judge in this respect being correct.

In only one point is the defendant entitled to succeed in this appeal. The Subordinate Judge says in his judgment,—

"The defendant claims a further deduction of 202 bighas, which have been found by the Amin to be of the description called halli and dhalli; but as this land would shortly be fit for cultivation, it cannot be exempted from assessment."

But I think that, in accordance with the terms governing the parent tenure, rent would not become payable until two years after the land is taken into cultivation.

We have been informed by the plaintiff's advisers that this has been altered on review; but if it has not, the defendant's appeal will succeed in that respect. In other respects it fails. The plaintiff's appeal fails in all respects. Under the circumstances, I think the parties ought to bear their own costs in this Court.

FIELD, J.—I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered by my learned brother. Upon the essential question to be decided in this case, I desire to make a few observations. That question really is this. At what rate is rent to be assessed in the alluvial increment to an under-tenure? In order to the decision of this question in this particular case, there are three points which it will be well to notice. In the first place, the rent on the original howla is a fixed rent, not capable of enhancement. This has been settled as the result of previous litigation between the same parties. In the second place, the alluvial increment is admittedly liable to assessment of rent, and there is now no contention before us, that the landlord is not entitled to receive additional rent for the additional land added to the under-tenure. In the third place, the under-tenure was created on the 4th Bhadro 1260,—that is, the 19th August, 1853, and therefore there is no question of the applicability of s. 51 of Reg. VIII of 1793, which applies only to talooks or tenures in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The ground being thus cleared by the disposal of [485] these preliminary points, the question to be decided further resolves itself into this,—whether the rent on the alluvial increment is to be assessed in proportion to, or upon the same principle as, the rent payable upon the usli, or original under-tenure; or is to be assessed according to the rates payable in the vicinity for similar under-tenures, or howlas, and without regard to the rent payable upon the usli, or original under-tenure. Now the words of Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, are these:—"When land may be gained by gradual accession, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed." What is the meaning of the term 'tenure' in this context? Tenure is usually regarded as a mode of holding property, as, for instance, in the expressions 'tenure by grand serjeanty,' 'copyhold tenure,' 'feudal tenure,' 'tenure in burgage,' 'tenure by cornage,' and it is impossible to disconnect the meaning of the word 'tenure' in any particular context from the ordinary incidents, subject to which the particular tenure is held. Then again the word 'tenure' is used not only of the mode in which property is held, but also of the land itself which forms the subject of the tenure. The very clause of the Regulation which we have to construe in this case, furnishes an example of this double meaning of the term 'tenure,' which is used in the first sense in the passage, "it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed." And in the second sense in the passage, "provided that the increment of land thus obtained shall not entitle the person in possession of the estate or tenure, &c." Looking at the whole clause of the Regulation, I think the reasonable construction to be put upon the words "land . . . gained by gradual accession : . . . shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed," is, that the incidents of the original tenure attach to the increment. We have then immediately after these words a double proviso. The first proviso is concerned with the assessment of Government revenue. As to this, I shall have something to say hereafter. The second proviso is this:—"Nor if annexed to a [486] subordinate tenure held under a superior landlord, shall the under-tenant, whether a khodkusht ryot holding a mourosi istemrari tenure at a fixed rate of rent per bigha, or any other description of under-tenant liable by his engagements, or by established usage, to an increase of rent for the land annexed to his tenure by alluvion, be considered exempt from the payment of any increase of rent to which he may be justly liable." It appears to me, that the words 'payment of any increase of rent' have a certain reference to the rent payable on the original tenure. Then as to the words 'may be justly liable,' it is important to bear in mind that when Reg. XI of 1825 was passed, the Legislature had not laid down any rules for the enhancement of rent, or the assessment of land with rent. We know from State papers of the period of the Permanent Settlement, and the period subsequent thereto, that this was done designedly, as Government wished to avoid the appearance of interfering too much between the newly-created proprietors and the ryots, thinking, moreover, that the relations between them would be gradually settled by contract and by the proof of usages and customs in the Courts of justice. Thus we have in Reg. VII of 1799, s. 15, cl. 8, a provision to the following effect:—"The Courts of justice will determine the rights of every description of landholder and tenant when regularly brought before them, whether the same be ascertainable by written engagements or defined by the laws and Regulations, or depend upon general or local usage which may be proved to have existed from time immemorial." It thus appears to have been the intention of the Legislature to leave these questions of assessment and enhancement of rent to be settled by mutual agreement or local usage. This will, in all probability, explain the fact that the Legislature did not, in cl. 1 of s. 4 of Reg. XI of 1825, lay down any more precise rule for determining the rent to be paid for land forming an alluvial increment to an under-tenure than that contained in the words 'increase of rent to which he may be justly liable.' These words—"justly liable"—appear to me to have a certain reference to the principle upon which the rent may have been assessed upon the original tenure. For example, rent is, in many cases, made pay-[487]able as a lump sum for a given area. In other cases, it is assessed according to a classification of the land. In the case of a jungle-bori howla, a howla or lease of waste land, which must be reclaimed before it is fit for cultivation, it is usual to let a considerable area of land for a certain lump sum as rent. In the case of land wholly or partly brought under cultivation, it is not unusual to assess the rent with reference to the different classes of land and the different crops which the land is capable of producing. These are well-known usages of the country, and it appears to me, that the words 'justly liable' indicate an intention on the part of the Legislature that the rent payable for the alluvial increment should be settled with reference to the circumstances of each particular case, regard being had to the agreement of the parties in respect of the original tenure, where there is such an agreement, and where there is no such agreement, to any usage proved to be applicable to such tenure.

Then as to the proviso which has reference to the assessment of Government revenue, and the argument which has been addressed to us on this point, it may be observed that, when Reg. XI of 1825 was passed, there was a previous Regulation in force, that is, Reg. II of 1819, which provided for the assessment of Government revenue upon alluvial increments to estates. Clause 1, s. 3 of that Regulation enacted as follows:—"All lands which, at the period of the Decennial Settlement, were not included within the limits of any pargana, mouza or other division of the estate for which a settlement was concluded with the owners, not being lands for which a distinct settlement may have been made since the period above referred to, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title of the nature specified in Regs. XIX and XXXVII of 1793, and in the corresponding Regulations subsequently enacted, are and shall be considered liable to assessment in the same manner as other unsettled mehals, and the revenue assessed on all such lands, whether exceeding 100 bighas or otherwise, shall belong to Government." The second clause of the same section further provides, that "the foregoing principles shall be deemed applicable not only to [488] tracts of land such as are described to have been brought under cultivation in the Soonderbuns, but to all churs and islands formed since the period of the Decennial Settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period, whether from an introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers, or the gradual accessions of soil on their banks." That Regulation, therefore, distinctly laid down the principle that alluvial increments to permanently-settled estates are liable to assessment for Government revenue; but it did not enunciate the principle upon which that Government revenue is to be assessed. This is a matter provided for by the executive orders of Government, or of the Board of Revenue; and it is further a matter over which the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction. It may, however, be assumed, for the purpose of deciding this case, that the revenue to be paid to Government upon the alluvial increment is assessable without reference to the amount of revenue payable upon the original estate. If, then it may be argued, rent should be assessed on the alluvial increment according to the rate payable upon the usli, or original under-tenure; and if this rent should be so small that it will not suffice to meet the Government revenue which the Settlement Officers may assess upon the same alluvial increment regarded as an increment to the revenue-paying estate, is it not unjust to the zemindar that he will thus be forced to hold this addition to his estate at a loss? If this question is asked in the interests of Government, the answer is a very simple one,—viz., that if, by reason of the rent payable on the alluvial increment being less than the Government revenue, the alluvial addition, or the original estate with the alluvial addition (whether both are included in a single new engagement with Government), becomes unprofitable to the zemindar, the result will be a Government sale, and the avoidance of the under-tenure as the result thereof, whereupon the unencumbered estate will, in the hands of a purchaser at such sale, presumably yield sufficient to pay the revenue and afford a reasonable profit. But Government is no party to this case, and therefore it is unnecessary to decide this question so far as Government is concerned. Then so far as regards the zemindar, [489] the case contemplated by the argument has not yet arisen, for it has been admitted at this hearing that Government has not yet assessed any revenue upon the alluvial increment. The fact of Government revenue having been assessed upon the alluvial increment is, therefore not a necessary element for consideration in the case which we have to decide. But it may be important to point out that the new case, which will arise when revenue is assessed on the alluvial increment, is provided for by an Act of the Bengal Council,—namely, Act VIII of 1879. Under the provisions of s. 7 of this Act, the rent recorded as demandable from an under-tenant in all estates under settlement is to be determined by the Settlement Officer in accordance with certain rules therein prescribed. One of the questions which the Settlement Officer has to determine in order to settle this rent is this, whether the under-tenure is binding as against the Government or not? and upon the decision of this question will depend the amount of rent which is to be recorded as demandable from the under-tenant. Under s. 10 of the same Act, every under-tenant is liable to pay the rent so recorded as demandable from him, unless he can prove in a civil suit that such rent has not been assessed in accordance with the provisions of the Act; and under s. 11, if the Court modifies or sets aside such rent, it is to proceed to determine the rent payable by the under-tenant in accordance with the provisions of the same Act. The direct object of these provisions is to secure a reasonable proportion between the revenue payable by the zemindar to Government and the rent payable by the under-tenants to the zamindar. It will thus appear that it may possibly be open to the parties at any future time, when the Government proceeds to settle the revenue payable upon the alluvial increment, to re-open the question of the rent to be paid in respect of such increment, and to have such rent re-assessed under the provisions of s. 7 of the Bengal Act with advertence to the amount of Government revenue made payable upon such alluvial increment. It appears to have been the intention of this Act to enable the Settlement Officer to readjust the rent of under-tenures when such rent had been previously fixed at an amount insufficient to meet the [490] revenue subsequently assessed. Whether the Legislature has used language sufficient to effectuate this intention, and whether this particular under-tenure falls within the operation of the Act, it is no part of our duty on the present occasion to decide. I will only observe that our decision—proceeding as it does upon the present circumstances of the case, i.e., while Government revenue has not been assessed—does not anticipate the assessment of revenue, and does not decide whether or not such assessment will have the effect of making the defendant 'justly liable, for any other or higher rent. With reference to the provisions of the Regulation, and apart from the question of Government revenue, I have myself no doubt that the alluvial increment ought to be assessed with rent on the same principle as rent is, by the contract of the parties, payable upon the original, or usli, under-tenure.

SREE RAM CHOWDRY (Petitioner) v. DENOBUNDHU CHOWDRY
(Opposite Party).^{*} [25th May, 1881.]

Appeal—Award—Order refusing to file Award—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 525, 588.

Matters in dispute were referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court. An award was made, and upon an application under s. 525 of the Civil procedure Code to file the award, one of the parties showed cause why the award should not be filed, and the Subordinate Judge held the objection to be good.

Held, that no appeal lay.

BABOO Rashbehary Ghose, for the petitioner.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter, for the opposite party.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.), which were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PONTIFEX, J.—The parties before us referred certain matters [491] in difference between them to arbitration without the intervention of the Court.

The arbitrator having made his award, one of the parties applied, under s. 525 of the Code, that the award should be filed in Court.

Notice having been given under the section to the other party to the reference, he came in and showed cause, within the objections mentioned in ss. 520 and 521, or some of them, why the award should not be filed.

The Subordinate Judge has made a full enquiry into such objections, and in an elaborate judgment has decided that all the objections but one are untenable; but considering that one of such objections was fatal to the validity of the award, he refused permission to file it.

Against his order of refusal the applicant, under s. 525, has appealed to us, and has been met with the preliminary objection that there is no appeal, because the order is not a decree, nor is it an order appealable under s. 588.

Now it was held by a Full Bench of this Court under Act VIII of 1859, that such an order under s. 327 of that Act was not appealable; Baboo Chintaman Singh v. Roopa Koor (1); see also Vyankatesh Ramchandra Jogehar v. Balajirao bin Anandray (2).

Section 327 of the old Code corresponded to s. 525 of the present Code. Each of these sections directed that the application under it should "be numbered and registered as a suit." But at the date of the decision referred to, the section of the old Code differed from the section in the present Code, by "directing that the application should be written on the stamp paper required for petitions."

This difference does not seem to me material, nor has it been insisted on in argument. The words which are relied on as giving an appeal are the same in both sections,—namely, that “the application is to be numbered and registered as a suit.”

But, notwithstanding these words, the Full Bench in the case referred to, held, that there was no appeal; and there being nothing in the definition in the present Code of that which is [492] to be considered a decree, which would affect or prevent the application of the decision in that case as an authority in the present case, we are bound by it to hold that the preliminary objection must prevail.

The words “to be numbered and registered as a suit” would, in fact, seem to have been used merely for administrative purposes.

The same words used in s. 331 were not considered by the Legislature to attach by themselves all the incidents of a regular suit to the proceeding there directed. For that purpose other words were used in that section, as follows:—“The Court shall proceed to investigate the claim in the same manner and with the like power as if a suit for the property had been instituted, and every order made in such investigation is declared to have the same force as a decree, and shall be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise.”

In the case of Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee (1), a Full Bench decided, that where, in a case under s. 327 of the old Code, the lower Court had ordered an award to be filed, an appeal would lie from such order; and it would be open to the appellant to show that the paper which had been filed was not legally an award. But having regard to the last words of that section corresponding with s. 526 of the present Code, I confess I have my doubts as to the soundness of that decision. For s. 325 of the old Code and 522 of the new Code seem to me equally intended to prevent an appeal in the analogous cases, where the Court has given judgment according to the award,—namely, in cases under s. 506 of the present Code, where, during the pendency of a suit, a matter in difference in the suit is referred to arbitration; or under s. 523, where the parties have agreed to a reference out of Court, and upon application before award, an order has been granted for the agreement to be filed in Court.

It is true that, in cases under s. 525, the parties cannot obtain the advantages of the provisions contained in ss. 518 and 520 and therefore an appeal might be more necessary under s. 525 than under s. 522.

But in my opinion this goes to show that it was not intended [493] that an award should be filed under s. 525, if either of the parties to the reference showed cause against it by affidavit or verified petition within the provisions of s. 520 or 521. In such cases, of which the case before us is an example, I think it would be the duty of the Court, without inquiring into the validity of the cause so shown, to refuse the application to file the award and to leave the applicant to his remedy by suit, having regard to the fact that the Court has no power to deal with the award under s. 518, or to take action by remitting the award under s. 520.

This was the procedure pointed out by Mr. Justice Paul in the case of Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee (1). It is not the course which has been followed by the lower Court in the present case; but as the lower Court refused to file the award, no injury or inconvenience results, because, notwithstanding such order, any of the parties to the reference may proceed to enforce the award by regular suit: Vyankatesh Ramchandra Jogekar v. Balajira bin Anandray (1). But if the lower Court had ordered the award to be filed, grave inconvenience and possible injustice might have resulted. In the present case we are bound, in my opinion, both by authority and on principle, to hold, that the preliminary objections must prevail; and we must, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Before leaving the subject I wish to express my opinion with respect to s. 522.

It is of course clearly right that the decision of the tribunal chosen by the parties should be final, provided it is not open to any of the objections referred to in ss. 518, 520 and 521; but I fail to see the expediency of refusing the parties an appeal from the decision of the lower Court on the objections taken under ss. 520 and 521. Questions raised under those sections are generally of very considerable delicacy and difficulty; and there seems to me no reason why the decision of the original Court, perhaps the lowest Court of all, should be final with respect to them. The finality of the Court's decision on these questions is altogether a different matter from the finality of the award if unobjectionable under ss. 520 and 521: [494] and I fail to see any reason why a judgment on an award under chap. xxxvii of the Code should be treated differently from a judgment in a suit to enforce an award—why the one should be final as to the matters referred to in ss. 520 and 521, while the other should be open to appeal on the same matters.

The consequence of this difference must necessarily be, that parties will be slow to avail themselves of the other advantages which they might derive by proceedings under chap. xxxvii.

FIELD, J.—This is an appeal against an order rejecting an application for filing an award, such application having been made under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877. A preliminary objection has been taken that no such appeal will lie, and in support of this objection, the Full Bench decision in the case of Chintamun Singh v. Uma Kunwar (2) has been relied upon. The judgment in that case is very brief, and is as follows:—"It appears to the Court that an order rejecting an application to file an award under s. 327 of Act VIII of 1859 is not a decree: therefore it is not appealable as a decree. It is simply an order rejecting an application to file an award. Then is it one of the orders in respect of which an appeal is provided by the Act? We can find no right given to appeal against an order refusing to file an award. We do find a right of appeal given in certain other cases and against certain orders, such as an order rejecting a plaint, but no appeal is given with regard to orders rejecting an award." Sections 525 and 526 of the present Code correspond with s. 227 of Act VIII of 1859. Now, it is clear that the Full Bench decision proceeded upon two grounds, —(i) that the order rejecting an application to file an award was not a decree: (ii) that it was not an order against which an appeal was given by the then Code of Civil Procedure. It appears to me that, unless we can find words in the present Code of Civil Procedure, the effect of which is that an order must now be regarded as a decree, or that such an order has been made an appealable order by the new Code, no such appeal will lie. The question then is, has the Legislature used any language in the present Code which shows an intention to alter the

- Now, that it is not an appealable order, follows at once from the fact APPEL- that it is not mentioned amongst the orders made appealable by s. 588 as LATE amended by Act XII of 1879.
- CIVIL. Then is it a decree, regard being had to the new definition of decree — contained in the amending Act XII of 1879? That definition is as follows:—
- 7 C. 490= "Decree means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right 9 C.L.R. 147. claimed, or defence set up, in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal." Is an application under s. 525 a 'suit' within the meaning of this definition?
 The Civil Procedure Code passed in 1877 and the Limitation Act passed in the same year draw a clear distinction between 'suits' and 'applications,' and this very application under s. 525 is to be found in the second schedule of the Limitation Act (see art. 176) which deals with applications.
 This would seem to show that this particular application is not to be regarded as a suit. But we must further consider the following words of s. 525:—
 "The application shall be in writing, and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants." Have these words the effect of converting the application into a suit for all intents and purposes, or do they merely mean that, for the purposes of entry in the register of civil suits prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, and of classification of the business of the Courts, and for these purposes only, the application is to be regarded as a suit? It appears to me that the latter is the true meaning of the words. In support of this view, I may refer to s. 331 of the Code, which provides that the claim made by a person other than the judgment-debtor to be in possession of attached property on his own account, or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, is to be "numbered and registered as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant."
 That these words alone do not convert such a claim or application into a suit for all intents and purposes, appears clear from the words, which follow in the same section—namely, that "the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim [496] in the same manner and with the like power as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree-holder against the claimant under the provisions of chap. v, and shall pass such order as it thinks fit for executing or staying execution of the decree. Every such order shall have the same force as a decree, &c." Now it is clear that these words, which I have just quoted, would have been unnecessary if the effect of the words "shall be numbered and registered as a suit" were to convert the application into a suit for all intents and purposes. I think, therefore, that an application under s. 525 is not a suit within the definition of 'decree' so as to make the order passed upon such application a decree. A further argument may be found upon an examination of ss. 520 to 526 of the present Code. Under s. 525 there is (i) an arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award made thereupon; (ii) an application to the Court that such award be filed; (iii) a notice to the parties to the arbitration other than the applicant to show cause why the award should not be filed; and then (iv) under s. 526, there is the hearing at which the other parties may, if they desire, show cause. Now what are the questions to be dealt with at this hearing? Although under
 s. 525, the grounds upon which cause may be shown are not limited or specified, it is clear from s. 526 that the only ground upon which cause can be shown is some one of the grounds mentioned, or referred to, in

s. 520 or 521. What the Court then has to deal with on the day of hearing is, whether any of the grounds mentioned in s. 520 or 521 are satisfactorily shown. It may here be observed that, in s. 327 of the old Code, there was nothing to limit specifically the grounds upon which cause might be shown. The language of that section was general—"if no sufficient cause be shown against the award." The new Code has substituted for these general words the more precise words—"if no ground such as is mentioned, or referred to, in s. 520 or 521 be shown against the award," which limit and define the cause to be shown. Then, when the Court has dealt with the ground or grounds mentioned, or referred to, in s. 520 or 521, is there any appeal against its decision? The Full Bench case, as already pointed out, decided that there was no appeal under the old [497] section (327). The only difference between the language of that section and the language of the present sections (525, 526) is in the limitation (as above pointed out) of the grounds upon which cause may be shown. From this change of language it appears to me that there is no intention to be gathered of changing the law as settled by the Full Bench case.

Sections 520 and 521 contain the grounds upon which an objection may be made to an award made by an arbitrator appointed by the Court in a pending suit at the desire of the parties. It is to be borne in mind that there is in this country no compulsory reference to arbitration, and there is no essential distinction between an arbitrator appointed by the Court at the desire of the parties under s. 506 or under s. 523, and an arbitrator appointed by the parties themselves without the intervention of the Court, except in this, that the arbitrator appointed by the Court is under the direction of the Court in the discharge of his functions. Is there an appeal against an order of the Court refusing to remit an award for reconsideration under s. 520 or refusing to set aside an award under s. 521, that is, in the case of an award made by an arbitrator appointed by the Court? Clearly there is no appeal against either of such orders as interlocutory orders, for no such appeal is given by the amended s. 588. Then, with reference to the case of Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindaban Tewaree (1), is there an appeal against either of such orders by way of appeal against the final decree? The case just quoted is an authority that, under the old Code, there was such an appeal; but under the new Code this appeal appears to have been taken away, for s. 522 enacts that the Court is to give judgment according to the award when it has decided neither to remit the award for consideration, nor to set it aside; that upon the judgment so given a decree is to follow; and then come these words:—"No appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award." These words differ from the words of s. 325 of the old Code for which they have been substituted, viz.,—"In every [498] case in which judgment shall be given according to the award, the judgment shall be final." The words "according to the award" excluded from finality matters not falling within their purview.

The negative words of s. 522 of the present Code appear to me to go further, for they take away an appeal in every case except the particular cases in which it is expressly allowed. The result of the change of language seems to be, that if the Court, having refused to remit the award for reconsideration, or having refused to set aside the award, gives judgment according to the award, and a decree follows upon this judgment, the person against whom such decree is passed cannot go to the appellate Court and ask that Court to say, that the original Court either ought to have remitted the award for reconsideration or ought to have set it aside. It may be argued that, as an appeal is thus taken away in the case of the person who has unsuccessfully contended that an award ought to have been remitted, or ought to have been set aside, it is only reasonable to suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature to allow no appeal to the person against whom such contention has proved successful. If this be so, it follows that, in the case of an award made by an arbitrator appointed by the Court, there is no appeal upon any matter mentioned, or referred to, in ss. 520 and 521, whether the Court decides for or against an application to remit or set aside an award: and in this event it may seem reasonable to suppose that the Legislature did not intend to give an appeal in the case of an award made by an arbitrator not appointed by the Court, when it has refused an appeal in the case of an arbitrator appointed by the Court. But it is not necessary, for the purpose of the point now before us, to adopt this part of the argument as to there being no appeal when an application to remit or set aside an award made by an arbitrator appointed by the Court has been granted. There is no express alteration in the provisions of the Code on this point. The only alteration in the language of the old section made by s. 522 of the new Code has been pointed out, and from this alteration there is no intention to be gathered of giving an appeal and altering the law as settled by the Full Bench decision in Chintmun [499] Singh v. Uma Kunwar (1). In considering the difference between the old and the new law, I have not overlooked the omission of the following words in s. 327 of the old Code, viz., "shall be written on the stamp-paper required for petitions to the Court, where a stamp is required for petitions by any law for the time being in force." These words were concerned with the stamp revenue, and were repealed by the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870, and have no connection with the present subject. The conclusion then at which I arrive is that the law as settled by the Full Bench case has not been altered by the present Code of Civil Procedure, and that the preliminary objection must prevail. At the same time I am bound to say that this is a conclusion to which I come most reluctantly, because it appears to me that, although it is very desirable to uphold awards when properly made, the matter contained in ss. 520 and 521 is matter upon which it would be just and reasonable to allow either party, when defeated, to resort to an appellate Court.

Appeal dismissed.

SHAHEBZADEE SHAHUNSHAH BEGUM v. FERGUSON.

[21st and 28th July and 1st August, 1881.]

Public Officer—Official Trustee—Notice of Suit—Tortious Acts—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 2, 424—Official Trustee's (Act XVII of 1864).

The Official Trustee is a 'public officer' within the definition given in s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The cases in which a public officer is entitled to notice of suit under s. 424 of the Code, are those in which he is sued for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties, and the object of giving notice is that if a public body or officer entrusted with powers happens to commit an inadvertence, irregularity, or wrong, before any one has a right to require [500] payment in respect of that wrong, he shall have an opportunity of setting himself right, making amends, restoring what he has taken, or paying for the damages he has done.

The Official Trustee, therefore, is not entitled to notice of suit, when the question to be decided relates to the rights of the cestuis que trustent in respect of the trust-fund and not to a wrong committed by him.

THE plaintiff in this case claimed to be entitled to a share in a certain trust-fund, of which the defendant, the Official Trustee of Bengal, was trustee. The trust was one created by the Government for the benefit of some of the descendants of Tippoo Sultan, and contained an ultimate trust in case of failure of heirs for the benefit of the Secretary of State for India. No notice of the suit had been given to the defendant, who, in his written statement, pleaded that he was entitled as a 'public officer' to two months' notice of the suit under s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Stokoe for the plaintiff.—The Official Trustee does not come within the class of public officers intended to be included with the provisions of chap. xxvii of the Civil Procedure Code. He has no connection with Government. He is not subordinate to any person. It is not necessary for him to make a reference to the Government before answering a plaint. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—The object of the provisions in this chapter is to enable the Government to determine whether they will defend a suit against one of their servants, who is being sued for a tortious act which he has committed.] Yes, the provisions are similar to cases contained in various English Statutes. If the Official Trustee is a public officer, he can only come under the last clause of s. 2, the definition section of the Code, as an officer "remunerated by commission for the performance of any public duty." All the officers referred to are those who have the interests of Government under their charge. They are divided into distinct classes—(i) every Judge, (ii) covenanted servants, (iii) commissioned officers, (iv) officers of Courts of justice, (v) jailors, (vi) police officers and health officers. The last clause deals with several classes of public officers doing duties on behalf of Government, and it would be a singular result to [501] find that the Legislature having enumerated different classes of Government servants as public officers, should, in the last clause, mean to refer to another and totally different class of officers. 'Public duties' are those in which the Government has an interest. It cannot be said that the Government is interested in this case, although the Secretary of State for India is a party. The Official Trustee takes this trust under a private deed. There are two deeds,—in one the Official Trustee is the trustee, in the other private persons, and in both there is an ultimate trust for the Secretary of State. It cannot be said that, in the second deed, the trustees are public officers. No one can compel the Official Trustee to accept a trust. The only duties imposed upon him are those referred to in s. 32 of the Official Trustee's Act, and then the leave of the High Court must first be obtained under the Act: he is not entitled to notice: it is only under s. 424 of the Code that the right can be claimed. There is a material distinction between the definition of 'public officer' in the Civil Procedure Code and the definition in the Penal Code. The same classes are referred to in both Codes, and the definition in the Civil Procedure Code is taken with slight verbal alterations from the Penal Code; but the Penal Code has a further clause which is meant to define municipal officers. The duties they have to perform are of a more public nature than those which the Official Trustee has to perform. But these persons are not 'public officers' within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, and it would be anomalous if the Official Trustee, whose duties are of a less public nature, should be held to be a public officer.

The office of Official Trustee was created in order to remedy the inconveniences occasioned by the death, absence, or refusal, or incapacity of trustees to act. He is an 'official' trustee; his duties are not public, but private. He cannot be compelled to accept a trust. Under the previous Official Trustee's Act, XVII of 1843, the Official Trustee could be compelled to take a trust.

The object of giving notice is to enable an officer who has committed a wrongful act to make amends without going into Court, and the suits of which notice must be given are those in respect of tortious or quasi-tortious acts: Addison on Torts, [502] 4th Edn., pp. 726—764; Umphelly v. McLean (1), Davies v. The Mayor of Swansea (2), Davis v. Curling (3), Fletcher v. Greenwell (4), Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board (5), Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton (6).

Mr. Handley for the defendant, the Official Trustee.—Chapter xxvii of the Code does not say that the suits of which notice must be given are only those in respect of tortious acts. The case of Selmes v. Judge (7) shows, that, in order to entitle a public officer to notice, it is not necessary that he should have committed a wrongful act. There the defendant had merely received money. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—The action was to recover money illegally demanded of the plaintiff by the defendant, and paid by him for a highway rate levied by the defendant. He had done an illegal act.] The Official Trustee ought not to be in a worse position than a Collector acting as the agent of the Court of Wards, who, when sued for acts done in that capacity, is entitled to notice: The Collector of Bijnor v. Munuvar (8).

CUNNINGHAM, J.—As to the question raised by the Official Trustee, I am of opinion that he is not in the present suit entitled to the notice provided by s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code. He would appear to me to fall within the last words of the definition of 'public officer' given in s. 2 of the Act, inasmuch as he is "remunerated by fees or commission for the performance of a public duty," that duty being imposed upon him by the Official Trustee's Act, 1864, as holder of an office to which he is appointed by the Chief Justice. The Officer appointed under Act XVII of 1864 replaced "the Registrar or such other officer of the Court" as the Court selected as Official Trustee under Act XVII of 1843. The Official Trustee's scale of remuneration in the case of transferred trusts is fixed by law (s. 11); he is precluded from being a co-trustee, or from investing funds otherwise than in Government securities, or as the [503] Court directs, or from holding a religious trust; the office is a corporation sole, the interests of one trustee vesting forthwith in his successor; his books are to be inspected by the Chief Justice, who can make rules for the safe custody of trust-funds or the forms of the Official Trustee's accounts and statements and the custody of securities. He submits his accounts annually to the Chief Justice, who has them audited. Lastly, the executor or administrator of an infant or lunatic, to whom a gift or legacy is made, or the trustee of any such gift or legacy, may, with leave of the Court, transfer it to the Official Trustee, who must, thereupon, take charge of it. All these circumstances appear to me to indicate that the Official Trustee is, in the mode of his appointment, the character of his duties, the limitations by which he is restricted, and the control to which he is subject, a public officer; and accordingly he would, in my opinion, be entitled to the notice provided in s. 424, if it could be shown that suits such as the present are within the purview of chap. xxvii of the Code. But I do not think that they are. The words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" must be read in the light of the numerous English decisions which have been passed in cases where public officers, companies, &c., are entitled by Statute to notice; and it appears from these that the cases in which notice is necessary are invariably cases in which a public officer is sued for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties; and the object, as described in Attorney-General v. Hackney Local Board (1), is, that if a public body or officer entrusted with powers happens to commit an inadvertence, irregularity, or wrong, before any one has a right to require payment in respect of that wrong, he shall have the opportunity of setting himself right, making amends, restoring what he has taken, or paying for the damages he has done, or, as was said by Lord Ellenborough in Theobald v. Crichmore (2), to protect persons acting illegally, but in supposed pursuance of the law, when the illegality has arisen from ignorance or inadvertence.

The rule that the notice is confined to suits of this description [504] was taken for granted in Davies v. The Mayor of Swansea (3), where Willes, J., then counsel for the defendant, conceded that, in an action brought for breach of a specific contract, no notice was necessary.

In the case referred to by Mr. Handley—Selmes v. Judge (4)—the action was brought in respect of an admittedly illegal act done by the defendants, and the question raised was, whether in doing it they bona fide intended to act in pursuance of these powers.

Reading chap. xxvii in the light of the rulings of the English Courts, I conclude that the intention was to give to Government, as represented by the Secretary of State, and to the servants of Government in the discharge of their public duties, the same protection as English Statutes confer on many public officers and bodies, viz., that when it is alleged that they have committed an illegality in the discharge of their duties, they shall have time and an opportunity of making amends before the matter is brought into Court. This view is, I think, borne out by the entire chapter, and is strengthened by the provision in s. 426 with reference to Government electing whether it will undertake the defence or not.

The actions here referred to seem to me to differ essentially from those in which the Official Trustee is joined, often formally, often as a friendly party, for the purpose of deciding what his duty as Official Trustee is in some particular, or of arming him with the necessary authority to do some act which he cannot do on his own responsibility. In one sense in this case, the action may be said to be brought for the wrongful refusal to do some act which the plaintiff is entitled to have done; but in another sense, viz., for the disposal of the real issue raised between the parties to this suit, their respective legitimacy, he need not really be a party at all, and in any case, it is impossible to regard such a suit as in any sense brought for damages, and I do not, therefore, consider that it falls within the provisions of s. 424.

[505] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field.

NUFFER CHUNDER BHUTTO (Plaintiff) v. JOTENDRA MOHUN
TAGORE AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [13th June, 1881.]

Damages—Inundation—Embankments—Liability to Repair—Beng. Act VI of 1873—Regs. II, VIII, and XXXIII of 1793—Reg. VI of 1806—Reg. XI of 1829—Act XXXII of 1855.

In a suit for damages caused by the overflow of a river through an embankment on the defendants' land, it appeared that the defendants held under a kabuliati from Government, which provided that the zemindar should not object to pay rent on the score of drought or inundation; that he should bear all losses incurred on that account; and also, that he should do embankment work at the proper time, and should be liable for loss from negligence. It did not appear whether the embankment was in existence when the kabuliati was granted. It was proved that the defendants received an annual sum from Government as a contribution to the repairs of embankments, but such payment was not provided for in the kabuliati, and no evidence was given as to the terms of the agreement under which it was paid.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 363 of 1880, against the decree of A. J. R. Bainbridge, Esq., Judge of Moorshidabad, dated the 17th November 1879, reversing the decree of R. K. Sen, Esq., Munsif of Berhampore, dated the 30th June 1879.

Held, that there was no common law liability to repair imposed on the defendants.

That, it not having been proved that the embankment in question was in existence at the date of the kabuliat, the defendants were not liable ratione tenuræ and that if the sum paid by Government was in consideration of the defendants' maintaining the embankment in question, and if the terms of the agreement under which it was paid showed that it was intended to impose the obligation to repair for the public benefit, the defendants would be liable.

Regulations and Acts relating to embankments in Bengal considered.

THE defendants in this case were the zemindars of Pargana Rukunpore, which contained a village called Rameshpore, bounded on its west side by the hill-stream or river Daroka. The plaintiff was the patnidar of Belun, lying alongside and to the north of Rameshpore, and also bounded on its west side by the Daroka. The plaintiff complained that the Daroka [506] having burst into Rameshpore through its south side, had thence inundated Belun; and asserting that the zemindars of Rukunpore were bound to maintain embankments to keep out the Daroka, claimed damages against the defendants, on the ground that, in consequence of their neglect to maintain proper embankments along Rameshpore, injury had been caused to Belun by the invasion of the water through Rameshpore. The defendants held then zemindari under a kabuliat from the Government, dated the 30th May 1794, which contained the following provisos:—"I shall not object to pay the full rent on the score of drought or inundations. I shall bear all losses on that account." And "I shall do embankment works of the said mouza at the proper time. Should there be any loss from my negligence, I will bear the same." The plaintiff contended that, under these covenants, the defendants were bound to repair. The defendants denied that any liability to repair was imposed on them, and contended that the object of the covenants was to save the Government revenue in case of loss by floods. It was proved that the defendants received an annual sum of Rs. 733-1 from Government as a contribution to the repairs of the embankments in the pargana; but no evidence was given as to the terms of the agreement under which it was paid. The Munsif held, that the defendants were bound to keep up the embankment, and gave the plaintiff a decree for damages. This decree was reversed by the District Judge, and the plaintiff now appealed to the High Court.

The following judgments were delivered:—

PONTIFEX, J. (who, after stating the facts of the case as above, continued):—Now if the defendants are liable, their liability must exist—

1st.—By the original or common law of the land, or

2nd.—By prescription, or

3rd.—Ratione tenuræ, or

[507] 4th.—Under an obligation of public concern, for the observance of which public money is paid to them.

With respect to 1st, the original or common law liability, no authority has been adduced to show that any such liability exists; and even if it did exist, it would scarcely apply beyond the repair of the ordinary or natural bank of the river, and would probably carry with it the correlative obligation of contribution to the expense of repairs by all parties protected or benefited. But the Daroka is a hill-stream liable to sudden freshets : and the plaintiff claims that the defendants are bound not only to preserve that natural bank, but to erect and maintain an artificial embankment without any liability on the part of the owners of Belun to contribute to the expense thereof. I am of opinion, therefore, that the defendants are not liable by the original or common law.

Next, with respect to 2nd, or liability by prescription. This could only be established by evidence, and the lower Appellate Court has found, and indeed it is admitted, that there is no evidence to support a liability by prescription.

Thirdly, with respect to 3rd, or liability by ratione tenuræ. If it had been proved that the embankment on the south side of Rameshulpore was in existence on the 30th of May 1794, the date of the kabuliat under which the defendants hold Rukunpore from the Government, I am inclined to think the defendants might be liable at the suit of the plaintiff in the same way as the Corporation of Lyme Regis were held liable at the suit of a stranger in the case of Mayor of Lyme Regis v. Henley (1).

Now the kabuliat contains two clauses with respect to inundations : The first clause is—"I shall not object to pay the full rent on the score of drought or inundation. I shall bear all losses which shall be incurred on that account."

This clause was evidently intended to protect the Government against any claims by the zemindar for remission of rent on account of losses by inundation.

But at a much later part of the kabuliat occurs this other clause,—"I shall do embankment works of the said mouzas at [508] the proper time. Should there be any loss from my negligence, I will bear the same."

If this was intended, as the defendants argue, to protect the Government from claims for remission, it would be surplusage. Another meaning must, therefore, be sought for. It may be said that it was intended only to protect the Government by preserving the security for their rent intact. This might be a fair argument if the zemindari was in the neighbourhood of a large and destructive river, which might not only inundate, but absolutely obliterate it, making it an unproductive waste of water. But this does not seem to be the character of the Daroka, and besides, this argument might be pushed further to show that it was equally the interest of Government to preserve the adjacent settlements. It is difficult to understand why the Government imposed the liability under the 2nd clause, unless it was for the public benefit,—that is, the benefit of all those whose lands would be protected by the embankment ; and the fact that the Government made the settlement permanent, would be a sufficient consideration for the obligation.

But though the Munsif held that this particular embankment was in existence at the date of the kabuliat, he seems to me to have arrived at that conclusion upon insufficient evidence ; and I am inclined to agree with, as we are bound by, the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon this question of fact, that the embankment in question has not been proved to have been then in existence, and if it was not in existence, I do not think the zemindar would be bound to maintain it by the terms of his kabuliat. I am, therefore, of opinion that the defendants are not liable ratione tenuræ.

(1) 2 Cl. and Fin. 331.

Lastly, with respect to 4th, or liability under an obligation of public concern, with respect to which the defendants have received, and still continue to receive, public money for the purpose of keeping embankments in repair. The defendants admit that they received an annual sum of Rs. 733-1 anna from the Government as a contribution to the repairs of embankments in Pargana Rukunpore. This contribution must be payable under some agreement subsequent to the kabuliat, because it is opposed to its terms. The defendants do not produce the [509] agreement, or state for the repair of what embankments the contribution is made. But s. 36 of Beng. Act VI of 1873, referring to this contribution by the Government, speaks of embankments generally, and also refers to any embankment.

Now if the defendants receive this contribution by Government in consideration of maintaining the embankment in question in this suit, and if the terms of such agreement show that it was intended to impose the obligation for the public benefit, I am of opinion that they would be liable at the suit of the plaintiff on the principle of the Lyme Regis case (1). If, however, they can show that the agreement under which the contribution is made was solely for the benefit of the zemindars, which, looking to the terms of the kabuliat and the provisions of Act VI of 1873, seems to me, as at present advised, an unlikely conclusion, then the plaintiff would not be entitled to sue.

But no evidence has been given as to the date or terms of this agreement, or as to whether it affected this particular embankment. Assuming the agreement was not for the sole benefit of the zemindar, but was intended to impose an obligation of general and public concern, then, if it was general in its terms and applied only to embankments existing at its date, it would be for the plaintiff to show that this particular embankment did then exist. On the other hand, if the agreement contemplated the construction and repair of all embankments necessary for keeping out the river, it would be for the Court to decide whether this particular embankment was included within its scope, or rather, whether the particular inundation of which the plaintiff complains was caused by the zemindar's neglect of his obligations.

In my opinion, before dismissing the plaintiff's suit, some enquiry should have been made with respect to these matters. But, so far as I can see, no issue was raised in the lower Courts for this purpose, although the plaintiff raised the question. I would, therefore, remand the case to the Munsif's Court for the trial of these additional issues:—

1. When was the agreement as to contribution by Government referred to in Beng. Act VI of 1873 made, and what were its terms?

[510] 2. Did it relate to embankments generally, or to such as might be necessary for keeping out the river, or to such only as were in existence at its date?

3. Was the embankment, in question in this suit, in existence at the date of the agreement?

4. Was the obligation imposed by the agreement an obligation of general and public concern, and are the zemindars bound by it to repair the embankment in question so as to make them liable at the suit of the plaintiff for special damage occasioned by its breach?

Having tried these issues, the Munsif will reconsider his judgment; and if, and when the case goes on appeal to the lower Appellate Court, that Court must also try the issue already decided by the Munsif, but not yet tried by the lower Appellate Court, whether the inundation complained of by the plaintiff was caused by defects in this particular embankment, or was occasioned by defects in embankments at Guthla or elsewhere; and the lower Appellate Court will reconsider its judgment in the whole case. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence, and the costs of suit, including the costs of this appeal, will abide the result.

FIELD, J.—The defendants in this case are the zemindars of Pargana Rukunpore, in which is included the village Rameshulpore. The plaintiff is the patnidar of Belun, a village, which lies to the north of, and adjacent to, Rameshulpore. The plaintiff claims Rs. 506 as damages for the destruction of crops, in Belun, which, he alleged, was caused by the fact that the defendants, being bound to repair certain embankments along the bank of the river Daroka, neglected to do so; and, in consequence the waters of this river broke into Belun and inundated the plaintiff's village.

The plaint is not very scientifically drawn, but we find in it matter which may be construed so as to base the defendants' liability to maintain or repair the embankment upon one of the four following grounds, which are indeed the only grounds upon which it is possible to base it, viz.—

1. Common law.
2. Liability by prescription.

[511] 3. A duty created by the conditions of the original grant at the time of the Permanent Settlement.

4. A duty arising out of the circumstance of Government making an allowance for the particular purpose of repairing the embankments of the pargana.

Before dealing with these four questions, I propose to consider the Regulations and Acts which have from time to time, been passed by the Legislature upon the subject of embankments in these provinces, and some of which were referred to in the course of the argument in this case. There can be no doubt that the construction and maintenance of embankments were common in Mahomedan times; and were, to a certain extent, necessary in consequence of the physical features of the country. Many embankments were maintained by Government, and this for several reasons. The necessary works required skill and expenditure which were beyond the resources of private individuals; or the embankments were, especially in the district of Moorshedabad and its vicinity, on a large scale necessary and intended for the protection of the city, which was the seat of the Court, and the surrounding country. Naturally the construction, maintenance, and repair of such works were entrusted to the State officials immediately connected with the Court. Other embankments were maintained by zamindars, who, it will be remembered, were then officers of Government, and who were allowed to deduct the amounts expended by them from the revenue collected for, and remitted to, the Government.

When arranging the terms of the Permanent Settlement, the Government were very desirous that the revenue should be paid in one fixed sum; and that there should be no complication with miscellaneous petty charges, which had a constant tendency to increase. It appears to me that s. 72 of Reg. VIII of 1793 was directed to carry out this intention of Government. This section enacts as follows:—"The settlement is to be made, as far as possible, in one neat sum, free from any charges of moshaira, zamindari, amlah, poolbundi, cutcherry charges or others of a similar nature, it being intended that all charges incidental to the receipt of the rents of the lands, and independent of the allowances of the officers of Government and [512] expenses attending the collection of the public revenue, shall be defrayed by the proprietors from the produce of their lands." I do not read this section as reciting or imposing any liability upon zemindars to construct or maintain embankments as a necessary incident of their zemindari tenure. I think it is concerned with a different object,—namely, that of making the land-revenue payable in one lump sum, not complicated with, or liable to, reduction by miscellaneous or petty charges. At the time of the Permanent Settlement, certain stipulations on the subject of poolbundi were inserted in some of the kabuliats executed by the zemindars. These stipulations were very wide and general, and did not exactly define the liability imposed thereby upon the zemindars who executed such kabuliats. There can be no doubt that the Government was, in 1793, to some extent alive to the importance of the construction and maintenance of these works. We find in the preamble to Reg. II of 1793 the following passage:—"The extensive failure or destruction of the crops that occasionally arises from drought or inundation, is in consequence invariably followed by famine, the ravages of which are felt chiefly by the cultivators of the soil and the manufacturers, from whose labors the country derives both its subsistence and wealth. Experience having evinced that adequate supplies of grain are not obtainable from abroad in seasons of scarcity, the country must necessarily continue subject to these calamities, until the proprietors and cultivators of the lands shall have the means of increasing the number of the reservoirs, embankments, and other artificial works, by which, to a great degree, the untimely cessation of the periodical rains may be provided against and the lands protected from inundation." In the Code of Regulations, all of which were passed upon the same day, viz., the 1st May, 1793, we find one Regulation specially concerned with the subject of embankments, namely, Reg. XXXIII of 1793. The preamble of that Regulation is as follows:—

"It being necessary that provision should be made for the annual repair of certain embankments in different parts of the country which have been considered as public works, and have been kept in repair at the expense of Government, in consequence [513] of their great extent, and the damage to which the districts and places, for the protection of which they have been constructed, would be liable from inundation, in the event of their not receiving the necessary annual repairs; and there being the strongest grounds for believing that if the embankments, reservoirs, and water-courses in the estates of individuals, which are not considered as public works, were enlarged or put into a proper state of repair, and new works of the same nature made where necessary and practicable, a sufficient portion of the crops might be preserved, in seasons of drought or inundation for the subsistence of the body of the people, and consequently the recurrence of the miseries which this country has so often suffered from famine be prevented, &c." Now this preamble contemplates embankments of two classes:—

1. Embankments which, as public works, were erected and are maintained by Government at its own expense.

2. Embankments in the estates of individuals which were not considered as public works, but which the Government contemplated being enlarged or put into a proper state of repair, and also contemplated the construction of new works of the same nature at the expense of individual zemindars.

Sections 2 to 7 of this Regulation provide for the maintenance and repair of the first class, which may be termed public embankments. The remaining sections (8 to 15) provide for the making of advances by Government to zemindars for the purpose of enabling them to construct new embankments and repair or enlarge the old ones. These advances were to be repaid with 12 per cent. interest; and the Collectors were to supervise the expenditure of the money so advanced. A penalty of 25 per cent. was imposed in case the works were not carried out. This Regulation contains no provisions for compelling zemindars to carry out the general stipulations as to poolbundi which were inserted in their kabuliats (in the kabuliat which has been before us in this case, this stipulation as to poolbundi is generally expressed, no particular embankments being specified as the embankments to be kept in repair). As a natural result, constant disputes arose between the zemindars and the officers of Government as to what embankments were to be repaired by Government and [514] what by private individuals. The zemindars were found unwilling to take advances upon the terms provided by the Regulation; and the old embankments were not maintained in proper repair, much less were new works undertaken, as the Government had hoped they would be. Fresh legislation became in consequence necessary within a very few years after the Permanent Settlement; and accordingly we find a new Regulation enacted in 1806, viz., Regulation VI of that year. The preamble to this Regulation contains the following significant recital:

"Whereas it is essential that further provisions should be made for the more effectual repair of the embankments which the zemindars and talookdars are bound, under the conditions of the Permanent Settlement of the land-revenue, to maintain at their own expense, &c." Sections 2 to 10 of the Regulation provide for the repairs and maintenance of public embankments, and the duty of carrying out these works was to be discharged by Embankment Committees. Then comes s. 11. This section invested the committees with a general control over the embankments which were repaired at the expense of the zemindars and farmers, as well as those which were maintained by the Government, and the section proceeds: "By this rule it is not intended to interfere with zemindars and farmers in the repair of the embankments situated in the lands held by them, so long as that duty shall be effectually and properly performed. The committees shall, however, be at liberty, whenever they may deem it necessary, to call upon any zemindar or farmer, either by a perwana from themselves or through the Collector, as may be deemed preferable, to make such repairs to the embankments situated in the lands of such zemindar or farmer as may be required. Should any zemindar or farmer, after the receipt of such perwana, neglect to make the necessary repairs, the committee shall submit to Government an estimate of the expense required for that purpose, and the repairs shall, in all such cases, be made by the officer of Government, and the expense recovered from the zemindar or farmer who was bound to keep the embankments in a proper state of repair." The remaining sections of this Regulation provide for [515] cuts and sluices in embankments, and for the prosecution and punishment of persons damaging or injuring embankments. No provision was, however, made for determining whether any particular embankment was one which the zemindar was bound, under the conditions of the Permanent Settlement, to maintain at his own expense. And further, we find no provisions as to the manner in which sums expended upon the repair of embankments were to be recovered from the zemindars, if they did not discharge them voluntarily. But in those days the rule laid down had only just commenced, and no zemindar would have thought of resisting the perwana of the Embankment Committee, or of the Collector, such a perwana, issued under the express authority of a Regulation, being regarded as an order of the Sirkar or Government. The power of the executive being thus brought to bear directly upon the zemindars in this matter, there appears to have been no further difficulty felt for a number of years, and we find no further legislation till 1829.

Reg. XI of that year merely abolished Embankment Committees, and transferred their duties to such officers as might be appointed by the Governor-General in Council. We have nothing then till we come to Act XXXII of 1855, which repeals the previous Regulations, and substitutes amended provisions therefor. The provisions of this Act are briefly as follows: A public embankment was defined to be an embankment now or hereafter kept up by the officers of Government at the expense either of Government or of any private individual. In many instances zemindars, in order to escape the responsibility and trouble of maintaining and repairing embankments by their own agents, had compounded with Government to have the work done by the officers of Government who had charge of the public embankments. It is matter of history that the Raja of Burdwan gave up the annual sum of Rs. 60,000, which, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, was deducted from his jama in consideration of his undertaking the duty of poolbundi. But to return to the Act of 1855, a Superintendent of Embankments was appointed under the provisions of this Act, and he was vested with large powers of effecting improvements—(i) by taking over private embankments, (ii) by removing those which [516] prove obstructive to drainage, &c., (iii) by changing the line of any public embankment or making a new one, and (iv) by enlarging, &c., any embankment. The Revenue authorities were now for the first time vested with exclusive jurisdiction in all matters provided for by the Act, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was expressly excluded. There was also a provision in s. 6 that the cost of keeping up private embankments taken under Government was to be charged upon persons bound to keep up such embankments. But in this Act, as in previous enactments, no provision is made for deciding in any particular case whether any individual embankment is to be repaired at the expense of Government, or at that of the zemindar in whose estate it is situated. The rest of the Act provides for compensation to persons injured by the works, sluices, and cuts, for specifications and estimates of the expense of keeping up the embankments maintained at the cost of the zemindars and others, and for the recovery of these expenses as arrears of revenue. The law remained in the state in which this Act of 1855 left it until 1873, when Act VI of that year was enacted by the Bengal Council. The Act repealed Act XXXII of 1855. It defined a public embankment to be an embankment maintained by the officers of Government. The main features of this Act were these:—(i) The powers of the Superintendent were transferred to the Collector, and enlarged for the construction of new works and for improvement. In fact, by the Act of 1855, and more especially by this Act of the Bengal Council, the Collector was invested with authority similar to that exercised by the Commissioners of Sewers in England under the 6 Henry VI, c. 5; 3 & 4 Will. IV, c. 22; 4 & 5 Vict., c. 45; 12 & 13 Vict., c. 50; 23 & 24 Vict., c. 51, and other Statutes. (ii) The costs of all works executed under the Act were to be borne rateably by the zemindars of the estates in which were situated the lands benefited or protected by the repairs or works executed.

Similarly, in England, all persons whose property derives any advantage from the works of the commissioners may be assessed in respect of that property: Soady v. Wilson (1). The zemindars [517] were empowered to levy a certain proportion of these expenses from the tenure-holders who were subordinate to them. Now it may be contended that the adoption of this principle of rateability in this Act amounted to a virtual renunciation on the part of Government of this principle which, as I have pointed out, had existed in former enactments,—the principle, that is, of making individual zemindars personally liable for the costs of maintaining those embankments which were situated in their estates. Now, from what has already been said, it will be seen that the change thus made in the law had the effect of introducing into this country a principle which has long existed in England, and has been recognized and regulated by the Statutes of Sewers, under which the burden of keeping up sea-walls, embankments, and similar works is thrown rateably upon the persons whose property is benefited by the construction and maintenance of these works. (iii) The Engineer was invested with certain powers for the repair of public embankments; these powers to be exercised subject to the control of the Collector. (iv) A specification, to be found in Sch. D of the Act, set out and enumerated, for the first time, the embankments which are maintainable at the expense of Government: and the Lieutenant-Governor is vested with power to enter any new embankment in this schedule or to remove any existing embankment therefrom. (v) Schedule E contains a further specification of certain sums contributed annually in accordance with custom for certain parganas in the Moorshedabad District towards the maintenance of the embankments thereof, and it is to be observed that Rukunpore—the pargana with which this suit is concerned—is one of the parganas specified in that schedule. The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is excluded in respect of all things done under the authority of the Act.

I now turn to the four questions which, as I have already mentioned, have to be disposed of in order to the decision of this case; and the first of these questions with which I have to deal is, whether there is any common law liability cast upon the defendants to repair the particular embankment with which this case is concerned. Now, in the whole of the legislation which I have just examined, there is nothing to be found which [518] presupposes or assumes any such liability; and this point is of the more importance when we remember that the preambles of the old Regulations contain, in very many instances, a recital of what the framers of those Regulations considered to be the antecedent common law of the country. The only liability spoken of is a liability based upon the conditions of the Permanent Settlement, and this is very different from common law liability. If there had been any such common law liability, it would have been unnecessary to insert special stipulations in the Permanent Settlement kabuliats. It would be reasonable to suppose that the proprietor of an estate bordering upon a river should not be allowed to alter the natural condition of the land so as to cause injury to his neighbours by letting the water in upon their lands; but there is nothing reasonable in the supposition that such a proprietor should be compellable to construct and maintain artificial works in order to confer a benefit upon his neighbours by protecting their lands from inundations that would happen in the normal state of things. He might himself receive little or no advantage from expensive works, the benefit of which would be enjoyed by strangers, who had contributed nothing towards their construction or maintenance. According to my view and so far as I have been able to discover, there is under the common law of this country, no liability cast upon a riparian proprietor to construct artificial works or keep them in repair. There is no such common law liability in other countries so far as I have been able to discover. In England, it has been decided in the case of Hudson v. Tabor (1), that, apart from prescription, there is no liability cast on a frontager to maintain walls for the protection of the land. At page 294 of the report in this case, the ancient usage of the realm is discussed; and Lord Coleridge, C.J., says:—The whole of “this proceduræ is entirely inconsistent with the notion that, at common law, the frontager could be compelled by action, to repair any part of such defences which had been injured by the outrageousness of the sea.” And an examination of the rest of the judgment will show that, according to the view taken by the Court of Appeal in that case, there is cast [519] upon a frontager, by the common law, no liability to put fresh materials on the top of a sea-wall, from time to time, in order to keep it up to the proper height. See also the report of this case in the Court below (2). In the case of Rex v. The Pagham Commissioners (3), it was decided that no obligation lay upon persons occupying lands adjoining the sea to erect works for the protection of their neighbours, and that there was no liability to indemnify them against loss. In the case of Morland v. Cook (4), there was an acre-scot levied rateably for the repair of these works. It was there based upon covenant, and this covenant was held to be binding on purchasers without notice thereof. An examination of the cases upon this subject will show that the liability to construct or repair sea-walls was, in some instances, imposed on individuals by covenant amongst themselves; and, in other instances, is regarded as a liability of contributing rateably, imposed by the common law upon all persons benefited by the construction and maintenance of such works. In the case of Rex v. The Commissioners of Sewers for Essex (5), it was held that all persons enjoying the benefit of a sea-wall are bound and liable at common law to repair and maintain it in the absence of any special custom or contract for that purpose. This liability is opposed to the supposition of any exclusive liability on the part of an individual to construct or maintain a sea-wall or embankment upon his own land for the benefit of his neighbour's land.

Then, secondly, are the defendants liable by prescription? On this point it may be sufficient to say that no case of prescription has been established by the evidence, and very strong and clear evidence would be necessary in order to establish such a prescription. In the case of Mason v. The Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Company (6), a natural watercourse, called Ashton Brook, flowing through the plaintiff's land, had been diverted for upwards of forty years by a canal company under the powers of their Act, and the bed had become silted up, and was no longer adequate to carry off the flood water in its natural [520] state. The canal was discontinued, and the waters restored to their former course, and the plaintiff's land thereby flooded and damaged. The Court held that the plaintiff had no legal ground of complaint. Blackburn, J., said:—“Before the canal was made, the person whose estate the plaintiff now has, had the ordinary rights and liabilities of a riparian owner on the banks of a natural stream. He was entitled to have the water flow to him in its natural state, so far as it was a benefit, as, for instance, to turn his mill or water his cattle: and he was bound to submit to receive the water, so far as it was a nuisance." Now, this is a strong case, seeing that the canal works had been in existence for more than forty years; and notwithstanding this, it was held that the plaintiff had no legal right to the continuance of the benefit conferred upon him by their construction. See also Hudson v. Tabor (1), where it was remarked that the mere fact that each frontager had always maintained the wall in front of his land, and that no one had thought it necessary to erect a wall to protect his land from his neighbour's land, was not sufficient evidence to establish a prescriptive liability on the part of the defendant to maintain the wall for the protection of the adjoining landholders.

I come now to the third question—Are the defendants bound by the conditions imposed upon them by the original grant made at the time of the Permanent Settlement? The stipulation in their kabuliat is as follows:—"I shall make embankment works of the said mouza at the proper time. Should there be any loss from any negligence, that loss shall be mine." Now I think there can be no doubt that the effect of s. 67 of Reg. VIII of 1793 was to make this stipulation in the kabuliat binding upon them for all future time. It is possible that this stipulation was made in the interests of the ryots and was in furtherance of the policy which the Government of the time enunciated in many of the Regulations—the policy, that is, of protecting and providing for the interests of the ryots. Two points have to be considered in connection with the question with which I am now dealing: first, if there was such a liability imposed by the original grant, can the plaintiff maintain this [521] suit, seeing that he was no party to that contract, if the term 'contract' may be applied to the agreement entered into between the Government and the zemindar; and secondly, is the embankment with which this case is concerned within the provisions of that stipulation? Now, that the plaintiff can maintain this suit, I think the case of The Mayor of Lyme Regis v. Henley (2) is an authority. In that case, Park, J., said:—"It is, however, further urged, that whatever engagement the Corporation may be under as between them and the Crown, so as to render them liable either to forfeiture of their charter, or any other proceeding by the Crown, yet that no stranger can take advantage of such engagement and maintain an action. It is admitted that if their liability arose by prescription, they would be indictable, and also an action would lie for special damage, as in the Mayor, &c., of Lynn v. Turner (3), Churchman v. Tunstal (4), Payne v. Partridge (5), and many other authorities which it is unnecessary to cite; because it is clear and undoubted law, that wherever an indictment lies for non-repair, an action on the case will lie at the suit of a party sustaining any peculiar damage. Now, we are unable to see any sound distinction between a liability by prescription and a liability arising within time of memory, but legally created. We do not say that prescription necessarily implies a charter or grant, but it necessarily implies some legal origin, and a charter would be a legal origin. Suppose that a prescriptive obligation were alleged, and that a charter granted before time of memory were produced, and so the legal origin were shown, would that destroy the prescription? Certainly not. Would the obligation arising from that charter have been less binding within a few years after it was granted, then it is now after a great lapse of time? Certainly not. If then the origin be legal, how can it be important when it took place? We do not go the length of saying that a stranger can take advantage of an agreement between A and B, nor even of a charter granted by the king, where no matter of general and public concern is involved; but where that is the case, and the king, for the benefit of the public, has made a certain [522] grant, imposing certain public duties, and that grant has been accepted, we are of opinion that the public may enforce the performance of those duties by indictment, and individuals peculiarly injured, by action." Whether the grant to the defendants in this case was a matter of sufficient general and public concern, is a question which I think it will be unnecessary to decide upon this part of the case, because, upon the second point which I am about to notice, I am satisfied that no liability under the conditions of the kabuliat can be enforced as to this particular embankment. Were it otherwise, I would have no hesitation in deciding that both the grant and the stipulation in the grant were of general and public concern.

The second point to be considered in connection with this third question is, whether this particular embankment is within the covenant contained in the defendants' kabuliat. The Munsif has found that it is, but it appears to me that this finding is based on insufficient evidence; and I concur in the decision of the District Judge upon this point. It was argued before us that the condition in the kabuliat ought to apply, not only to the embankments which were in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement and which might have been supposed to be within the intention of the Government and the zemindar who executed the kabuliat, but also to all embankments which might at any future time be considered necessary for the protection of the land; but this is an argument in which I am unable to concur. The progress of the country and of engineering skill, and the increase of population necessitating the bringing of fresh land into cultivation, have, within recent years, rendered possible and created a demand for works of reclamation and drainage which cannot reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation an intention of the Government and the zemindars of 1793. I think, then, that the only reasonable construction to be put upon the kabuliat is, that the zemindar is bound to repair such embankments as in 1793 and previously had usually been repaired by the zemindar. As the District Judge has found that the particular embankment in this case does not fall within that category I think that the defendants cannot be made liable to repair this [523] embankment upon the basis of any stipulation contained in the original kabuliat.

Then, as to the fourth and last point, are the defendants bound to repair by reason that this is one of the embankments for the repair of which they receive a contribution from the Government? I think that there is not sufficient evidence upon the record to enable us to determine this point, and that there ought to be an enquiry as to the circumstances under which, and the objects for which, this allowance has been made by Government; and I concur in the remand order proposed by my learned colleague.

Case remanded.

*Before Mr. Justice Cunningham and Mr. Justice Prinsep.*HURSEE MAHAPATRO (Petitioner) v. DINOBUNDO PATRO

A British subject residing in Midnapore, in Bengal, was charged before the Maharaja of Mohurbhunj with having committed the offence of defamation in Mohurbhunj in the Tributary Mehals. On an application made by the accused to the Magistrate of Midnapore, objecting to be tried by the Raja of Mohurbhunj, the Commissioner of Cuttack, who was also Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, directed that the case should be transferred to Midnapore and tried by the Magistrate of the district, who had the power of an Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals. The accused, while being tried, moved the High Court to set aside the proceedings at Midnapore, on the ground that the offence not having been committed within the district, the Magistrate was acting without jurisdiction.

Held, that the proceedings were without jurisdiction.

Per CUNNINGHAM, J.—The Tributary Mehals are now, as they were in 1874, a portion of British India, which the Government of India has been pleased to exempt from the ordinary law and jurisdiction of the Courts, and to govern by means of special officials and enactments. Whatever may be the powers of Government as to Mohurbhunj, those powers do not extend to [524] empowering the legally constituted tribunals of a British district to follow in that district, and in the case of residents in it, any procedure, and to exercise any other jurisdiction than that created by the law.

Per PRINSEP, J.—The territory of Mohurbhunj is a part of British India, but at present not subject to any laws not specially extended to it. The Tributary Mehals being British India, and being excluded from the operation of all the laws in force in British India, unless expressly extended to them, the orders of Government conferring powers on particular officers over criminal offences committed within these mehals are ultra vires.

[R., 8 C. 985 (F.B.); 9 C. 288 (289).]

THE facts which gave rise to this rule being issued were as follows:—

A complaint was preferred to the Raja of Mohurbhunj by one Dinobundo Patro, the dewan of the Raja, charging the petitioner and two others with libel. Thereupon the Raja issued summonses and warrants for the attendance of the accused, one of whom, the petitioner, was a ryot of the Raja's, holding lands and residing in Midnapore. The process was sent to the Magistrate of Midnapore for the purpose of being executed, and the petitioner then applied to the Magistrate not to execute the process, not on the ground that the Raja had no jurisdiction to try him, but that as the Raja was personally concerned, a fair trial would not be held.

The Magistrate, on the 30th June 1880, forwarded the petition to the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, an office then held by the Commissioner of Cuttack; and he, on the 12th July, addressed the Raja, requesting him to make over the papers of the case to the Magistrate of Midnapore, who was also vested with the powers of an Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals. Two of the accused were then summoned to appear before the latter officer, and after several witnesses had been examined, he, on the 13th December 1880, framed a charge against them under s. 500 of the Penal Code. This charge was entitled as made by "the Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals," and was as follows:—

I, J. C. Price, Officiating Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals, hereby charge you, Hursee Mahapatro, Baidi Bagh, as follows:— That you, on or about the end of Phalgun last, at Baripada, in Mohurbhunj, defamed one Dinobundo Patro, naib of Nyabasan Parganna, by saying that he had taken a [525] bribe of Rs. 5,000 to get the Nyagram Rajah a loan from the Mohurbhunj Maharaja of Rs. 25,000; also by referring to, and confirming the allegations made in, a petition previously submitted to the Maharaja, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of this Court. And I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge.

(Sd.) J. C. PRICE,

The 13th December, 1880.

Asst. Supdt.

The prosecution then proceeded till the 18th January, when one of the accused was acquitted, the charge as against him being abandoned. The other accused then entered into his defence and called witnesses, but previous to judgment being delivered, he moved the High Court to set aside the proceedings as having been without jurisdiction, and obtained the rule which now came on to be argued.

The Advocate-General (the Hon'ble G. C. Paul) with him Mr. Phillips, appeared to show cause on behalf of Dinobundo Patro, the dewan of the Maharaja of Mohurbhunj. The first question in this case is the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere in the matter. We contend that Mr. Price, as Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, is not a Court subordinate to this Court, and therefore not under this Court's powers of control and supervision. He was not acting as a Magistrate, but under a different capacity, viz., that of a political officer, and this Court can only interfere when he is acting as a subordinate Court, as it has no such powers over private individuals. Moreover, this jurisdiction has been exercised under orders from the Local Government for a long series of years, and cannot now be questioned on a rule like this, and this question should not be raised on an application of this kind, especially when nothing has yet been done. We further contend that Mohurbhunj is not British India, but foreign territory, for the Regulations do not show that it is British territory. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—Is the Government [526] represented? We ought to know if the Government concede that Mohurbhunj is not a portion of British India.] We do not appear for the Government on the present occasion, as they have had no notice of the rule.

Mr. Phillips followed on the same side.

Mr. M. Ghose in support of the rule. This Court has jurisdiction over all Magistrates who are subordinate, whether they profess to act as such or not. Mr. Price is a Magistrate ordinarily subject to this Court's powers of superintendence, and he is acting as a 'Court' and trying a case within the jurisdiction of this Court, though he may choose to call himself "Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals," an office unknown to the law. He must show that the law allows him, to act as such without being subject to the superintendence of this Court. If a Judge or a Magistrate convicts any subject of Her Majesty, such Judge or Magistrate cannot oust the jurisdiction of this Court by saying that he had convicted not in his judicial, but in his executive, capacity. It is immaterial how Mr. Price chooses to describe himself in the proceedings, for that will not alter the case or his real character. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—Have you any authority on this point?] There is a well-known class of cases where this Court, under s. 15 of the Charter, has set aside proceedings of Magistrates under s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which are expressly declared by law to be non-judicial proceedings; see Banee Madhub Ghose v. Wooma Nath Roy Chowdhry (1), Chunder Coomar Roy v. Omesh Chunder Mojoomdar (2), Sree Nath Dutt v. Unnoda Churn Dutt (3). The principles of these cases apply to the present case, and they were considered by a Full Bench: In re Chunder Nath Sen (4). And again subsequently considered by all the Judges in Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Turamoni Chowdhry (5). In Shurut Chunder Banerjee v. Bama Churn Mookerjee (6), I contended that this Court [527] had no power to set aside, on revision, an order of a Magistrate not made in his judicial capacity; but Morris and White, JJ., decided against me, on the ground that the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction, and that case has been followed by other Judges. This Court has, therefore, jurisdiction under the charter to set aside the proceedings of a subordinate Magistrate, which are themselves without jurisdiction. The next question is, whether Mohurbhunj is a part of British India and subject to the Code of Criminal Procedure. If it is not British India, then my client can only be tried under the provisions of the Extradition Act, and by a Court subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of this Court. But if it is not British India, then my client cannot be tried in Midnapore, as that would be contrary to the provisions of s. 63 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [CUNNINGHAM, J.—But we have the power to transfer a case to Midnapore if we choose.] Yes, if Mohurbhunj is British India, and in that case my client would be tried by Mr. Price in his capacity of Magistrate, and have a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge, to which we do not object. He objects to be tried by a Court which the law does not recognize. But I contend that Mohurbhunj is British India; see Hunter's Statistics, Puri and Tributary Mehals; Regs. IV of 1804, XII of 1805, ss. 36, 37, XIII of 1803, s. 13, XI of 1816, V of 1818, s. 6, Act XX of 1850; and Damodar Gordhan v. Deoram Kanji (7). Mohurbhunj being part of British India, and not included in the Scheduled Districts Act, the orders of the Government empowering Mr. Price, the Raja of Mohurbhunj, and the Commissioner of Cuttack to try cases are ultra vires; and if it be contended that Mohurbhunj is not a part of British India, then the Government should have notice before your Lordships decide that question.

The Court, accordingly, took time to consider, and subsequently directed notice to be served on the Government of Bengal. The case was then re-argued, and Mr. Phillips, Standing Counsel, appeared on behalf of the Government, and contended that Mohurbhunj was not a part of British India. He [528] referred to Lachmi Narain v. Raja Partap Singh (8), and objected to the jurisdiction of the High Court. Mr. M. Ghose re-argued the whole case, and contended that Mohurbhunj was within British India, and that the trial of the petitioner in Midnapore ought to be set aside.

The judgments of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ.) were as follows :—

JUDGMENTS.

CUNNINGHAM, J.—This case comes before us in the exercise of our powers of Criminal revision.

The facts, as set out in the petition of Hursee Mahapatro, are as follows :—

A complaint was preferred to the Raja of Mohurbhunj, charging the petitioner and two others with libel. Thereupon the Raja issued summonses and warrants through the Magistrate of Midnapore for the attendance of the accused, who are residents of that district. The accused petitioned Mr. Price, the Magistrate of Midnapore, that the case should not be tried by the Raja. The Magistrate forwarded the petition, on the 30th June 1880, to the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals (a post occupied by the Commissioner of Cuttack); and on the 12th July 1880, he addressed the Raja, requesting him to make over the papers of the case to the Magistrate of Midnapore, "who," it was observed, "has the powers of an Assistant to the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals." This officer, under his usual official seal, summoned two of the accused. They appeared before him, several witnesses were examined, and on the 13th December 1880, he framed a charge against them under s. 500 of the Penal Code. This charge was entitled as made by "the Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals."

On the 18th January 1881, the prosecution was abandoned against one of the accused, and Mr. Price directed his acquittal.

The remaining accused then examined his witnesses, and the case was argued. Judgment has not yet been delivered, and the accused has now moved the High Court to set aside the proceedings as having been without jurisdiction.

[529] The question before us is, whether the proceedings before Mr. Price, either as Magistrate of Midnapore, or as Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, have been without jurisdiction; and whether, supposing them to be without jurisdiction, he is, in his capacity of Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, amenable to the revision powers of the High Court.

The estate of the Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj forms a portion of territory which was ceded by the Mahrattas to the British Government in 1803; it forms one of a group of estates known as "the Tributary Mehals."

The history of these mehals, as shown by the Regulations, Acts, and orders of Government, and so far as concerns the present enquiry, is as follows :—

Reg. IV of 1804, after reciting that the province of Cuttack, including Balasore and other dependencies of the said provinces, had been ceded to the East India Company in full sovereignty, and that it was necessary to provide for the administration of criminal justice, formed the province into a 'zilla' with two divisions, and a Magistrate in each; extended the Criminal Regulations of Bengal; but provided that the Court should not have power to take cognizance of cases committed before the 14th October 1803, the date on which the fort and town of Cuttack surrendered to the British arms.

Reg. XII of 1805 provides for the collection of public revenue in Zilla Cuttack. It recites and, with certain modifications, confirms a proclamation issued by the Commissioners, dated 15th September 1804, regarding the rights of landowners in the 'Mogulbundi' tract of the zilla, viz., that part in which the land itself was responsible for the revenue; and, after generally extending the Regulations as to the settlement and collection of public revenue, it provides against the implication that any of those Regulations are, for the present, to be considered to be in force in certain enumerated jungle or hill zemindaries occupied by a rude and uncivilized race of people, with the proprietors of which engagements were formed by the late Board of Commissioners for the payment of a certain fixed Government rent or tribute to Government. The same exemption [530] was extended to Mohurbhunj, with the provision that the Collector should conclude a settlement with the proprietors of that estate for the payment of a fixed annual Government rent on the same principle as that observed in the case of the other hill or jungle zemindars.

Reg. XIII of the same year deals with the maintenance of order and administration of justice in Cuttack, and (after excluding certain tracts) forms the rest of the district into one zilla, instead of two, as provided by Reg. IV of 1804.

Section 13 extends the Beng. Regulation as to criminal justice to the zilla, but excludes from its operation certain hill zemindaries and the territory of Mohurbhunj.

Reg. XIV of the same year, in providing for the administration of civil justice, makes a similar extension of the Beng. Regulation, and contains a similar exemption to that contained in Reg. XII.

By Reg. XI of 1816, provision was made for trying inheritance suits 'in certain tributary estates' excepted by Reg. XIV of 1805, s. 11, from the ordinary law. These suits were to be heard by the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, an officer who appears to have been appointed in 1814 (Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal and Orissa, 196), but of whose appointment no official notification has been brought to our notice. The sub-division of estates was forbidden, and no suits could be taken up, the cause of action in which arose previous to the 14th October 1803, the day on which the fort and town of Cuttack surrendered to the British arms.

An appeal from the Superintendent lay to the Sadr Adawlut, and in some cases to the King in Council.

The relations of the Raja of Mohurbhunj to Government are defined by a 'treaty engagement' executed by the Raja, dated 1st June 1829. By this the Raja engaged with the East India Company always to maintain himself in submission and loyalty; to pay annually as peshkush for the zilla Rs. 1,001; to apprehend fugitives from Orissa; to apprehend and give up for trial on demand, any ryot who had committed 'an offence' within the Mogulbundi territories; to supply provisions to the Company's troops when 'passing through my territories'; [531] to offer no impediment to subjects of the Company passing through 'my boundaries'; 'to depute a contingent force of my own troops,' and to act with the forces of Government against recusant rajas, receiving only rations.

Act XXI of 1845 enabled the Governor-General in Council to remove any of the estates mentioned in s. 2 of Reg. XI of 1816 [including Mohurbhunj] and to place them under the jurisdiction of an officer to be appointed by the Government of Bengal and to be called 'Agent for the Suppression of Meriah Sacrifices,' and his subordinates.

The agents so appointed were to be guided by instructions from time to time received from the Government of India through the local Government; and the Government was empowered to prescribe rules for their guidance, and to prescribe the finality of their decision in Civil cases, and the class of criminal cases which they were to submit to the Sadr Court. 1881 JULY 13.

Act XX of 1850, after reciting that certain zemindaries and Mohur-bhunj were temporarily exempted by Regs. XII and XIII of 1805 from the ordinary revenue and criminal law, and that it was desirable to provide for disputes as to the boundaries of zemindaries, provided that any boundary dispute between the excepted estates and estates subject to the Beng. Regulations should be tried by the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, subject to confirmation by the Government of Bengal. On the 24th September 1851, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal appointed Mr. Schalch, the Magistrate of Midnapore, to be an ex-officio Assistant to the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals. In conformity with orders of the Secretary of State, dated 26th July 1860, adoption sanads were granted to the Rajas of these mehals, which are therein described as 'state,' when subsequently the word 'estates' was directed by the Lieutenant-Governor to be substituted. In speaking of them, the Government of India directed that the designation of 'state' as employed by Lord Canning should remain unaltered. APPEL-LATE CRIMINAL. 7 C 523 = 9 C.L.R. 93.

On the 12th December 1870, the Secretary of the Bengal Government addressed the Magistrate as "ex-officio Assistant Superintendent, Tributary Mehals," informing him that, as ex-officio Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, he [532] was empowered to take up for trial all offences committed within the Tributary Mehals not punishable with death, and to pass sentences not exceeding seven years, submitting his proceedings, in each case, to the Superintendent; trials thus conducted were to be, as far as possible, in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Code.

In 1872, the Government of India vested the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals with the powers exercised by a Sessions Judge in Regulation Districts, and with power to hear appeals from sentences passed by any subordinate officer in Tributary Mehals cases.

On the 30th April 1873, the Government of Bengal addressed the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, in answer to a letter submitting a tabular statement of the powers then exercised by officers in the tributary estate of Orissa, and the powers which, in the opinion of the Superintendent, ought to be exercised in accordance with the spirit of the new Criminal Procedure Code; authorized the Superintendent to exercise the powers of Magistrate of a District, and of a Sessions Judge under s. 15 of the Act; and gave him power to hear appeals from sentences under s. 36. The Magistrates and ex-officio Assistant Superintendents of Tributary States were invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class and under ss. 36 and 222 of the Code.

Up to this point the effect of the Acts of the Government, political, executive, and legislative, appears to have been—1st, that the Tributary Mehals had become an integral portion of British India within the scope of the general powers of the Government, and subject to any legislative enactment duly passed in their behalf; and 2ndly, that they had been expressly exempted from the ordinary law of the country, and were administered by specially appointed officers under special enactments. As to these orders, it is important to remember that, by virtue of s. 25 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 and 25 Viet., c. 67), no question can arise as to the validity of any rule, law, or regulation made by the Governor-General, or the Local Government, for Non-Regulation Provinces, prior to 1st August 1861, on the ground of its having been made otherwise than in accordance with existing law.

[533] We have now to consider whether the position of Mohurbhunj was affected by the Laws' Local Extent Act and Scheduled Districts Act passed in 1874.

It has been urged that, inasmuch as Mohurbhunj is not specified among the Scheduled Districts of Bengal in the first schedule of Act XIV of 1874, or the sixth schedule of Act XV of 1874, it is, under s. 3 of the latter Act, subject to the ordinary law in force throughout British India.

This contention, however, proceeds, in my opinion, on a misconception of the import and effect of those measures.

It is obvious from the preamble to Act XIV of 1874 that the 'Scheduled Districts' specified in the schedules of that Act and Act XV were not the whole, but merely 'among' the parts, of India which had either never been brought within, or had been removed from, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts.

It is indeed clear from the preambles and general language of the Act (s. 3), that the object was to declare, and in some instances consolidate, the existing law, and to clear away uncertainties as to jurisdiction where they existed,—not to alter the political position of any district not expressly mentioned in them; and it was, no doubt, with this intention that s. 8 (k) of Act XV provided that nothing in the Act should affect the operation of any enactment not mentioned in any of the schedules.

Now Regs. XIII and XIV of 1805, and Reg. XI of 1816, Act XXI of 1845 and Act XX of 1850, were in force at the time of the passing of the Laws Local Extent Act. They are not mentioned in the schedule to Act XV of 1874, and they are, therefore, unaffected by its provisions.

The position of the Tributary Mehals was, accordingly, in my opinion, unaffected by the two measures in question. The subsequent repeal of some of the Regulations and Acts just mentioned would not, owing to the saving clause inserted in Repealing Acts,—e.g., s. 1 of Act XVI of 1874,—affect any established jurisdiction or form of practice or procedure or existing usage, office or appointment; and we must hold accordingly that the Tributary Mehals are now, as they were in 1874, a portion of British India, which the Government has been [534] pleased to exempt from the ordinary law and jurisdiction of the Courts, and to govern by means of special officials and enactments. If this be so, and if those special enactments have the effect of removing this part of the country from the ordinary criminal supervision of the High Court, it would be questionable whether the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the proceedings of the officials appointed by Government to administer the criminal law in the parts of the country so specially circumstanced.

As to the laws now actually in force in Mohurbhunj, it is impossible to deny that the effect of s. 3 of Act XV of 1874, has been to produce some obscurity as to the position of those parts of India which, not being Scheduled Districts as enumerated in the schedules to the Acts, are yet not administered in complete accordance with the laws declared to be in force throughout the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts; and that the difficulty thus occasioned is enhanced by the provisions commonly inserted in subsequent Acts "that the measure shall extend to the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts as defined in Act XIV of 1874." It might be urged with great cogency that the intention of the Legislature, as gathered from these Acts and especially from the last para. of s. 1 of Act XIV of 1874, was, that every part of British India not subject to the ordinary law should be administered in accordance with those Acts, or with a scheme framed under the provisions of 33 Vict., c. 3.

It is, however, unnecessary, for the purpose of the present decision, to come to a precise conclusion as to the legal position of Mohurbhunj, the validity of the various orders of Government concerning it, or the competence of the officers appointed to carry out those orders. The act with which we are concerned, was not done in Mohurbhunj by an officer empowered to exercise jurisdiction there, but in Midnapore by a Magistrate empowered to act under the Criminal Procedure Code in an ordinary district and trying a resident of that district. Now whatever may be the powers of the Government as to Mohurbhunj, there is, in my opinion, no ground for the contention that those powers extend to empowering the legally constituted tribunals [535] of a British district to follow in that district, and in the case of residents in it, any procedure, and exercise any other jurisdiction than that created by the law. When, therefore, the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals proceeded to exercise a power not conferred on him by the order of 1872, in transferring a case from one district to another, and when the Magistrate of Midnapore, dealing in Midnapore with a resident in the district, proceeded to exercise magisterial powers under another style, and to depart in some material particulars from the provisions of the Code as to Procedure, these officers seem to me to have been acting without jurisdiction, and their proceedings ought, accordingly, in my opinion, to be set aside.

PRINSEP, J.—One Dinobundo Patro charged Hursee Mahapatro before the Raja of Mohurbhunj with defamation. The accused, apparently, is a ryot of the Raja, holding lands and residing in Midnapore; and process was issued by the Raja through the Magistrate of Midnapore for his attendance at Mohurbhunj. He petitioned the Magistrate of Midnapore not to execute this process, on the ground, not that the Raja had no jurisdiction to try him, but that, as the Raja was personally concerned, a fair trial would not be held. The Magistrate of Midnapore, who also holds the undefined office of Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals, on the 30th June 1880, addressed the Commissioner of Cuttack as Superintendent, and apparently in that capacity his official superior, recommending that the case should be transferred for trial either to Midnapore or Balasore.

On 12th July, the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals directed the case to be tried by the Magistrate of Midnapore, and requested the Raja to transmit the record to that officer. The trial then took place before the Magistrate of Midnapore, who, in the course of the proceedings, also signs himself as Assistant Superintendent.

The petitioner having thus succeeded in procuring the transfer of the case to Midnapore, has obtained a rule from this Court on the ground that the proceedings of the Magistrate of Midnapore are without jurisdiction. I regret that, from the nature [536] of this objection, we have been compelled to have the matter fully argued, for ordinarily such conduct would be deserving of no consideration.

This case has raised points of difficulty regarding the relations of the British Government towards the territory of Mohurbhunj, the jurisdiction of the neighbouring Magistrates and the Commissioner of Cuttack, or, as they are called, Assistant Superintendents and the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals; and finally, whether we have any power to interfere either as a Court of revision under the Code of Criminal Procedure, or under other powers conferred on us under the Charter of the High Court.

As regards this last point it is argued, that the Magistrate of Midnapore and the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, having been vested with certain powers by the Government of Bengal, and in the exercise of those powers being in no way subordinate to the jurisdiction of this High Court, we can have no control over their proceedings, and at any rate we can have no control until they shall have terminated in such a manner as to enable us to exercise our authority as in a writ of habeas corpus. It is sufficient, however, for the purpose of the present case, that I should state, that, in the view that I take of the relations between the Government and Mohurbhunj, it is unnecessary for me to consider the full extent of this argument. I should, however, be very disinclined to refuse to act on a prima facie good objection to proceedings taken by a judicial officer in British territory acting under authority of a very doubtful character, until the person against whom such proceedings were directed, had suffered in some way from the consequences of such doubtful jurisdiction. It is our duty to prevent rather than endeavour to cure, the effect of injuries. If the argument be pressed to its extreme, it would be necessary for a man to be imprisoned, or to have been whipped, or even to be under sentence of death, before we could intervene, a position it would be impossible to accept.

The point which we are really called upon to decide is, whether the territory of Mohurbhunj is a foreign state or British India. I would, however, first of all remark, that even [537] supposing, for purposes of argument, that Mohurbhunj is a foreign state, the Magistrate of Midnapore would have no jurisdiction to try the petitioner, because the offence charged (defamation) being an offence under chap. xxi of the Penal Code, and no complaint having been made to him, he has, under s. 142 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no authority to take cognizance of it. Further, it may be remarked that the Magistrate would not be competent to deliver him to the Raja of Mohurbhunj for trial, inasmuch as the Magistrate is not a political officer, as defined in s. 3 of the Extradition Act (XXI of 1879), appointed by one of the authorities mentioned in cl. 2. Nor, as far as we are informed, is there any officer who could so act, supposing Mohurbhunj to be foreign territory.

I will now proceed to consider whether the tract of country known as Mohurbhunj is British India as defined by law; and to determine this, it is necessary to consider the manner in which this territory has been dealt with by the Legislature since its conquest by the British in 1803. From the terms of the treaty entered into between the Honourable East India Company and Senab Sahib Roghojee Bhoonsla, on 17th December 1803, it appears that "the province of Cuttack, including the port and district of Balasore, was ceded in perpetual sovereignty to the former; and art. 10 refers to certain treaties made antecedently by the British Government with feudatories of the Senab Sahib Sooba, which were then confirmed (see Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. III, pp. 97-98). These treaties were made with several of the chiefs of the Cuttack Tributary Mehals as they are now called, and are reproduced in Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. I, pp. 188 et seq. The Chief of Mohurbhunj was not among other chiefs, but that is not material, for it is clear that Mohurbhunj, as well as other Tributary Mehals, was ceded as portion of the province of Cuttack. The terms of Reg. IV of 1804 and of Regs. XII, XIII and XIV of 1805, show that within the term "dependencies of the province of Cuttack" was included the territory of Mohurbhunj.

Reg. IV of 1804, s. 7, gives the 14th of October 1803 as the date of this conquest, and the commencement of the jurisdiction of the Courts established under that law for the administration [538] of justice in criminal cases and the authority of the Police. And it was declared that the general Regulations in force in the provinces of Bengal and Behar should be in force, unless it should be otherwise specially directed in any such Regulation.

In the following year (1805) three Regulations were passed relating to the zilla of Cuttack, namely: Reg. XII, for the settlement and collection of public revenue; Reg. XIII, for the maintenance of peace and the support and administration of the Police; and Reg. XIV, for the administration of justice in civil cases: but the territory of Mohurbhunj, together with the estates of other hill or jungle rajas or zemindars, now denominated the Tributary Mehals, was expressly excluded from the operation of these Regulations, the concluding portion of each of those Regulations containing a provision to that effect. The power of legislating for the territory of Mohurbhunj was, therefore, clearly asserted by the regulations of 1805, but it was declared that, for the present, the exercise of such power would be reserved.

The preamble of Reg. XI of 1816 is to the following effect:—"Whereas it is necessary that provisions should be made for receiving, trying, and deciding claims to the right of inheritance or succession in certain tributary estates in Zilla Cuttack, which were excepted by s. 11, Reg. XIV of 1805, from the operation of the general rules for the administration of civil justice, established in the provinces of Bengal, Behar and Orissa; and whereas the nature of the tenures by which those estates are held, the character of the inhabitants, and other local circumstances render it expedient that the estates in question should not be subject to partition, but should descend entire and undivided to the persons respectively having the most substantial claim according to local and family usage, the following rules have been enacted, to be in force from the date of the promulgation of this Regulation in Zilla Cuttack." That law provided for a regular procedure, with a right of appeal first to the Sadr Dewany Adawlut, and ultimately to the King in Council, in the matters above described. This is the first occasion in which I can find mention made of the office of Superintendent of Tributary Mehals.

[539] The next legislative enactment, in which reference is made to the Tributary Mehals, is Act XXI of 1845. That was an Act passed for the suppression of Meriah Sacrifices in the Hill Tracts of Orissa. Section 1 made it "lawful for the Governor-General in Council, by an order in Council, to remove from the jurisdiction and superintendence of the Commissioner and Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals in Cuttack any of the tributary estates specified in s. 2, Reg. II of 1816 of the Beng. Code, and to place any such estates under the jurisdiction and superintendence of such officer (to be called the Agent for the Suppression of Meriah Sacrifices) and his subordinates, as shall from time to time be appointed by the Government of Bengal on that behalf." It is important too to note the terms of s. 6, which provide that it shall be competent for the Governor-General in Council to prescribe such rules as he may deem proper for the guidance of such Agents and subordinates, and to determine to what extent the decision of the said Agents in civil suits shall be final, and in what suits an appeal shall lie to the Sadr Court, and to define the authority to be exercised by the said Agents in criminal trials, and what criminal cases they shall submit for the decision of the Sadr Court.

Thus it appears from the terms of Act XXI of 1845 that the Commissioner of Cuttack, as Superintendent of Tributary Mehals, had some power over that territory, the exact extent of which power has not been made known to us; but that power, whatever it was, was not conferred by any legislative enactment. It appears, however, that the Legislature, in empowering the Governor-General in Council to remove that territory from his jurisdiction, thought it necessary specially to empower the Governor-General in Council to pass executive orders, having the force of law, regulating and determining how far the orders of the Agents should be final, in what suits an appeal should lie, what should be their powers in criminal trials, and what cases they should submit for the decision of the Sadr Court.

The preamble of Act XX of 1850 is in somewhat the same terms as that of Reg. XI of 1816, in declaring that the territory of Mohurbhunj and certain jungle and hill zamindars in the [540] Zilla of Cuttack were temporarily exempted from the laws in force in other parts of India subject to the Government of Bengal. But it was found necessary to give jurisdiction to some officer of Government to determine disputes regarding the boundaries of those zemindaries. Accordingly, the Superintendent of Tributary Mehals was appointed for this purpose. These are all the legislative enactments specially relating to Mohurbhunj and other Tributary Mehals up to 1874. Act XIV of that year declared, that that Act extends, in the first instance, to the whole of British India within the territories mentioned in the first schedule thereto annexed; and among these schedules are to be found only two from among the Tributary Mehals. Those two Mehals, as they are termed, are the mehals of Angool and Bunki, which had been taken under the direct management of Government some years previously in consequence of the misbehaviour of their hill rajas or zemindars.

Act XV of the same year, which was passed simultaneously with Act XIV, declared, that all the Acts mentioned in the first schedule thereto annexed are now in force throughout the whole of British India, except the Scheduled Districts. And s. 6 extended certain other enactments throughout the whole of the territories now subject to the Government of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, except the Scheduled Districts subject to such Government. The term 'British India' has been declared to be thus defined in all Acts made by the Governor-General in Council, unless there was something repugnant to the subject or context thereof. 'British India' shall mean the territories for the time being vested in Her Majesty by Statute 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106; and that Statute, s. 1, declares, "that the Government of the territories now in the possession or under the Government of the East India Company . . . shall cease to be vested in, or exercised by the said Company, and all territories in the possession or under the Government of the said Company . . . shall become vested in Her Majesty; . . . and for the purpose of this Act 'India' shall mean the territories vested in Her Majesty as aforesaid and all territories which may [541] become vested in Her Majesty by virtue of any such right as aforesaid."

So far then as concerns the terms of the Regulations and Acts of the Government in its legislative capacity, it would seem that the territory of Mohurbhunj is 'British India,' and, unless specially exempted, is subject to the same laws as the rest of British India. But it seems to me that, although Mohurbhunj is British India, and although the Acts of 1874 declared what was the law for British India, inasmuch as the concluding sections of Regs. XII, XIII and XIV of 1805, which expressly excluded the Tributary Mehals 'for the present' from the operation of the general law of the country, we cannot rightly hold that the general terms of the Acts of 1874 override the special terms of the Regulations of 1805; and I am confirmed in this opinion on finding that, although there has been a very extensive repeal of the older Regulations and Acts, those parts of the Regulations of 1805 to which I have referred are still in force. So far then, I am inclined to think that Mohurbhunj is British India, but at present not subject to any laws not specially extended to it.

It is, however, contended, that the fact that treaty engagements were entered into by the British Government with the rajas and zemindars of these Tributary Mehals shows that they were regarded as independent rulers; and we have been referred to a treaty engagement published at pages 184 and 185 of the first volume of Aitchison's Treaties, Engagements, and Sanads.

Now, as regards the so-called treaty engagement, it appears to me that there is nothing in its terms which recognized the absolute independence of the Raja of Mohurbhunj from the authority of the British Government. The document is headed "Treaty engagement executed by the Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj, a Tributary Mehal subordinate to Cuttack, in the Sooba of Orissa." By it the Raja engages to maintain himself in submission and loyalty to the Government; to pay annually in perpetuity for himself, heirs, and successors 1,001 sicca rupees as peshkush for the said Killa; to apprehend and send to the authorities any resident of British territory who [542] may flee into Mohurbhunj; to deliver up any ryot of Mohurbhunj who may commit an offence in British territory; and to refrain from enforcing any claim of his own on any resident of British territory, notifying the circumstances to the authorities, and acting on such orders as he might receive. He further engages to cause rassul, &c., to be supplied to Government troops passing through his territory, and to help them with any further assistance that might be necessary, and that he will depute a contingent force of his own troops with the forces of Government for the purpose of coercion and the bringing of any recusant raja or other person into subjection to the aforesaid Government. Lastly, he relinquishes a claim on account of a ferry.

Now it is only necessary to consider the terms regarding the deputation of a contingent force of his own troops by the Raja to act with the forces of Government, with a view to determine whether that constitutes any ground for supposing the exercise of an authority independent of the Government. It is notorious that even in present days, native chiefs in British territory, especially those in distant and jungle portions, do maintain a certain number of armed retainers; and I have no doubt that, at the time of the signing of this engagement, the number of such retainers was larger than that now existing. A body of such men, known as Pykes in Orissa in Government territory, existed even until a recent date. The preamble to Reg. XIII of 1805 states, that it was the practice in the province of Cuttack, when under the Mahratta Government, to vest the immediate maintenance of the peace in certain Sirdar Pykes also called Kandytes, aided by inferior Pykes, under the orders and control of the said Sardars, for whose support lands were assigned under the orders and authority of the said Government; and that the general control of the said Sardars and other Pykes was vested, at the time of conquest of the province of Cuttack by the British arms, in the zemindars, taluqdars, farmers, and other holders of land within the limits of their respective estates and farms. This state of affairs, so far as regards the province of Cuttack, with the exception of the Tributary Mehals, was discontinued by [543] that Regulation; and it may fairly be supposed that what existed in 1805 throughout the districts of Cuttack continued in the Tributary Mehals, which were disconnected therefrom in 1805, until 1829, and that this is what was referred to in the treaty engagement entered into by the Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj on the 1st of June of that year. In other respects,—that is to say, as regards the settlement of the peshkush payable by the Raja to the Government, the provisions of the treaty engagement are clearly within the terms of s. 37, Reg. XII of 1805; and the other terms are only such as are ordinarily found in kabuliats executed by zemindars and farmers of the Government revenue with Government. I cannot, therefore, regard this engagement otherwise than as an agreement on the part of the Chief or Raja of Mohurbhunj to the terms of the settlement concluded with the Collector of Cuttack under s. 37, Reg. XII of 1805, such as that officer was deputed to make.

So far then as the course of legislation and the Acts of Government with regard to Mohurbhunj up to comparatively recent times, that territory was never even regarded as a foreign state. Government have, from time to time, asserted their power to legislate for it; and, in bringing it within the operation of some laws, have declared that they, for the present, suspended further legislation. The concession of the right to adopt to the Chief of the Tributary Mehals under Lord Canning's Proclamation of 1862, and the recent change in the designation of their lands as 'states' instead of the term 'estates,' which had been used for nearly seventy years, cannot alter their status. On these grounds, I am of opinion that Mohurbhunj is not foreign territory, but that it forms a part of British India at present specially exempted from the operation of the laws in force in British India.

I have already referred to the indefinite character of the authority exercised by the Commissioner of Cuttack as Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals. Up to 1845 some authority was so exercised, but by Act XXI of that year, power was given to the Governor-General in Council to withdraw it, and he was empowered to confer whatever civil and criminal [544] powers he thought proper on the Agent for the Suppression of Meriah Sacrifices and his subordinates. When that office was abolished, is not very material; it is sufficient to state that the Act was repealed in 1874. But it is clear that the Commissioner of Cuttack, as Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, and the Magistrates of the districts surrounding that tract of country as assistants to the Superintendent of Tributary Mehals, have, from time to time, been empowered by the Government of Bengal to exercise powers as Criminal Courts of various grades in the Tributary Mehals. We have not been informed under what authority these powers were conferred, and looking at the state of the law which I have already discussed, I am of opinion that the Government of Bengal acted beyond its authority in so investing these officers. I have come to this conclusion, because it was thought necessary by a special legislative enactment (Act XXI of 1845) to empower the Governor-General in Council to establish Civil and Criminal Courts in the Tributary Mehals and to define the powers of the several grades of these Courts, and such power has been claimed and exercised by the Government of Bengal without any such authority; and next, because the fact that the Indian Councils Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67, s. 25, by validating all orders passed by Government in Non-Regulation Provinces, amongst which the Tributary Mehals may be fairly placed, shows that such orders were without the sanction of law and required legal confirmation. Up to 1861 any such orders are now not open to question, but this does not affect the validity of the orders conferring magisterial powers on the Magistrate of Midnapore over Mohurbhunj.

We have been informed by the Standing Counsel, Mr. Phillips, who, having first appeared for the private prosecutor, appeared for the Government on our intimating that an officer of Government should argue the case before us on behalf of Government, that, as stated in a printed memo, from the Bengal Secretariat that he handed up to us, the Bengal Government determined to pass no permanent or defined rules "on the subject of the relative jurisdiction of the Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, and the hill Rajas regarding the trial of [545] criminal offences," but directed that "the spirit of certain proposed rules should be acted up to in all future cases with certain limitations; and that the Rajas should be informed that they are ordinarily amenable to the Superintendent's Court, subject to such instructions as may, from time to time, be furnished by Government."

On the 12th December 1870, the Secretary to the Government of Bengal informed the Magistrate of Midnapore, that, as an ex officio Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, he was "empowered to take up for trial all offences committed within the Tributary Mehals not punishable with death, and to deliver judgment and to pass sentence of simple or rigorous imprisonment for a period not exceeding seven years;" that his "proceedings will, in each case, be subject to the approval and sanction of the Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, to whom they should be forwarded;" and that "the trials should be conducted, as far as possible, in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code."

On the 8th August 1872, the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council sanctioned the proposal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to vest "the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, Cuttack, with the same powers as are exercised by Sessions Judges in the Regulation Districts, and with power to hear appeals from all sentences passed by any subordinate officer in Tributary Mehal cases."

On the 30th April 1873, the Secretary to the Government of Bengal informed the Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, that "the Lieutenant-Governor authorized him to exercise the powers of a Magistrate of a District, the powers of a Sessions Judge under s. 15, chap. iii of the new Criminal Procedure Code, and gave him power to hear appeals from sentences under s. 36."

But the Tributary Mehals being British India and being specially excluded from the operation of all the laws in force in British India, unless expressly extended to them, as I have already stated, I can find no authority for those orders of Government conferring powers on particular officers over criminal offences committed within the Tributary Mehals. It appears to me that until so expressly declared by legislative [546] enactment there were no penal laws in force in the Tributary Mehals, and that consequently there was no authority to invest officers with certain powers to administer an unknown and uncertain penal law. We have been informed on the authority of Hunter's Statistical Gazetteer, ——— declared applicable to the Tributary Mehals. No such order can be APPEL- found in the Government Gazette, nor have we on enquiry been LATE able to obtain it from the offices of the Government of India. But CRIMINAL. it would also seem, from what has taken place in the proceedings now ——— before us, that the jurisdiction of the Raja of Mohurbhunj, in Mohurbhunj, 7 C. 523= is admitted, but that jurisdiction is, it is said, subordinate to that of the 9 C.L.R. 93. Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, who can interfere with his proceedings.

 The Superintendent has been vested with certain powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and he has been told by Government that "trials should be conducted, as far as possible, in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code;" but that Code gives the power of withdrawing cases from one Court and transferring them to another, only to a High Court or to the Local Government. If he was acting under the Code, he exceeded his powers; but, as I have before said, I can find no authority for such interference at all.

Next, even supposing the case to have been lawfully withdrawn from the Raja of Mohurbhunj, I can find no authority for the Magistrate of Midnapore trying it either as Magistrate or as ex officio Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals in Midnapore.

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute, and that the proceedings taken before the Magistrate of Midnapore, or Assistant Superintendent of Tributary Mehals, must be declared to have been without jurisdiction and of no effect.

[Motion on an appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

THE OWNERS OF THE SHIP "BRENHILDA" (Appellants) v. THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (Respondents).
 [15th March, 1881.]

Practice in appeals from Vice-Admiralty Court of Bengal—Time for Appealing.

By rule 35 of the Rules respecting appeals from the Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad, made and ordained by King William IV in Council in pursuance of the Statute 2 Will. IV., c. 51, all appeals from the decrees of Vice-Admiralty Courts are to be asserted within fifteen days after the date of the decree.

Held that the words "after the date of the decree" mean after the date when the decree is pronounced by the Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty Court, as the case may be; not the date when the decree is reduced to writing and signed.

On the 23rd July 1880, the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction, modifying a decree of the High Court as a Court of Vice-Admiralty in a cause of damage by collision, referred it to the Registrar to assess the damages that had been incurred in reference to one of the ships, both of which were held to be in fault.
 The parties went, without protest, before the Registrar for that purpose, the impugnants, also, having taken out process to compel the appearance of the promovents before him, and the damages were assessed with the consent of both parties at a certain amount. On the 2nd September 1880, a notice of appeal was given on behalf of the impugnants, and was recorded as asserted pursuant to rule 35 above referred to.

Held, that the appeal was not within time, more than fifteen days having elapsed after the decree before the appeal was asserted. According to the law laid down in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, the proceedings taken before the Registrar were themselves sufficient also to prevent an appeal as of right.

[F., 14 C.W.N. 420=5 Ind. Cas. 844; Relied on, 17 C. 66 (81).]

THIS was a motion to set aside a petition of appeal, and to relax and dissolve the inhibition and citation issued thereon, against a decree of the High Court of Bengal (23rd July 1890) [548] in Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty proceedings. By the decree, the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction modified the decree of the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction (6th January 1880), made in a cause, civil and maritime, of damage by collision at sea in the Bay of Bengal, promoted by the owners of the steamship Ava against the ship Brenhilda, her tackle, apparel, furniture, and freight. The decree of the Appellate Court ordered a reference to the Registrar to assess the damages which had been done to the Brenhilda, upholding the decision of the Court below that there had been negligence on both sides, and that half the damages which resulted to the owners of the ship Ava were to be paid by each of the parties; but the owners of the Brenhilda should be allowed to deduct half of the damages which they had sustained by the injury to their ship. On this reference, the parties attended, the impugnants issuing summonses, and certain damages were assessed by the Registrar on their consent.

The owners of the Brenhilda afterwards appealed to Her Majesty in Council. The proceedings taken in India, and the facts relevant to the question raised on this motion, are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe moved to set aside the appeal, on the ground that it had not been asserted within the time prescribed by the law in force: and that it had been per-empted by acts having been done in furtherance of the decree by the party seeking now to appeal. He referred to the Charter of Justice, 26th March 1775, constituting a Court of Admiralty for Bengal, &c., s. 27; the Commission of Vice-Admiralty, 19th July 1822, appointing the King's Commissary: see Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal by Smoult and Ryan; rule 35 of the Rules made and ordained by King William IV in Council in pursuance of the Statute 2 Will IV, c. 52, which, so far as it related to India, was not repealed by the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104 and the Letters Patent of 1862, establishing the High Courts, s. 31. He contended that the rules of the High Court issued under the Letters Patent, as well as the legislation in India, viz., in Acts VI of 1874 and X of 1877, s. 616, left the rule [549] of William IV untouched. Moreover, the notice of appeal had been recorded as issued under the latter. The Aquila (1) was cited. Again, acts had been done by the appellants in furtherance of the decree against which they now sought to appeal; such appeal having been thereby per-empted; The Clifton (2), Lloyd and Clarke v. Poole (3), The Hydroos (4). The promovents' objection to the right of appeal was rightly brought forward without waiting till the hearing: Tronson v. Dent (5).

Mr. Butt, Q. C. (Mr. Benjamin, Q. C., and Mr. Clarkson with him) did not dispute that the rules of William IV applied; but contended that the objection to this appeal should have been taken in the High Court, and that there was a presumption that the admission of the appeal which had taken place was right. The appellants were entitled to wait, as they had done till they obtained a copy of the decree to be appealed from. There had been no laches on their part. The argument that the appeal had, by the alleged acquiescence on the part of the appellants in the decree under appeal, been perempted, was a highly technical one. And the proceedings taken by the appellants, in going before the Master, were not, under the circumstances, a voluntary act, but only an act done in submission to the directions of the decree of the High Court.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR B. PEACOCK.—This is a motion on the part of the British India Steam Navigation Company, the owners of the ship Ava, to relax and dissolve the inhibition and citation issued in a certain pretended appeal of the abovenamed appellants, and to dismiss or to quash the said appeal for want of competency, or to grant the respondents leave to file an act of protest on petition against the admission of the said pretended appeal.

[550] The suit came before the High Court in the exercise of its Original Jurisdiction. It was brought by the owners of the steamship Ava, against the Brenhilda, for a collision which took place in the Bay of Bengal. The High Court, in its Original Jurisdiction, held, that there was negligence on both sides, and consequently that half the damages which resulted to the owners of the ship Ava were to be paid by each of the parties. The damages were assessed at 50,000 l, which would leave 25,000 l, to be borne by the owners of the Ava themselves, and 25,000 to be paid by the owners of the ship Brenhilda. The parties appealed to the High Court in the exercise of its Appellate Jurisdiction, and that Court affirmed the decision of the first Court so far as it was held that there was negligence on the part of each of the ships; but they thought it right to amend the decree by declaring that, instead of the owners of the Brenhilda paying the full sum of 25,000 l, being one-half of the damages sustained by the owners of the Ava, they should be allowed to deduct half of the damages which they had sustained by the injury to their ship, and that it should be referred to the Registrar of the Court to assess those damages. That decision was pronounced on the 23rd of July 1880. The parties went before the Registrar for the purpose of assessing the amount; and it appears by the report of the Registrar that the damages were assessed at 3,000 l with the consent of both parties. On the 2nd of September 1880, a notice of appeal was given, which was recorded as follows—"Pursuant to rule 35 of the Rules and Regulations made and ordained by His late Majesty King William the Fourth in Council, in pursuance of the second William the Fourth, cl. 51, Mr. Phillips, Advocate of the impugnant, appears and declares his intention of appealing to the Privy Council against both the decrees made in this cause." The rule referred to is in these words:—"Appeals from the decrees of the Vice-Admiralty Courts are to be asserted by the party in the suit within fifteen days after the date of the decree, which is to be done by the Proctor declaring the same in Court, and a minute thereof is to be entered in the assignation book, and the party must also give bail within fifteen days [551] from the assertion of the appeal in the sum of 100 l sterling, to answer the costs of such appeal." The judgment was delivered on the 23rd of July 1880, and consequently the notice on the 2nd of September was not an assertion within fifteen days from the date of the decree. It has been urged that the decree was not drawn up in writing and signed by the Court until some considerable time afterwards, and that the parties could not appeal without annexing a copy of the decree to their petition of appeal. But the rule of annexing a copy of the decree to the petition of appeal refers to appeals which are preferred under the Code of Civil Procedure, Act VIII of 1859; it does not apply to appeals preferred or asserted under the 35th section of the rules of William the Fourth. The words "after the date of the decree," according to their Lordships' view of the rule, do not mean after the date when the decree is drawn up in writing, but after the date on which the decree or sentence is pronounced by the Vice-Admiralty or Admiralty Court, as the case may be. The words which are constantly used in Acts which refer to decrees in the Admiralty Court are "the pronouncing of the sentence or decree." Their Lordships, therefore, think that the date of the decree did not mean the date on which the decree was reduced to writing and signed by the Court, but the date on which the High Court delivered their judgment and expressed what the decree was. If the parties intended to appeal, they ought, in accordance with the rule, to have asserted their appeal within fifteen days from the date of the decree, by declaring in Court that they intended to appeal; and that they did not do. It is important in Admiralty proceedings that notice of appeal should be given within a short period. When a ship is sued, it is usually arrested; and, unless it is released upon bail, it is detained by an officer of the Court. It is, therefore, important, if a party intends to appeal from the decision of the Admiralty Court, that notice should be given within a certain limited time, and that time with regard to Vice-Admiralty cases is fifteen days from the date of pronouncing the decree.

The collision took place in the Bay of Bengal, and therefore it may be a question whether the High Court was exercising Vice-Admiralty or Admiralty Jurisdiction; but that is not [552] material, for if the case was tried in the Admiralty Jurisdiction the appeal ought to have been asserted, according to the old rules of the Admiralty Court, within fifteen days. The parties have stated in their petition that they asserted the appeal in accordance with the 35th rule of William the Fourth. The assertion was too late, and consequently the appellants had no right to appeal. Further, they appeared before the Registrar for the purpose of carrying out the order of the High Court in assessing the damages which they had sustained by the injury which had been done to the Brenhilda, and acted without protest. It is said that they were obliged to go before the Registrar; but they might have appealed and got an inhibition; or, if not, they might have appeared before the Registrar under protest. The owners of the Brenhilda took out the summons to compel the owners of the Ara to appear before the Registrar for the purpose of action under the decree of the High Court in assessing the amount of damages sustained by the owners of the Brenhilda. That of itself, according to the decision to which we have been referred, would be a sufficient ground for preventing the parties from appealing. Their Lordships, therefore, think that the owners of the Brenhilda have not put themselves into a position to appeal, as a matter of right, against the decision of the High Court. The question before their Lordships is not whether they should recommend Her Majesty to grant an appeal as a special matter of favour. That they could do only if a petition were presented to Her Majesty, and referred to the Judicial Committee to report their opinion thereon.

It is unnecessary to do more than set aside the petition of appeal; upon that being done, the relaxation of the inhibition will issue as a matter of course. Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly report to Her Majesty that the petition of appeal ought to be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of this motion and of the appeal.

[553] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Field.

GOPEE NATH ACHARJE (Defendant) v. ACHCHA BIBEE (Plaintiff).
 [5th July, 1881.]

Execution—Attachment by more than one Judgment-creditor of Property of Judgment-debtor in Court—Priority—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 272 and 295.

In execution of a decree of a Munsif's Court, the plaintiff attached certain money, the proceeds of decrees which her judgment-debtor had obtained against third parties, then lying in a Small Cause Court to her credit, and subsequently obtained an order from the Munsif directing the same to be paid to her in satisfaction of her decree, which order was duly communicated to the Small Cause Court Judge. Subsequently, the defendant, who held another decree against the same judgment-debtor, attached the same sale-proceeds. The Small Cause Court Judge then proceeded, under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code, to enquire whether the plaintiff was entitled to any priority over the second attaching creditor, and having decided that question in the negative, divided the sale-proceeds rateably between them. In a suit brought by the plaintiff, under the above circumstances, to recover from the defendant the portion of the sale-proceeds so paid to him,—

Held, that s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not applied to the Small Cause Court Judge to execute her decree, and it had never been transferred to that Court for execution; and that the proviso in s. 272 is merely intended to mean that any question of title or priority is to be determined by the Court in which, or in whose custody, the property is, and not by the Court which made the order of attachment.

Held, also, that, previous to the order by the Munsif directing the payment to be made to the plaintiff, the Small Cause Court Judge would have had jurisdiction to deal with the question he had tried; but, as that order was made prior to the attachment by the defendant, the judgment-debtor had no interest in the money which could be so attached, the effect of that order being to vest the property in the money in the plaintiff, and to take it out of [554] the disposal of the Small Cause Court Judge, and consequently the order for distribution was wrong, and plaintiff was entitled to the decree she sought.

Quære.—Whether an order made by a Court under s. 272 was intended by the Legislature to be a final order?

[F., 21 C. 200 (204); Appr., 6 M. 357 (359).]

IN this case the plaintiff held a money-decree of the Munsif's Court against one Gaida Bibee, and the defendant held a similar decree of the

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 798 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Omirto Lall Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 17th February 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Rajendro Coomar Bose, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 9th September 1879.

Small Cause Court against the same Gaida Bibee. Gaida Bibee had obtained in the same Small Cause Court other decrees against other persons, and having executed those decrees, she had certain property sold, the proceeds of which were in deposit in the Small Cause Court.

The plaintiff executed her decree of the Munsif's Court and attached the sale-proceeds which were in deposit in the Court of Small Causes upon the execution of Gaida Bibee's decree; and after an order of attachment had been issued in the manner provided by s. 272 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there was a further order made by the Munsif on the 25th January, and communicated by the Munsif to the Small Cause Court Judge, directing the payment of the sale-proceeds to the plaintiff. Subsequent to this, the defendant executed his decree against Gaida Bibee in the Small Cause Court, and attached the same surplus sale-proceeds which had already been attached by the plaintiff, and in respect of which the further order of the 25th January had been procured at the instance of the plaintiff. The Small Cause Court Judge then proceeded under the proviso to s. 272 to enquire whether the plaintiff was entitled to the whole of the surplus sale-proceeds or to a part only; in other words, whether the defendant was entitled to participate therein rateably; and he came to the conclusion that the sale-proceeds ought to be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant; and he divided them accordingly. The plaintiff then brought the present suit in the Munsif's Court to recover from the defendant that portion of the sale-proceeds which had been paid over to him under the order of the Small Cause Court Judge; and contended that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to make the order in question, and that he (the plaintiff) having first attached these surplus sale-proceeds, and [555] having procured the order of the 25th January for payment of the money over to him, was entitled to the whole of that money.

Both the lower Courts gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohil Chunder Bose, for the appellant.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

PRINSEP, J. (who, after stating the facts as above, continued):— Both the lower Courts have given the plaintiff a decree; and we are of opinion that this decree is correct. We do not concur in much that the Subordinate Judge has said in his judgment on the question of equity; and much of the law quoted by the Subordinate Judge has no application to a case of this kind. It may be proper to observe also that s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to a case of this kind. That section applies only where the decree-holders have all applied to the same Court for execution of their decrees. Now, in this case, the plaintiff did not apply to the Small Cause Court Judge for execution of her decree, seeing that that decree was a decree of the Munsif, and had never been transferred into the Small Cause Court for execution. Then, with reference to s. 272, we think that the Subordinate Judge has taken a proper view of the proviso, which is merely intended to mean that any question of title or priority is to be determined by the Court in which, or in the custody of which, the property is, and not by the Court which made the order of attachment. We think that so long as the order of attachment was in force, and no further order was made, the Small Cause Court Judge would have had jurisdiction to deal with the question of title or priority between the decree-holders; but we think that, after the further order of the 25th January was made, he had no jurisdiction to deal with this question, seeing that the result of that order was to transfer to the plaintiff the amount in deposit; in other words, that the effect of this order [556] was to vest in the plaintiff the property in this money and take it out of the disposal of the Small Cause Court Judge. After that order had been carried out, the judgment-debtor, Gaida Bibee, ceased to have any interest in the money which could be attached by the defendant in execution of his decree. Whether an order made by the Court under the proviso of s. 272 was intended by the Legislature to be a final order, is a matter which we do not think it necessary to decide in the present case. It is sufficient for us to say that, under the particular circumstances of this case, the Small Cause Court Judge has no jurisdiction to proceed under the section at the time when he so proceeded. The decision of the lower Appellate Court will be confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

SREENATH GOOHO AND OTHERS (Decree-holders) v. YUSOOF KHAN
(Judgment-Debtor).^{*} [7th July, 1881.]

Execution-Proceedings—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 230, 235, 236 and 237.

In execution of a decree passed more than twelve years before the date of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), certain judgment-creditors applied for the attachment and sale of certain specified property belonging to their judgment-debtor, previous to the date on which the three years allowed for such execution, under s. 230, would have expired. Subsequently, after the three years had elapsed, they filed a fresh application, praying that certain other property of their judgment-debtor might be attached and sold in lieu of that specified in their former application, and that the latter might be released.

Held, that execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

Per PRINSEP, J.—Under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was intended by the Legislature that a decree-holder, seeking to execute a decree passed more than twelve years before, should have one opportunity to execute that decree, and that, if he fails to satisfy it on that application, any further application becomes barred.

[N.F., 8 A L.J. 1020; F., 6 A. 189 (190) (F.B.); R., 8 A. 419 (422); 132 P.L.R. 1904 = 76 P.R. 1904.]

[557] THE facts out of which this appeal arose were as follows:—The appellants, in execution of a decree, dated the 8th February 1865, filed a petition on the 20th September 1880, asking for the attachment and sale of certain immoveable properties therein specified, belonging to the respondent, their judgment-debtor. On the 12th November 1880, they filed a fresh application, in which they asked that certain properties other than those specified in their former application might be attached and sold, and that the properties attached under their first application might be released. Thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that this decree, which the applicants sought to execute, was barred on the 1st October 1880, under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, seeing that the application of the 20th September had been abandoned, and a wholly new application made on the 12th November. The execution-creditors, however, contended that the application of the 12th November was merely one in the execution-proceedings, and by way of amendment to that of the 20th September; and inasmuch as that application was within the period prescribed for limitation to take effect, they were entitled to the relief they sought. The Munsif held that this contention could not be supported, and that the application of the 20th September, though not formally struck off the file, was virtually so, and had been abandoned by the judgment-creditors, and consequently that the application of the 12th November could not be looked on as supplemental thereto, but that it was an entirely fresh attempt to execute the decree, and consequently that limitation applied, and the remedy was barred. The application was accordingly refused with costs, and this decision was upheld on appeal before the District Judge.

* Appeal from Order, No. 197 of 1881, against the order of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Judge of Dacca, dated the 9th April 1881, affirming the order of Baboo K. D. Chatterjee, Munsif of that district, dated the 22nd December 1880.

The judgment-creditors accordingly now specially appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose, for the appellants.

No one appeared for the respondent.

The judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—It is admitted that the decree under execution [558] in this case was passed more than twelve years ago. On the 20th September 1880, the decree-holders made an application under s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 to execute the decree, and simultaneously, by a separate petition, they filed a schedule of the properties which they wished to proceed against in order to realize the amount of their decree. On the 12th November 1880, they put in a fresh application, asking, as the District Judge says, “not that certain errors in the last preceding application for execution be corrected, but that the whole of the properties attached conformably thereto be released and certain other property specified in the form be attached in their stead.” If this application of the 12th November 1880 be regarded as a fresh application to execute, it is barred under s. 230 of the Code. If, however, the application of the 20th September be regarded as the application under which the decree-holders are now proceeding, they cannot enforce their decree as against this particular property. The appellants’ pleader, however, contends that having on the 20th September 1880, applied for execution of decree, they were at liberty to extend that application so as to include properties not mentioned in it, but any other property of the judgment-debtor which they should think fit to specify; in other words, the application having been made with a mind to proceed against certain properties, they should be at liberty to extend it for an unlimited period against other properties. It appears to us, that the object of s. 230 was to exclude applications of this nature, and that it was intended that the decree-holder, seeking to execute a decree passed more than twelve years before, should have one opportunity to execute that decree, and that, if he should fail to satisfy it on that application, any further application becomes barred. The order of the lower appellate Court will, therefore, be confirmed, and such confirmation notified in the usual manner.

FIELD, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 236 of the Code enacts: "Whenever an application is made for the attachment of any moveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor, but not in his possession, the decree-holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached." [559] Section 237 provides that "whenever an application is made for the attachment of any immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor, it shall contain at the foot a description of the property sufficient to identify it, &c." Now, it is quite clear that the application for attachment spoken of in these two sections is the application mentioned in s. 235, and that the above provisions are to be read with cl. (j) of s. 235. From this it appears to have been the intention of the Legislature that an inventory, or sufficient description, of the property sought to be attached, whether moveable or immoveable, should be attached to the application for execution mentioned in s. 235. In the case before us, if the application of the 19th November 1880 be treated as a substantive application under s. 235, it is, in the first place, defective in form; and, in the second place, it is barred by limitation, having been made after the twelve years mentioned in s. 230. But then it is contended that this application may be accepted by way of an application amending and supplementary to the original application of the 20th September 1880. I think that, from what I have just said, it is clear that an inventory of the property, when moveable, must be delivered into Court along with the application for execution under s. 235; and if this supplementary list of property were allowed to be put in after the expiration of the twelve years, the essential portion of the law would be practically defeated.

KRISHNA CHURN BAISACK AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. PROTAB CHUNDER SURMA, alias RAJENDRO LALL AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [4th July, 1881.]

Declaration of Title—Adverse Possession—Case made in Plaint—Summons to compel attendance of Witnesses—Summons to produce Documents, Refusal of—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 137.

Where a specific title has been alleged, but not proved, and the plaintiff endeavours to succeed in the first Court or second Court of Appeal upon a title by twelve years' adverse possession, he must be prepared to show that this other title by twelve years' adverse possession was raised in the Court of first instance with sufficient clearness, to enable his adversary to understand that he claimed to succeed as well by twelve years' adverse possession as by the specific title alleged.

In all cases in which parties apply for a summons to compel the attendance of witnesses, or a summons to produce documents, or apply to have a document sent for under s. 137 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court ought not to refuse such application, merely because in its opinion the witnesses cannot be present, or the documents cannot be produced, before the termination of the trial.

[F., 13 C.P.L.R. 152 (153) ; Appr., 16 A. 218 (219) = 14 A.W.N. 45.]

IN this case the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of a mirasi taluk, named Chupsara, on the allegations that one Gopal Pershad Thakur was the former owner of the property ; that he granted miras lease of it to his daughter Fulkumari, and that she was owner and in possession thereof ; that, on the 17th Jeyst 1276, corresponding with 19th May 1869, she sold it to the plaintiff's father, who entered on, and continued in, possession until his death, and that they (the plaintiffs) then entered into possession of it ; that the defendants instituted a suit against them in respect of this property, which was ultimately decided against them, the defendants, in the High Court ; but that notwithstanding this they applied to the Magistrate, who, attached the property under s. 531 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and directed [561] it to be let out in ijara ; and that, consequently, they were obliged to institute this suit to establish their right to, and recover possession of, the land. The defendants, among other pleas, contended that Gopal Pershad had no personal right in the property, which was debutter land devoted to the maintenance of the idol Lukhi Narain and to other religious purposes, and that he, consequently, could not alienate it ; that he did not really, and in good faith, execute the miras lease in favour of Fulkumari, and that she was never owner and in possession ; that, by the alleged miras patta set up by the plaintiffs, Fulkumari had only a life-tenure, and therefore could not transfer it ; that the plaintiffs' father never purchased it, and that neither he, nor the plaintiffs, had been in possession within twelve years previous to the institution of the suit, but that the property passed from Gopal Pershad Thakur to his son Kishen Pershad Surma, alias Raja Babu, and ultimately to the defendant Protab Chunder, who had been in possession for a long time ; that Raja Babu was a man of immoral character and extravagant habits, and that even if a miras patta had been granted and Raja Babu had admitted it, they were not bound by his acts, as they were not his personal representatives, but his successors in the post of shebait.

The miras patta was not produced at the hearing. The Subordinate Judge found that the miras title had not been established, but gave the plaintiffs a decree, holding that they had been a long time in possession, and that, in addition, they were in the possession of bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration. On appeal, the District Judge was also of opinion that the miras title had not been established, and proceeded to dispose of the question of title by twelve years' possession, and held that, on this ground also, the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed, but he did not specifically deal with the question as to whether or not they were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration. He, accordingly, reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs now specially appealed to the High Court against that decision.

the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under that proceeding the present plaintiffs were, as they allege, turned out of possession, and they have brought this suit to recover possession, alleging the following title: They say that the property originally belonged to one Gopal Pershad Thakur, who granted a miras lease of it to his daughter, Fulkumari. In the plaint the date of this lease is not given, but from subsequent proceedings it appears that the date is Aghran 1244, corresponding with December 1837. They then say that Fulkumari was in possession of this property under this lease, and that, on the 7th Jeyst 1276, corresponding with 17th May 1869, she sold it to the plaintiffs' father, who obtained possession, and that the plaintiffs succeeded him in possession, and remained in possession until they were ousted by the proceedings under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the miras title had not been established, but he thought that, as the plaintiffs had been for a long time in possession, they ought to recover in this suit; and he further expressed an opinion that the plaintiffs are in the position of bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration.

Now, with reference to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs had been in possession for a long time, we think that a judicial officer of the standing of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar ought to be well aware, that this indefinite language and the indefinite form in which the fifth issue was framed are wholly inadequate for a judicial decision upon a question of title. In consequence of this indefinite language and of the inexact form of the fifth issue, a considerable amount of unprofitable discussion has arisen in this Court upon a point which is sufficiently simple.

The District Judge, on appeal, was also of opinion, that the miras title had not been established. For this finding he has [563] given a number of reasons, in all of which we are not prepared to concur. It is not, however, necessary for us to enter specifically into these reasons, because we think that there are some of them upon which his finding in respect of the miras patta as a finding of fact can properly be supported.

The District Judge then proceeded to consider the question of title by twelve years' possession, and he was of opinion, upon certain authorities which he has quoted, that the plaintiffs ought not to be allowed to succeed upon a title by twelve years' adverse possession, because this title had not been set out with sufficient distinctness in their plaint.

Now the question here raised is one upon which there are numerous decisions of this Court, which, unless carefully examined, may appear to be conflicting; but what these decisions really come to appear to us to be this, that where a specific title has been alleged but not proved, and the plaintiff endeavours to succeed in the first Court or second Court of Appeal upon a title by twelve years' adverse possession, he must be prepared to show that this other title by twelve years' adverse possession was raised in the Court of first instance with sufficient clearness to enable his adversary to understand that he claimed to succeed as well by twelve years' adverse possession as by the specific title alleged. Now, if we apply this principle to the present appeal, it appears to us that there is little to distinguish this case from that of Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (1). Mr. Justice Markby there says:—"It is quite clear that when a plaintiff claims a title upon twelve years' possession, he must draw the attention of the defendant to the fact that he is going to claim a declaration upon that title, in order that the defendant may give his own evidence and scrutinize the evidence of the plaintiff upon that point, and see whether possession for twelve years is proved, and whether he can contradict it during any portion of that period." And then, referring to the particular facts of that case, he says in a further portion of his judgment:— "The plaintiff says that he has not been himself in possession for much more than eleven years, and though he is, no doubt, entitled to join the possession of [564] his vendor to his own possession, yet he has not given the date when his vendor came into possession, nor does he even make the general allegation that the possession of his vendor, coupled with his own possession, would amount to a period of twelve years." In the case before us the date of the original miras patta has not been given, and there is no general allegation that the possession of Fulkumari under the miras patta, if added to the possession of the plaintiffs and their father under the kobala, would altogether make up a period of twelve years' adverse possession, which would constitute a good title. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that, so far as regards this second title of twelve years' adverse possession, we ought not to interfere with the judgment of the District Judge.

The District Judge did not distinctly deal with the question as to whether the plaintiffs were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration. He says in the ninth paragraph of his judgment, that a certain decision of the Privy Council, in the case of Ram Koomar Koondoo v. McQueen (1), has been quoted in support of the contention raised before him, and "no doubt it is a sound one;" but when he reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon four grounds which he has set out at considerable length, he did not proceed to show on what grounds the plaintiffs, if bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration, ought to fail in this case, the miras patta not having been proved.

Then, as to the title under the miras patta, it is contended before us, and we think with reason, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order in their favour upon the application made by them to the Subordinate Judge to have the original miras patta sent for, this patta being on the Collectorate record. It appears that this patta was mentioned in the list of documents annexed to the plaint; that an application was made on the 4th June to have the original patta sent for from the Collectorate; and that the Subordinate Judge refused this application, because the examination of witnesses had already commenced.

The District Judge observes that the examination of the witnesses was concluded on the following day,—that is, the 5th June. Now it is quite possible that, if the Subordinate Judge, [565] had, on the 4th June, complied with this request and sent for the patta from the Collectorate, it would have been produced in Court before him before the trial was terminated or the plaintiffs had closed their case.

We think that, as a general rule, in all cases in which parties apply for a summons to compel the attendance of witnesses, or a summons to produce documents, or apply to have a document sent for under s. 137 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court ought not to refuse such application, merely because, in its opinion, the witnesses cannot be present, or the documents cannot be produced, before the termination of the trial. In this case there was very grave negligence on the part of the plaintiffs in not applying to have this document sent for at an earlier stage; and the Subordinate Judge would have been perfectly justified in saying that, in consequence of this negligence, he would refuse to grant an adjournment of the case, in order to enable the plaintiffs to do that which they ought to have done at an earlier stage. But we think that the Court was not justified in refusing to send for the document, and so denying to the plaintiffs an opportunity which might perhaps have been fruitful and favourable to them. For these reasons we think that the case ought to be remanded, and that the Subordinate Judge ought now to send for the original patta. When that patta is produced before him, it will be necessary to decide whether the miras title alleged by the plaintiffs has been established by the patta. He must then proceed to consider whether this miras interest is transferable, and must reconsider his decision on this point. When these findings of fact are sent by the Subordinate Judge to the lower appellate Court, that Court will pronounce its own decision thereupon, and will further proceed to dispose of the question whether the plaintiffs are in the position of bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration, and, as such, entitled to hold this property, even if the miras patta is not proved, and even if the miras interest should not be found to be transferable. If Fulkumari was allowed by the defendants to hold herself out to the world as the owner of a transferable interest in the property, and so to mislead the plaintiffs, it will be necessary to consider whether the [566] defendants are now estopped by their conduct from saying that she had no such interest. We think that, having regard to the culpable delay made by the plaintiffs in applying to the Court to have the miras patta sent for, no costs of this appeal ought to be allowed. As to the costs of the lower Courts, they will abide the final result of the case.

MAHOMED AMEER AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. PERYAG SINGH
AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [2nd June, 1881.]

Suit for Cancellation of Mokurari Lease—Forfeiture—Equitable Relief against Forfeiture—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 52—Act X of 1859, s. 78.

Where, in a mokurari lease, there was a condition, that, in case of non-payment of one year's rent, and its falling into arrears, the mokurari settlement was to be cancelled, and default was made and a suit for ejectment was brought,—

Held, that, independently of the Rent Act, the defendants should be allowed in equity a reasonable time to pay the landlord's dues in order to prevent forfeiture.

Mothoora Mohan Pal Chowdhry v. Ram Lall Bose (1) followed.

Held also, that the provisions of s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, are exactly similar to those of s. 28 of Act X of 1859, and applicable to the case of a mokurari lease; and, therefore, that a decree passed in conformity therewith, which allowed fifteen days for the payment of the arrears of rent found due and interest thereon, was a good decree.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover arrears of rent, for the cancellation of a mokurari lease granted by them to the defendants and to recover possession of the lands, the subject-matter thereof. The lease contained a clause as follows—"In case of non-payment of one year's rent and its falling into [567] arrears, the mokurari settlement will be cancelled; and in that case, we, the declarants, the mokuraridars, or our heirs or representatives, shall have no claim to the nuzurana money." And the plaintiffs alleged in their plaint that the rent had fallen into arrears, and claimed Rs. 1,349-9-7½, which sum was made up of the rent, Rs. 593, for the year 1285, corresponding with the year 1877-78, arrears for previous years, and damages calculated at 25 per cent.; and further claimed that the defendants had no right to the return of Rs. 4,000 paid by them as nuzurana. The defendants, amongst other pleas, denied that the rent had fallen into arrears as stated, or that the sum claimed from them was due; but the Subordinate Judge found that the sum of Rs. 722-4-6 was due by them, and gave the plaintiffs a decree in accordance with the provisions of s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, directing that, unless that amount with interest at 12 per cent. from the date of the commencement of the accrual of the arrears up to the date of decree, was paid within fifteen days, the tenure should be avoided and the defendants ejected.

From that decree the plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, and urged that, the basis of the suit was not the provisions of s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, but the contract, the terms of which were contained in the mokurari lease, and that s. 52 had, therefore, no application. The lower Appellate Court, however, following Jan Ali Chowdhry v. Nittyannund Bose (1), which was decided under Act X of 1859, and holding that, so far as it affected the decision in that case, the law under Beng. Act VIII of 1869 had not been altered, upheld the decision of the lower Court, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

The plaintiffs, accordingly, now specially appealed to the High Court, and brought forward the same contentions as they had done in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J.—This suit was brought to recover arrears of rent and also for the cancellation of the defendants' mokurari tenure, this latter prayer being based upon the following provision in the mokurari patta:—"In the case of non-payment of one year's rent, and on its falling into arrears, the mokurari settlement will be cancelled; and in that case, we, the declarants, the mokuraridars, or our heirs or representatives, shall have no claim to the nuzurana money." The Court of first instance found that Rs. 722-4-6 was due to the plaintiffs, and as regards the claim for the cancellation of the mokurari patta, the decree provides that, "unless the amount, Rs. 722-5-6, with Rs. 12 per cent. interest from date of the commencement of the accrual of the arrears up to this day, be paid within fifteen days from this day, the tenure will be avoided and defendants ejected." That decree has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court. It has been contended before us, that, under the terms of the patta, the Courts below had no option but to decree that the defendants had forfeited the mokurari tenure. We do not think that this contention is valid.

We are supported in this view by the decision in the case of Mothoora Mohun Pal Chowdhry v. Ram Lall Bose (1). Pontifex, J., who delivered the judgment in that case, says:—"That the defendants," that is the tenants, "having insisted upon their equity to prevent forfeiture of the lease, provided they pay the whole of the arrears of rent according to the lease, and the costs which have been incurred in these proceedings, are entitled to rely upon such equity." Then he refers to certain decision of this Court taking a contrary view, which decisions have also been cited before us and relied upon; and after referring also to the Privy Council decision in Duli Chand v. Meher Chand Sahu (2), ruling that s. 52 of the Rent Law may be applicable to the case of a mokurari or any other kind of tenure of a perpetual nature, he goes on to say,— "We do not think it necessary to decide in this case whether or not the provisions of the Rent Law actually [569] apply, because we think that, even if they do not in terms apply, we are bound by analogy to that law to apply in favour of the defendants an equity similar to the equity there given. We, therefore, think that if the defendants pay the whole of the rent due up to the present time, with interest according to the stipulations of the original kabuliat and patta, and also pay all the costs of the proceedings in both this Court and of the Courts below, the plaintiffs ought not to have khas possession decreed to them." The decision of the lower Courts in this case is entirely in accordance with the principle laid down here. The District Judge says in one part of his judgment: "On the question of damages at Rs. 25 per cent. claimed by the plaintiffs, but disallowed by the lower Court, I agree with the lower Court in thinking that no special claim for damages has been made out; and that the plaintiffs are amply compensated for the want of punctuality on the part of the defendants by award of interest at 12 per cent. per annum." It is quite clear that the case cited above—Mothoora Mohun Pal Chowdhry v. Ram Lall Bose (1)—is an authority in support of the decree which has been passed in this case; but it seems to us further that the Privy Council case, referred to in that judgment, distinctly lays down that the provisions of s. 78 of Act X of 1859 apply to the case of a mokurari; and we entirely agree with the Judge that the provisions of s. 52 of the present Rent Act are exactly similar to those of s. 78 of Act X of 1859. In one of the cases relied upon by the learned pleader for the appellants, viz., Mumtaz Bibee v. Grish Chunder Chowdhry (3), Kemp, J., who delivered the judgment, says:—"Section 52 does not apply to the cases of taluqdars of the description of the defendants; and, therefore, the Full Bench Ruling, which has been quoted by the pleader for the appellant, to be found in the case of Ján Ali Chowdhry v. Nittyanund Bose (4), is not applicable to this case; that decision applies to the cases of ryots alone." It is clear from these observations that the decision in that case proceeded, not upon the ground that there is any difference between the provisions of s. 52 of the present Rent Act and of s. 78 of Act X [570] of 1859, but upon the ground that none of the provisions of either of those sections apply to the case of a taluqdar. But upon that point the ruling of the Privy Council in the case quoted above is just the contrary. We must, therefore, follow the Privy Council's decision quoted above. On both these grounds, viz., that, quite independently of the Rent Act, the defendants should be allowed, in equity, reasonable time to pay the landlords' dues in order to prevent forfeiture, and also upon the ground that the provisions of s. 52 of the Rent Act are applicable to this case, we think that the decrees of the lower Courts are correct.

Optional and Compulsory Registration—Priority of Registered over Unregistered Documents—Registration Acts (III of 1877), and (XX of 1866), s. 18.

Documents the registration of which is optional, executed previous to the Registration Act (III of 1877), will not, if unregistered, take effect against later registered documents.

S, the owner of a seven-annas share in certain property, on the 19th November 1866, sold a one-anna share thereof to A for Rs. 30, the bill-of-sale not being registered, as under the provisions of Act XX of 1866, s. 18, the registration thereof was optional. Subsequently, S sold the remaining six annas to other persons; and then on the 27th September 1876, sold another one-anna share in the same property to B for Rs. 104, the bill-of-sale with respect to this purchase being duly registered under the provisions of Act III of 1877. In a suit by A, who had never obtained possession of the one anna share he had purchased, against S, B, and the purchasers of the other six anna shares,—Held, that he was not entitled to succeed, as his bill-of-sale being unregistered was not entitled to priority over B's which had been duly registered.

[571] Lachman Das v. Dis Chundo (1) followed

Ogra Singh v. Ablakhi Kooer (2) discussed.

[F., 17 M. 304 (305).]

THE facts of this case were as follows :—Shib Chandra Chakravarti, the first defendant, owned a seven-anna share in Taluq Kismut Khamar Damawara, and he was ousted therefrom in the year 1270, corresponding with the year 1863, but recovered possession in the month of Pous 1280, corresponding with December 1872. During the time he was out of possession, the plaintiffs alleged that Shib Chandra sold to their father, Sheik Amir, since deceased, a one-anna share out of his seven annas, under a kobala, dated the 26th Kartic 1274, corresponding with the 19th of November 1866, the consideration-money being Rs. 30.

This kobala was not registered, as it was optional to register it under s. 18, Act XX of 1866, the Registration Act then in force; and its genuineness was disputed by the defendants.

Subsequently, between the years 1274 and 1283 (1866—1876) Shib Chandra sold his remaining six annas share in the property to the defendants, appellants, Sheik Mohaju and Sheik Budhya and others; and thus, assuming the sale to the plaintiffs' father to be a genuine one he had exhausted all his interest in the property. On the 24th Assin 1284, corresponding with the 27th September 1876, however, he sold another one-anna share in the same property to the two appellants, Sheik Mohaju and Sheik Budhya, for Rs. 140, and the bill-of-sale was duly registered under the Registration Act of 1877. It appeared that neither the plaintiffs, nor their father, had ever taken possession of the one-anna share alleged

The Munisif dismissed the suit, on the ground, amongst others, that the appellants' bill-of-sale having been registered, took precedence over the plaintiffs' which was unregistered; but on appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decision, holding that the appellants' purchase was a fraudulent one, and that the [572] plaintiffs' kobala was a genuine document, the registration of which was optional at the time of its execution; and that, therefore, the appellants' bill-of sale was not entitled to any priority over it, and consequently decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by TOTTENHAM, J. (who, after stating the facts, continued):— The first Court dismissed the case, holding that the (appellants') registered bill-of-sale took precedence of the unregistered one. The second Court reversed the decree and decreed the suit finding (although the point was not raised in the first Court or put in the form of an issue) that the appellants' purchase was fraudulent; and that, therefore, their bill-of-sale, though registered, could not be allowed priority over the plaintiffs' unregistered document.

We think that the case cannot be decided on the ground of fraud. There is, no doubt, a fraud committed when a person sells the same property twice over, but unless the second purchaser has notice of the first sale, it does not always follow that he is to be saddled with the consequences. Registration of sales has been established for the protection of purchasers, and though sales for small sums may or may not be registered, while sales for larger sums must be registered, a prudent purchaser would always register his purchase as a precautionary measure even if it was for a sum below Rs. 100.

It has generally been held that, prior to April 1877, when Act III of 1877 came into force, a document compulsorily registered did not take precedence of a document of which registration was optional: see Bholanath v. Baldeo (1), also Ogra Singh v. Ablakhi Kooer (2), and cases quoted therein; [573] but the present Act has effected a change in the law, and it must now be taken to be established that the principle laid down in these decisions no longer applies to documents governed by Act III of 1877. Henceforward, documents executed when the previous three Registration Acts were in force, will not, if unregistered, take effect against later registered documents: see Gunga Ram v. Bansi (3) and Lachman Das v. Dip Chand (4). This last case is a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad Court, and though it appears to be in conflict with the case of Ogra Singh v. Ablakhi Kooer (2), we still think that that case was correctly decided under the former law. It was not decided there that Act I of 1868, s. 6, protected a document executed when Act VIII of 1871 was in force against the provisions of Act III of 1877; but it was held that Act III of 1877 did not apply to the suit at all, as it was instituted while Act VIII of 1871 was in force.

NOBIN KRISHNA BOSE AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. MON MOHUN BOSE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).^{*} [3rd June, 1881.]

Voluntary Payment—Arrears of Rent—Mistake—Payment under a Mistake.

The plaintiffs, believing that they held a four-anna share, and the defendants the remaining twelve-anna share, in a patni, the revenue of which was in arrears, paid to the zemindar, on the 8th of March 1876, a portion of the arrears corresponding to the share in the patni to which they considered themselves entitled. It was afterwards decided, in a suit between the parties, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the patni, and that the defendants were entitled to the whole sixteen annas thereof. Subsequently to this decision, the defendants, in paying up the [574] arrears of revenue due on the patni, took the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 8th of March 1876, and paid in only so much as, together with the previous payment, made up the whole arrear. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover from the defendants the amount of the payment made to the zemindar on the 8th of March 1876.

Held, that the payment was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—In a certain patni, the jama of which was Rs. 2,011-8-10, the plaintiffs alleged that they held a four-annas share, and the defendants the remaining twelve annas; and that the jama which they had to pay was Rs. 504-14-2½. The defendants alleged that the plaintiffs had no interest whatever in the patni, but that they were darpatnidars of a four-annas share under them. In this state of matters the defendants, in 1874, instituted a suit against the plaintiffs to recover certain arrears of the rent of the alleged darpatni. In that suit the extent of jama for which the plaintiffs were liable, namely, Rs. 504-14-2½, was not disputed, nor was there any dispute as to the amount of arrears claimed. The only question was, whether the plaintiffs were some of the patnidars, as they claim to be, or darpatnidars, as the defendants alleged them to be. The Munsif who tried that case dismissed it, on the ground that the plaintiffs were not darpatnidars, but the holders of a four-anna share in the patni mehal. That decree was dated the 29th of March 1875. The defendants appealed, and the cause was remanded. The Munsif who tried the case after the order of remand found, that the plaintiffs and the defendants were descendants of a common ancestor, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a four-anna share of the patni; but he decreed the claim of the defendants, on the ground that the plaintiffs had always paid their rent through the holder or holders of the twelve annas share. That decree was dated the 2nd of May 1876. Before this decree was made, the plaintiffs, on the 8th of March 1876, paid to the zemindar the sum of Rs. 225 on account of their proportion of certain arrears of revenue then due on the patni mehal.

[575] Two appeals were preferred against the decree of the 2nd of May 1876,—one by the defendants against the finding that the plaintiffs were entitled to a four-anna share in the patni, and the other by the plaintiffs against the decretal order. These two appeals were disposed of in favour of the defendants, and then there was a special appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court. It was ultimately decided in that suit that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the patni, but were merely darpatnidars of the four annas share of the mouza.

Though the revenue of the patni was in arrear at the time of the payment to the zemindar in March 1876, yet it did not appear that any steps had been taken by the zemindar to recover it. The defendants afterwards proceeded to pay the revenue, but, finding that a portion had been previously paid by the plaintiffs, they paid in only the additional sum required to make up the total amount then in arrears. After this, and after the final decree in the suit of 1874, had settled the respective positions of the parties, the plaintiffs repeatedly demanded from the defendants the sum paid by them to the zemindar; and in consequence of their refusal to pay, the present suit was instituted on the 7th of March 1879. The defence was that the payment was a voluntary one and made for the purpose of being used as evidence in the suit of 1874. The Munsif dismissed the suit, but this decision was reversed on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, who found on the facts that the plaintiffs had paid the money to the zemindar bona fide, believing that they were entitled to a four-anna share in the patni. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the appellants.—The defendants are not liable for this money. The payment was made by the plaintiffs not for the purpose of paying a debt of the defendants', but for paying a debt of the plaintiffs' own. The payment was made prematurely—Luckhee Kant Doss v. Ship Chunder Chuckerbutty (1); and being purely voluntary, cannot be recovered; Mussamut Ashibun v. Baboo Ram Prosad Das (2), Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswur Lall Sahoo (3). Section 69 of [576] the Contract Act is in my favour. [GARTH, C. J.—If the money was paid to the landlord by mistake, as the Court below finds, the plaintiffs could recover it from the landlord. Now you have adopted the payment made to the landlord as if it had been made by yourself. This is not money paid to your use. Baboo Hemchander Banerjee for the respondents was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MCDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—This is a suit for the recovery of Rs. 225 from the defendants under these circumstances:

The plaintiffs had sued the defendants to recover possession of four annas of a patni estate, of which the defendant claimed the whole, and were admittedly entitled to the other twelve annas. The real question in that suit was, whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the four annas as patnidars, or whether they held them as darpartnidars, the defendants being the holders of the whole patni.

In that suit the plaintiffs got a decree as patnidars in the first Court; but on appeal the case was remanded for some further evidence to be taken. In that state of things, and whilst the plaintiffs bona fide believed themselves to be entitled to the four annas, they paid into the zemindar's sherista Rs. 225 on account of the revenue for that share. But as it was eventually decided that the plaintiffs held the four annas, not as patnidars, but as darpatnidars, it turned out that the Rs. 225 was paid for the defendants benefit, and as part of their revenue to the Government; so the plaintiffs brought this suit to recover from the defendants that sum.

The first Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, on the ground (amongst others) that it was paid in bad faith, with the object of making evidence of their alleged patni right.

The Subordinate Judge, in a very careful judgment, has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' claim should be decreed, [577] on the ground (amongst others) that, in making this payment, the plaintiffs believed themselves interested in doing so.

We think that this conclusion of the Subordinate Judge may be properly confirmed, though we doubt whether his judgment can be supported upon the grounds which he mentions. We think that his conclusion may be supported upon this principle that where a payment is made by one person for the benefit of another, and that other afterwards adopts that payment, and avails himself of it, the sum becomes money paid for his use.

The plaintiffs, bona fide believing themselves to be the owners of the four annas share, paid the revenue of it to the zemindar. The defendants then paid the revenue on the remaining twelve annas; when they did so, they must have found that the revenue on the four annas had been paid by the plaintiffs; and they availed themselves of that payment by the plaintiffs, only paying, or offering to pay, to the zemindar, the revenue on the remaining twelve annas. We think that, under these circumstances, the Rs. 225 so paid by the plaintiffs became money paid to the use of the defendants; and that the judgment of the Court below can be supported upon that ground. No doubt the justice of the case is entirely with the plaintiffs.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

PARBATI CHURN DEB (Plaintiff) v. AIN-UD-DEEN AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [31st May, 1881.]Co-Sharers—Partition—Portion of an Estate—Parties.

The owner of a twelve annas share in a joint zemindari granted to the plaintiff a mokurari lease of his share in small portion of land within the zemindari. The owners of the remaining four annas share granted a patni of his share in the whole zemindari to the defendants. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for partition of the small plot of land.

[578] Held, that such a suit would not lie because the zemindars were not made parties; and also that a partition could not be enforced of a part of the estate held by the defendants, who, if the plaintiff's claim was allowed, might in respect of the same estate be subjected to many claims for partition at the suit of persons in the plaintiff's position.

IN this case it appeared, that one Monwar Ali was a twelve annas share-holder in a certain undivided zemindari, the remaining four annas of which were held by certain persons known as the heirs of Nasiruddin. On the 4th of August 1877, Monwar Ali gave to the plaintiff a mokurari lease of a certain plot of land within the zemindari, which plot was defined by metes and bounds, and was in extent about one-fiftieth of the whole zemindari. The whole zemindari being joint, this lease, of course, only covered twelve annas of the rents and profits of the plot of land. The heirs of Nasiruddin had given a patni of their four annas share of the whole zemindari to the defendants; and this suit, which was for partition, was instituted, on the 13th of November 1878, by the plaintiff, the mokuraridar of the twelve annas share of the small plot, against the defendants, the patnidars of the four annas share of the whole estate. The suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance, on the ground, that the plaintiff, being interested in a fractional part of the estate only, could not sue the co-sharers of the whole estate for a partition. This decision was upheld on appeal by the Subordinate Judge, the material portion of whose judgment is as follows:—"The plaintiff and defendants are not sharers in the same tenure under one and the same proprietor. Their tenures are separate, under different proprietors. The law says, that a sharer may sue for partition. As neither the plaintiff is the sharer of the patni held by the defendants, nor the defendants are the sharers of the mokurari tenure held by the plaintiff, I consider that the plaintiff has got no power in him to call upon the defendants by notice to join him in apportioning the lands of two separate tenures. Such a partition will, in fact, be a partition between the proprietor of a twelve annas share and the proprietors of a four annas share in the zemindari, and this cannot be done in a suit in which they are not parties. There is also another difficulty [579] of assorting the jama of each of the two shares. To allow the plaintiff to hold separately a certain portion of the lands as lands of the twelve annas share, while the proprietors of the two shares hold all other lands jointly, is to annihilate the right of the proprietors of four annas share thereto. Neither has the proprietor of the twelve annas share authorized the plaintiff, nor have the proprietors of the four annas share given power to the defendants, by express terms, in the pattas, to make a partition between them. The appeal is dismissed with costs." The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Joy Gobind Shome for the appellant.—The learned Judge was wrong in holding that this suit could not be maintained; the case is on all fours with that of Rani Samasundari Debi v. Jardine, Skinner and Co. (1); see also Ram Pershad Narain Tewaree v. The Court of Wards (2).

Moonshi Serajul Islam for the respondents.—This suit is not maintainable. A partition of a portion of a share cannot be had, unless all the portions are included in the suit. The person who bought the interest of the zamindar in one plot cannot compel a partition of that plot alone; the zemindar could not do it, and a purchaser from him has no higher rights than he himself could have. In Rani Samasundari's case (1), the whole sixteen annas were divided; and in Ram Prasad Narain Tewaree v. The Court of Wards (2) all the parties were before the Court. In this case the titles under which the parties hold are distinct and separate. The respondents are not joint with the appellant. [The cases of Baboo Lalljeet Singh v. Baboo Raj Coomar Singh (3) and Ruttun Monee Dutt v. Brij Mohun Dutt (4) were referred to.]

Baboo Joy Gobind Shome in reply.—The patnis in Rani Samasundari's case (1) were given by different parties as in this case; and, as in that case, the owners of the whole sixteen annas of the plot of which we seek partition are before the Court. It is not necessary that the interest of each party should extend [580] to the whole estate in order to get partition: Suppose there were twenty zemindaries, why should not the mokuraridar of one or more get a partition if he pleased? The zemindar's rights do not limit ours; these are all the lands we hold jointly with the defendants, and we are entitled to a partition of them.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for a partition, and the facts are these: Monwar Ali is the owner of an undivided twelve annas share in a mouza, and Ali Kasim and others are entitled to the remaining four annas. The defendants have obtained a patni of the four annas share, and the plaintiff has obtained from Monwar Ali a mokurari, of a small portion of the twelve annas share. Under this mokurari, he has an undivided twelve annas share in a small area of a mouza. The entire mouza held in joint possession consists of upwards of 100 drones of land; and the portion in which the plaintiff has a twelve-anna share is less than two drones. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff sues the defendants for a partition,—that is to say, he prays to have the small area in which he has a twelve annas share divided as between him and the four annas patnidar. Either of the zemindars is made a party to the suit; and the defendants object that, in point of law the plaintiff is not entitled to the partition.

Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Munsif has dismissed it upon the ground, that the lessee of twelve annas of part of the joint estate has no right to a partition against a lessee of four annas of the entire estate; and also, that if such a partial partition were allowed between tenure-holders of portions of entire properties, it would lead to great expense and inconvenience. The Subordinate Judge gives several reasons for his decision. He says,—first, that the plaintiff and defendants are not sharers in the same tenures under the same proprietors. They have separate tenures under different proprietors; and that, as the plaintiff is not a sharer in the defendants' patni, nor the defendants sharers in the plaintiff's mokurari, neither party has a right to enforce a [581] partition against the other; secondly, he says that such a partition would be an unlawful interference with the rights of the zemindars, that they are not made parties to the suit, and that such a partition cannot be made without their concurrence; and thirdly, he considers that to allow the four annas share to be thus sub-divided would be injurious to the four annas patnidar.

It has been argued here, on special appeal, that a partition may legally be enforced as between tenure-holders of the same zemindari, as long as between them they are entitled to the whole sixteen annas in the particular area sought to be partitioned, and that it is no objection to such a partition that the parties hold separate tenures under separate owners of the zemindari. It is said that partition would not affect the rights of the zemindars, either inter se or as against their respective lessees, and it would only be in force during the lessees' interest. If either the defendants' patni or the plaintiff's mokurari were to determine, the partition would be at an end.

We think that the judgment of the lower Courts should be confirmed, for the following reasons:—

First, that a partition of this kind cannot legally be enforced without the zemindars being made parties to the suit, and secondly, that a partition cannot be enforced of a part of the estate held by the defendants. The defendants are entitled, by right of their patni, to an undivided four annas share in a large estate of 100 drones; and if the plaintiff was entitled to compel a partition as against the defendants of an area of two drones only, the defendants might, in respect of the same estate, be subjected to forty or fifty claims for partition at the suit of forty or fifty different persons, each of whom is in the plaintiff's position, and might be put to great expense in consequence of his estate being divided into forty or fifty separate areas.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

In a suit by a landlord against his tenant for arrears of rent due for portion of the year 1283 (1876), the defendant pleaded payment and called as his witness the plaintiff's agent, who admitted the receipt of certain payments from the defendant's under-tenants during the time for which the arrears were demanded; but swore that they were payments made in respect of arrears due on account of previous years. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of first instance gave the defendant credit for the payments so admitted.

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong: that the defendant having pleaded payment was bound to prove that the admitted payments were in respect of that portion of the year 1283 for which the arrears were claimed.

Section 12 of the Rent law applies to receipts given directly by the landlord to the tenant, and not to receipts given to third persons.

THIS was a suit by a landlord against his tenant, instituted in the Revenue Court of the Assistant Commissioner of Pachamba, under cl. 4, s. 23, Act X of 1859, and s. 12, Act VI of 1862, for the recovery of Rs. 1,000 as principal, and Rs. 250 damages, being arrears of rent for the year 1283 (1876). The defence was, that the plaintiff collected the rent claimed from the defendant's under-tenants, and the plaintiff's agent was called as a witness for the defendant. He admitted payment of certain sums from under-tenants in 1283 (1876), but stated they were not paid on account of rent for 1283 (1876), but for the previous year. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for the full amount claimed with costs, on the ground that the defendant had failed to prove the payments alleged by him.

[583] The defendant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, who gave him a decree for the sums paid in 1283 (1876). The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Sandel for the appellant.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We think that the lower Appellate Court has made a very serious mistake in this case in finding in favour of the defendant upon the plea of payment, without any evidence whatever to support that finding.

It was not denied that a certain sum for rent had become due to the plaintiff from the defendant for the year 1283, but the defendant's plea was that those sums had been paid. The onus was entirely upon the defendant to prove this plea, but instead of going into the witness-box himself, or at any rate calling his agent in order to prove the payments, (which, if the pleas were true, they could readily have done), what the defendant did was this: He called the plaintiff's agent as his own witness, and he produced certain receipts of sums which had been paid in 1283; and the plaintiff's agent was then asked whether those sums were not received. The plaintiff's agent acknowledged that they were received, but not in payment of rent for the year 1283. He stated that they were paid for the previous year, 1282. That is really the only evidence that was given upon the subject. It directly negatives the defendant's case; and yet, strange to say, the Judge has found in the defendant's favour. The very fact of the defendant and his agent not coming into the witness-box afforded of itself a strong presumption against the truth of the defendant's case. If the payments were really made for the year 1283, no one could know it better than the defendant and his agent, and there does not appear the least reason why one or both of them should not have been called. Instead of that the defendant chooses [584] to call the plaintiff's agent; and the plaintiff's agent proved the case against him.

It does not at all follow, because certain sums were paid to the plaintiff in the year 1283, that they were therefore paid for the rent of the year 1283. The Judge himself says, that the accounts between the plaintiff and the defendant appear to have been kept in a very loose manner, and that there is no doubt that Khajah Mahomed Jan, who is the plaintiff's agent, was allowed to receive rent from the under-tenants, and to place it to the defendant's credit. This circumstance made it, in our opinion, the more necessary, that the defendant's plea of payment should have been strictly proved; instead of which, all that appears is this. It is shown by certain receipts, A, B, and C, that the plaintiff's agent received from under-tenants of the defendant in the year 1283 certain rents due from those under-tenants for the same year; but it does not at all follow that the defendant's rent, in payment of which those sums were received from the under-tenants, was the rent due for the year 1283. If he had not in fact paid his rent for the year 1282, the sums received from the under-tenants would have been properly credited to the rent of the year 1282.

The defendant has no right to abstain from offering (either by himself or his agent) any evidence or information to the Court, and then to call the plaintiff's agent as a witness, and ask the Court to discredit him when he disproves his case.

Then the Judge seems to think, that, because in the receipts which the plaintiff gave, the year was not stated in respect which the rent was paid that raises a presumption against the plaintiff that the rent was paid for the year in which the payment was made. We entirely dissent from this view. In the first place, we think that s. 12 of the Rent Law, to which the Judge refers, applies to receipts given directly by the landlord to the tenant, and not to receipts given by the landlord to third persons, who probably would not understand anything of the state of accounts as between the landlord and his tenant; and in the next place, the fact of the landlord not stating in respect of what year the payment is made, cannot raise any presumption in favour of the tenant, that the rent was paid in respect [585] of any particular year. The tenant himself should take care, when he makes the payment, that the receipt is in the proper form. If he does not see to that, he has no right to ask the Court to presume anything in his favour from the omission in the receipt.

The case will be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to be re-tried with reference to these observations; and the Judge will be at liberty to receive further evidence on either side.

Case remanded.

As a rule, ryots having a right of occupancy in such land, and the holders of the permanent interest next above the occupancy ryots, are the persons entitled to the larger portion of the compensation-money.

The principles on which compensation-money should be apportioned among the different holders discussed and explained.

IN this case it appeared that the Raja of Burdwan granted a patni lease of certain zemindari in the district of Dinagepore to Roy Dhunput Singh ; who granted a darpatni lease thereof to one Godadhar Dass on the 6th February 1868. A portion of this land, amounting to about five bighas, was taken up by the Government for public purposes under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, X of 1870 ; and the question in this case was, how the money which was awarded by the Government should be apportioned. The kabuliati given by [586] the darpatnidar to the patnidar on the 6th of February 1868 provided, that "should any land included in the lot, be taken by Government when required, or should it be included in the road, in that case you will allow me a deduction of the rent-jama for that portion of the land, if you get deduction from the patni-jama of the zemindar for the same ; I have no concern with the consideration-money paid." The District Judge of Dinagepore, whose judgment was as follows, awarded the whole of the compensation to the patnidar :—

"This reference has arisen from the acquisition of certain land for railway purposes. The parties claiming interest in the land have agreed to the amount of compensation awarded, and the question for determination is the apportionment of that amount between these claimants—the zemindar, the patnidar, and the darpatnidar. The zemindar's interest in the land is not affected so long as he receives the rent reserved by his lease. His security for this rent is not appreciably lessened, since only a small fraction of the tenure has been taken up, and the amount of rent cannot be lessened, as the patnidar, through his pleader, undertakes to make no claim for remission. The zemindar can, therefore, lose nothing ; and has, in consequence, no just claim to any part of the compensation. On similar grounds, it is argued, that the patnidar has no claim as against the darpatnidar, and that the latter should receive the entire amount awarded ; but this is stated on the part of the patnidar to be opposed to a special provision of the darpatni lease. The clause so relied on runs as follows: 'If any land belonging to the estate is taken up for roads, or at the necessity of Government, and in case of your having an abatement in the rent of the said land in the patni dowl jama from the zemindar, you shall have to allow me too a reduction accordingly. I have no concern with the price.' For the patnidar it is contended, that the word 'price' here means the price paid by Government for land taken up, while for the darpatnidar the word is said to mean the price paid for the darpatni lease to the patnidar. The latter construction does not appear to me to be admissible. The darpatnidar could not well say he would have no concern with the price he was paying, and there being [587] no reference in the immediate context to this price, it would scarcely be referred to thus briefly as 'the price.' The word naturally refers to the land supposed in the same sentence to be taken up by Government, and the darpatnidar must be considered to have waived any claim to the price of that land. By virtue then of his special contract with the darpatnidar, the patnidar is entitled to the compensation awarded, and will receive the whole of this amount with his costs in equal proportion from the zemindar and the darpatnidar." The latter appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar, for the appellant, argued that all the compensation ought to have been awarded to the darpatnidar, as he was the person solely affected and that the Court below was wrong in its construction of the darpatni lease.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee and Babbo Srinath Das, for the respondent argued that, under the general law, the patnidar was entitled to the abatement—Horokissen Bannerjee v. Joy Kissen Mookerjee (1), Deen Dyal Lal v. Mussamut Thukroo Koonwar (2) Raye Kissory Dasse v. Nilcant Day (3); Sreenath Mookerjee v. Maharajah Mahatap Chand Bahadoor (4), Gordon, Stuart and Co. v. Maharajah Mahatab Chand Bahadoor (5); and that there was nothing in the darpatni lease to take away the patnidar's legal right.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We think that the District Judge has taken an erroneous view of the rights of the parties. The amount in question is inconsiderable; but the principle upon which the case depends is an important one; and as we had some doubt whether the view which we were at first disposed to take was correct, we have had the case argued a second time.

[588] Under the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, the Government took a small piece of land, containing rather more than four bighas in the district of Dinagepore, for the purposes of the Northern Bengal-State Railway. The agreed amount of compensation in respect of the whole of this land was Rs. 104-4-9, and three claimants only appeared—the Raja, who was the zemindar, the patnidar, and the darpatnidar. The District Judge held, that so long as the zemindar continued to receive from the patnidar his entire rent under the patta, without any abatement in respect of the land in question, his interests would not be affected; and as at the hearing of the case in the Court below the patnidar undertook, through his pleader, to pay the whole rent to the zemindar, without diminution, the District Judge held, that the zemindar was entitled to no part of the compensation.

(1) 1 W.R. 299.

(2) 6 W. R. Act X, Rul. 24.

(3) 20 W.R. 370.

(4) S.D.A. (1860), 308.

(5) Marshall 490.

Then, as regards the darpatnidar, the District Judge held, that, under a particular clause in the darpatni patta, he was disentitled to any compensation. That clause ran as follows :—

“ If any land belonging to the estate is taken up for roads, or at the necessity of Government, and in case of your having an abatement in the rent of the said land in the patni dowl jama from the zemindar, you shall have to allow me too a reduction accordingly. I have no concern with the price.”

The only question which appears to have been raised in the Court below with reference to this clause, was as to the meaning of the word ‘price.’ The patnidar contended that it meant the compensation paid by the Government for the land taken; whilst the darpatnidar contended, that it meant the price or premium paid by him to the patnidar for his darpatni. Upon this point the Judge decided, very justly in our opinion, that the patnidar was right; and that the word ‘price’ meant clearly the compensation payable by the Government; and as he considered that this was the only question between the parties, he held that, by this clause, the darpatnidar had relinquished his right to any compensation; and he, consequently awarded the whole sum to the patnidar.

We think that he was wrong in two respects;—In the first place, he should have awarded some portion at least of the [589] compensation to the zemindar; and in the next, we think that, in the construction which he put upon the clause in the darpatnidar’s patta, one very material point was overlooked.

As regards the zemindar, it is a mistake to suppose that his interest in the land is confined entirely to the rent which he receives from the patnidar. He is the owner of it under the Government; and in the event of the patni coming to an end by sale, forfeiture, or otherwise, the property would revert to the zemindar, who might deal with it as he pleased in its improved state; and although in some cases, and possibly in this, the chances of the patni coming to an end may be more or less remote, there is no doubt that, in all cases, the zemindar is entitled to some compensation (small though it be) for the loss of his rights. At any rate, he would generally be entitled to receive at least as much as the patnidar, to whom in this instance the whole compensation has been awarded. If the latter continues to pay and receive the same rent which he did before, or if, on the other hand, he both makes an abatement to the darpatnidar, and obtains an abatement from the zemindar, as a rule he is no sufferer; because, generally speaking, the difference between the amount of rent which he pays and the rent which he receives, represents the improved value of the land which he gets from the darpatnidar. It may be, of course, that his patni interest would sell in the market for a price larger than the capitalized value of the rent which he receives from the darpatnidar; and if so, he would be entitled to be compensated for the loss of the difference out of the sum payable by the Government. But, as a rule, the capitalized value of the darpatni, over and above the value of his own outgoings, would represent the market value of his patni interest.

The parties who usually suffer most from lands being taken for Government purposes are either the ryots with right of occupancy, or the holders, whoever they may be, of the first permanent interest above the occupying ryots. The actual occupier is of course turned out by the Government, and if he is a ryot with a right of occupancy, he loses the benefit of that right, besides being driven possibly to find a — may be, loses the rent of the land taken during the period of his holding.

 APPEL- These two classes, therefore, would, generally speaking, be entitled to the LATE larger portion of the compensation, and if the darpatnidar in this instance CIVIL. belongs to the latter class, the larger portion of the compensation ought, — presumably, to have gone to him.

7 C. 585 = But the Judge thought him disentitled by the clause in his darpatni ; 9 C.L.R. 227. and certainly his case does not appear to have been argued very clearly in the Court below. The whole compensation was given to the patnidar, who, as far as we can see, has neither lost nor gained anything at present by the taking of the land. He pays the same rent to the zemindar, and he has hitherto received the same rent as before from the darpatnidar.
 It may be, that the darpatnidar has a claim against him for abatement of rent ; and if this claim is enforced, the patnidar may be a loser to the extent of the capitalized value of the abatement. But at present there seems to be no evidence that he has lost, or is likely to lose, anything.

But then is the darpatnidar disentitled to receive compensation by the clause in his patta ? We think not ; because in this instance the condition has not happened which would disentitle him. As we read the clause, it only provides that in the event of the Government taking land, &c., and also in the event of an abatement of rent being made by the zemindar to the patnidar, then the darpatnidar agrees to be content with a corresponding abatement from the rent which he pays to the patnidar, and in that case he relinquishes his claim to the Government compensation. But this relinquishment is to depend upon the two events, the taking of the land by Government, and the abatement being made in the patni-dar's rent. No abatement has been made in this instance in the patnidar's rent ; and consequently the condition upon which alone the clause was to take effect has not happened.

The case must, therefore, go back to the Court below to have the compensation divided in accordance with the principles which we have laid down. The zemindar has not thought fit to appeal, probably because the smallness of the amount did [591] not make it worth his while to do so ; and he, therefore, must be excluded. There are only the two claimants therefore ; the District Judge will endeavour to make a fair division of the sum between them, and before doing so, he will do wisely to make the parties come to some arrangement as to the abatement or otherwise of the darpatnidar's rent.

The appellant having substantially succeeded will be entitled to the costs of this appeal ; and the costs in the Court below will abide the result.

Case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir Richard Garth, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Mc Donell.

MOHABEER PERSHAD SINGH (Defendant) v. MOHABEER SINGH
(Plaintiff).^{*} [31st May, 1881.]

Recovery of possession—Dispossession—Ejectment—Evidence—Onus—Proof of title.

In June 1878, the plaintiff sued the defendant for the recovery of possession of certain land. At the trial it was proved that he had been continuously in peaceable possession of the land until the month of May 1878, when he was forcibly and illegally dispossessed by the defendant.

Held, that the evidence was sufficient to call upon the defendant to show his title to the land.

THIS was a suit instituted on the 28th of June 1878, for the recovery of possession of land, from which the plaintiff had been dispossessed by the defendant. The plaint stated that the land of the plaintiff adjoined that of the defendant on the south and east; that, on the 26th of May 1878, the defendant moved the southern boundary-mark, and on the 29th of May 1878, he moved the eastern boundary-mark, the combined effect of which was that the defendant took possession of 10 biswas of land, which, up to that time, had been in possession of the plaintiff, and held by him as moafi land under a sanad, dated the [592] 28th July 1810, from the then owner of the land. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff had never been in possession of the land claimed; that the sanad relied on was a forgery; and that the suit was barred by limitation.

At the trial, the plaintiff put in evidence two registered documents relating to the defendant's land, and which were admittedly executed by the defendant—one in 1871, and the other in 1877. These documents convinced the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court that the defendant had therein described the land in dispute as the plaintiff's agricultural land.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff had been continuously in possession of the land in dispute until his dispossession by the defendant in May 1878; that the title under the sanad was proved; and that the dispossession took place as alleged. The lower Appellate Court found that the sanad was not proved; that "the witnesses examined by the plaintiff, and whom the lower Court believed, and for disbelieving whom no valid reason has been shown," proved that the land in question was in the plaintiff's possession; that he was dispossessed by the defendant in May 1878; and that the documents of 1871 and 1877 showed that the defendant had then considered the land in dispute as belonging to the plaintiff. In this state of matters, the Judge considered that the plaintiff's failure to prove his title under the sanad was immaterial; and that the plaintiff's previous peaceable possession entitled him to a decree for possession as against the defendant, who was "no better than a trespasser."

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 712 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Kally Prosonno Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 30th January 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Tara Prosonno Binerjee, Sudder Munsif of Chupra, dated the 15th February 1879.

The Judge went on to say :—The facts disclosed in this case are, that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed land, and dispossessed therefrom by the defendant. Under such circumstances, the onus of proving title is shifted upon the latter, and unless he could prove a better title to the land, the plaintiff would be entitled to possession. This view is consonant with the principle laid down in Jadubnath v. Ram Soondur Surmah (1), Khajah Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surmah (2), Radha Bullub Gossain v. Kishen Gobind Gossain (3), Dabjee Sahoo v. Shaikh Tumeezooddeen (4), Ayesha Bibee v. Kanhye Mollah (5), Sham Soonduree Debia v. The Collector of Maldah (6), *Trilochun Ghose v. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Sandel, for the appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Nil Madhub Sein, for the respondent.

The judgments of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) were as follows :—

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C. J.—I think that, in a case of this kind, where the plaintiff is dispossessed by a person who is found to have no title, and to be a trespasser, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove that he was in quiet possession at the time when he was so dispossessed. It seems to me that this ought to be sufficient to establish a prima facie case as against the defendant. I am aware that there is some difference of opinion in the Court upon this point; and that some learned Judges consider that the remedy by a possessory action, which is now provided by s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and which was formerly given by the Limitation Act, has the effect of doing away with the English rule that possession is prima facie evidence of title. I do not see why that should be. The rule seems to me a very wise and convenient one, and I should be sorry to see it abolished. I think, therefore, that the Court below is right, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

McDONELL, J.—I concur in dismissing the appeal. I think that, apart from the reasons given by the learned Chief Justice for dismissing the appeal, the Subordinate Judge has shown by his judgment that he agrees with the Munsif in holding that the plaintiff has acquired a statutory title.

A, having insured his life in a certain Life Insurance Co., assigned his rights under the policy to B, the assignment on the face of it expressing no consideration whatever. The fact of the assignment was notified to the Company, B, after paying all premia due, died, appointing C and D his executors, who took out probate of his will and paid all subsequent premia on the policy. A died, and C and D then demanded payment of the policy-money. The Company, however, refused payment unless C and D first obtained the concurrence of the legal representative of A to the payment.

Held, that the Company were justified in refusing to pay the money in the absence of the legal representative of A.

Interest is given under Act XXXII of 1839 by way of damages on the ground that a debtor has wrongfully refused to pay; but where there is no hand to receive payment, and to give a complete discharge, there can be no wrongful refusal.

Section 115 of the Evidence Act, which contemplates a person "by his declaration, act, or omission intentionally causing or permitting another person to believe a thing to be true and to act on that belief," in which case he cannot "deny the truth of the thing" refers to the belief in a fact and not in a proposition of law.

ON the 22nd March, 1848, one Frederick John Woodhouse insured his life for Rs. 25,000 in the Universal Life Assurance Company. The Company, in such policy, covenanted to pay to the executors, administrators, and assigns of the insured Rs. 25,000 two months after his decease, provided that all premia due under the policy were duly paid. Subsequent to the payment of the first premium, and on the 28th March, 1848, F. J. Woodhouse assigned his rights under the policy, by endorsement, to one Hurrish Chunder Bose. The assignment was [595] unstamped, and ran as follows:—"I do hereby assign all my right, title, and interest of the within to Babu Hurrish Chunder Bose." It appeared on the face of the endorsement that notice of the assignment had been given to the agents of the Company.

Hurrish Chunder Bose, after paying all premia due since the date of the assignment, died on the 7th December, 1857, appointing by his will Rajnarain and Debnarain Bose his executors. They took out probate, and continued to pay the premium on the policy as it became due.

On the death of F. J. Woodhouse in 1879, Rajnarain and Deb Narain Bose demanded payment of the amount due under the policy. But the Insurance Company, stating that they were ignorant of the terms upon which the endorsement had been made and whether or no any consideration had passed, refused to pay the claim, unless the executors obtained the authority or concurrence of the representatives of F. J. Woodhouse.

The executors thereupon brought this suit to recover the amount due under the policy.

[Mr. Jackson, for the defendant Company, took a preliminary objection that the assignment required a stamp.]

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The 13th Geo. III, c. 63, ss. 36 and 37 empowered the Governor-General to issue rules and regulations for the Government of the Settlement of Fort William in Bengal and all places subordinate thereto; such regulation to be invalid unless registered in the Supreme Court of Judicature; and under that Act of Parliament, the Governor-General passed Reg. X of 1829 which provides for the stamping of policies; but that Regulation, I submit, does not apply to the High Court, inasmuch as it was not recognized and registered by the Supreme Court. [BROUGHTON, J.—Inasmuch as Reg. X of 1829 was not recognized by the Supreme Court, I hold that policies before 1860 do not require a stamp.] In the case of Mathew v. The Northern Assurance Co. (1), the Company [596] raised the same defence to an action brought against them as the defendants in this present case have done, but they paid the claim into Court, which the present defendants have not done. Notice of the assignment was given in both cases, and the Company were held bound to pay over the money, they being held to be debtors and the assignee a creditor.

Mr. Jackson (with him Sale) for the defendant Company.—We contend that, without making Mr. Woodhouse's legal representative a party to the suit, the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed. The consent of the legal representative is necessary before we can safely pay over. It is also necessary, before the plaintiffs can succeed, to show that valuable consideration was given for the assignment—Ashley v. Ashley (2). This they have not done. An assignment of a possibility in equity will only be allowed for valuable consideration—Wright v. Wright (3). As to assignment of debts and choses in action, where the assignor has given notice, the debtor, if he disputes the debts, can call upon the assignee to interplead: Judicature Act, s. 25, sub-sect. 6. Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. (4) was decided under the Judicature Act, and it is submitted that the assignment there under the English law put it beyond doubt that the plaintiffs had a complete title. But, apart from legislative enactment, there is no authority to show that choses in action could be assigned without consideration. Under 30 and 31 Vict., c. 144, which is an Act to enable assignees of policies of life assurance to sue thereon in their own names, the schedule to the Act clearly shows that consideration must be stated in the assignment. The case of Crossley v. The City of Glasgow Life Assurance Co. (5) shows, that where there is no agreement for an assignment, and no consideration stated, there can be no equitable assignment, and in such case the Company are entitled to a legal discharge; see also the judgment of James, L.J., in Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. (4). Moreover, the present suit is bad, it is brought by the executors of Rajnarain Bose, and it cannot [597] be maintained. The executor of a Hindu does not possess any of the rights which the executor of an English testator possesses. Under Hindu law, there is no distinction between moveable and immoveable property. We have further received notice telling us to pay a one-fifth share over to another claimant. [BROUGHTON, J.—Why did you not inform the plaintiffs of this?] That would not affect the suit, the Company are entitled to call on the claimant to prove his title. There is no presumption arising as to the payment of consideration except in the cases of bills of exchange. As to the position of the executor of a Hindu, see Sreemutty Dossee v. Tarachurn Coondoo (1), Brajanath Dey Sirkar v. S. M. Anandamayi Dasi (2), and Kadumbinee Dossee v. Koylash Kaminee Dossee (3).

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.—Section 18 of Act XX of 1860 repeals Act XX of 1841, Act VIII of 1842, Act X of 1851 and Act VIII of 1854, and gives the same effect to a Hindu probate as to any other probate. As to the position and powers of a Hindu executor, see Treepoora Soonderu Dossee v. Debendronath Tagore (4), and the cases therein cited. It is not necessary that we should show consideration for the assignment to enable us to bring the suit in our name. The case of Ashley v. Ashley (5) does not apply, as the Insurance Co. was not a party to the suit. Neither does Webster v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. (6) apply, as there was no written assignment of the policy, no recognition of it by the Company, and no notice was given to the Company. The defendants have brought themselves within the 115th section of the Evidence Act, and they are estopped from saying that we ought to show consideration, and that we ought to show the consent of Woodhouse's representatives, as they noted the assignment in their books and received premia from the assignee and his executors after the death of Woodhouse, and by thus acting they led us to believe that we were entitled to the sum due under the policy when it fell in. As to the case of Crossley v. The City [598] of Glasgow Life Assurance Co. (7), there had been in that case no assignment of the policy either in law or in equity. The covenant in our case was an express covenant between the Company and the assignee as the covenant with Woodhouse ran "his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns." We claim interest under the Interest Act, as we expressly gave them notice by a letter, at and from the date of our demand for payment of the claim.

JUDGMENT.

BROUGHTON, J.—The plaintiffs, executors of the will of Hurrish Chunder Bose (their father) seek to recover Rs. 25,000 upon a life policy which was assigned to their testator. They also seek to recover interest at the rate of 12 per centum per annum from the 27th May 1881.

The defendants state in their written statement that they are willing to pay the amount secured by the policy to any one having a valid title and capable of giving them a sufficient discharge, but they contend that the plaintiffs are bound to obtain the concurrence of the representative of the assured. They submit that such representative is a necessary party to this suit and state that they are ready to pay, but they have not paid, the money into Court.

The circumstances of the case are as follows:—

The policy was effected by Frederick Woodhouse, now deceased, on the 22nd March 1848, and Rs. 675 were paid by him as premium from March 23rd for six months.

By this policy it is witnessed that "whilst the aforesaid premium shall be duly and continually paid to the said Society, . . . the capital, stock, and funds of the said Society shall be subject and liable according to the conditions of the said Society's deed of settlement. . . .

And below this: "Endorsement noted, Calcutta, 29th March 1848.
 (Signed) Bagshaw and Co., Agents and Secretaries, U.L.A.S."

The defendants, in their written statement, say that they believe the policy was endorsed in favour of Hurrish Chunder Bose and the said endorsement was noted, &c.; but they say they were not informed, nor were, nor are, aware of the terms on which such endorsement was made, nor whether the same was made for consideration or not. There is no question about the endorsement or the noting, but the plaintiffs decline to go into evidence of consideration.

The defendants admit that Hurrish Chunder Bose, and after his death the plaintiffs, or some other person on account of his estate, paid the premia due from time to time in respect of the policy.

Hurrish Chunder Bose died on the 7th of December 1857, leaving a will, appointing the plaintiffs, with Surjo Kumar Bose and S. M. Russick Money Dasse, both since dead, his executors, &c. The plaintiffs and Surjo Kumar Bose obtained probate in December 1857.

Frederick Woodhouse died in 1879, and the fact of his decease was proved to the satisfaction of the defendants. On the 24th February 1880, the policy was adjusted by order of the Directors, and it was then returned to the plaintiffs with a letter from Messrs. Gishorne and Co., the Agents for the Society, stating that it was duly adjusted for Rs. 25,000 payable with the consent of the legal representatives, on the 23rd May next.

The plaintiffs represented to Mr. Moseley, of the firm of Messrs. Gishorne and Co., that they did not consider they were bound to obtain the consent of any party. Mr. Moseley, who [600] is now dead, told Rajnarain Bose in a friendly way that he might write to Mrs. Woodhouse and she might give her consent.

If the consent of the representatives was necessary the consent of Mrs. Woodhouse would not alter the case, unless she proved her husband's will, if he left one, or, if he died intestate, took out letters of administration to his estate. It does not appear that Mrs. Woodhouse has done either. The plaintiff Rajnarain Bose says, no further reasons were given by Mr. Moseley for his refusal, and nothing occurred until the 22nd of May 1880, when Rajnarain Bose obtained from the Agents the following certificate:—

"UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

Agents and Secretaries,

Universal Life Assurance Society.

DEAR SIRs,—Subject to your refusing payment to us, as heirs of the late Baboo Hurrish Chunder Bose, of Rs. 25,000 due on the policy on the life of the late Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, and for which we made a demand to you on the 22nd instant, our solicitors say that they do not see the necessity of our asking for or even requiring the consent of the heirs of the deceased. The transfer of the policy to our late father has been duly registered by the Universal Office, and it has recognized our rights by accepting the premium from us and granting [601] us receipts personally. We have administered to our father's estate, and are prepared to show you letters of administration. Should you yet insist on asking for the consent of the heirs of Mr. Woodhouse, please state your reasons.

Please note that we shall charge interest on the amount due to us Rs. 25,000, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from this date till we are paid. Your early attention to this is requested.

We are, Dear Sirs,

Yours faithfully,

RAJNARAIN BOSE,

To this the following reply was sent:—

"UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

BABOO RAJNARAIN BOSE and DEBNARAIN BOSE, Calcutta.

DEAR SIRs,

Pol. No. 2086. Rs. 25,000. F. Woodhouse, deceased.

Your letter of the 27th instant was placed before our committee at their monthly meeting this morning, and we are instructed to inform you that a payment of the above policy cannot be made to your late father's estate without the concurrence of the legal representative of the late life assured.

We have already explained the informality of the assignment, and, whilst regretting any delay in the settlement, the Society cannot entertain the question of interest, but, if necessary, will be prepared to pay the Rs. 25,000 into Court.

We trust, however, you will avoid this course, and act upon the suggestion made to Baboo Rajnarain on the occasion of his last call.

Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) GISBORNE & Co.,

C.L.R. 561.

[602] The plaintiff Rajnarain Bose says, that no explanation was given to him, and what occurred on the occasion of his last call does not appear.

It appears, however, that a claim to a fifth share of the money was made by a sister of the plaintiffs, and was preferred by Messrs. Watkins and Watkins acting on her behalf. Their letter of the 17th May to the Agents, per power-of-attorney, and some subsequent correspondence, have been put in evidence, but no question arising on this demand was raised by the defendants by way of objection to the plaintiffs' claim until the trial of this cause. The subject is not even alluded to in the written statement filed on the 21st March 1881, a month and eleven days after the plaint was filed.

It appears, however, from the evidence of Mr. Watkins, that the defendants refused to recognize the claim of his client.

These letters and the power, &c., were put in evidence, subject to an objection to their relevancy raised by Mr. Bonnerjee, counsel for the plaintiffs; and an argument was founded upon them to the effect, that the executor of a Hindu, who obtained probate prior to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act in 1870 and the recent Act V of 1880, does not completely represent the estate of his testator, and that it would be necessary for the security of the defendants to obtain the consent of all the heirs. It is known that Hurrish Chunder Bose left other heirs besides the plaintiffs.

This question cannot arise where a Hindu will has been proved under the Hindu Wills Act, XXI of 1870, or Act V of 1880; for, under each of those Acts, the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased vests in him as such; see Act XXI of 1870, s. 2, applying Act X of 1865, s. 179, and Act V of 1880, s. 4.

Several cases were cited in support of the contention that other heirs are interested, but I am of opinion that Mr. Bonnerjee rightly contends that the evidence ought not to be admitted, and for this reason, the objection, as it seems to me, comes too late. It is in reality another objection for want of parties distinct from the objection raised in the written statement and [603] it should have been made at the earliest opportunity. Such an objection must be made in all cases before the first hearing, otherwise, under s. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be deemed to have been waived by the defendants. Had this objection been made in time, the plaintiffs might have taken steps to join the other heirs either as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants.

It is not, in my opinion, necessary for the Court, of its own motion, to add these parties under s. 32 at this stage of the suit in order to effectually adjudicate. The plaintiffs, on recovering the money, would hold it only in their representative character, as is shown in the case of Brajanath Dey Sircar (1), cited by Mr. Jackson.

There is, then, the chief defence which was put forward in the written statement,—namely, that the estate of Mr. Woodhouse should be represented in this suit, and that the defendants are not bound to pay the sum secured by this policy without the concurrence of his representatives. The law and practice was to require the assignee to sue in the name of the assignor, which in this case would require the presence of the personal representative. By Statute 30 and 31 Vict., c. 144, by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-sec. 6; and in India by s. 15 of Act V of 1866, the assignee can sue in his own name under certain conditions. But the English Acts have no application to a suit instituted in a Court in India, and the Indian Act is only applicable to Marine and Fire policies. It was apparently expressly intended, when the Indian Act was passed, to exclude life policies, and it is to be observed that the English Act, 30 and 31 Vict., c. 144, which was passed in the following year, 1867, as already stated, has not been extended to this country. Not only so, but Act VI of 1854, which amended the practice of the Supreme Courts on the Equity Side, and which contained a section (23) corresponding to s. 44 of 15 and 16 Vict., c. 86 (Chancery amendment) was repealed the year afterwards by Act VI of 1868, and has not been re-enacted. That repealed clause enabled the Court to dispense with the personal representatives. Had that clause been now in force, I should have considered this a case in which it certainly should have been [604] applied, for this case is far stronger in favour of the plaintiffs, than the case of Crossley v. The City of Glasgow Insurance Co. (1) and Webster v. The British Empire Mutual Insurance Co. (2) in which the appearance of the representative was dispensed with. In those cases there had been no formal assignment. Here there has been an assignment, and no claim has been put forward by Mr. Woodhouse's representatives. But then, had I been able to dispense with the representative, although the plaintiffs would have been entitled to recover the principal sum, they could not have recovered interest: Webster v. The British Empire Mutual Insurance Co., which was a case decided with reference to the Interest Act, 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 32, corresponding to the Indian Act, XXXII of 1839; for interest is given under those Acts by way of damages, on the ground that the debtor has wrongfully refused to pay, and there can be no wrongful refusal if there is no hand to receive payment and to give a complete discharge.

There remains the question of estoppel under s. 115 of the Evidence Act, which contemplates a person "by his declaration, act, or omission, intentionally causing or permitting another person to believe a thing to be true and to act on that belief," in which case he cannot "deny the truth of the thing."

This enactment seems to me to refer to the belief in a fact, not in a proposition of law, and the illustration confirms me in the opinion.

The defendants in this case do not seek to deny that the policy was assigned by Mr. Woodhouse; nor that they recognized the assignment, nor do they say now that it has not, or ought not to have, its full operation according to law.

There is, it seems to me, no estoppel.

I feel bound, therefore, to hold that the defendants were justified in asking that the personal representative of Mr. Woodhouse should concur in giving them a discharge.

The suit must be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

Khetermoney Dossee v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (1) doubted, but followed.Ram Bux Chittarjeo v. Moodhsoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (2) followed.

[R., 9 C. 395 (397).]

THIS was a reference from the Officiating Judge of the Small Cause Court at Sealdah, the material portion of which is as follows:—In the first case, the plaintiff alleges that he and the defendant hold a jama in coparcenary. The jama fell into arrears, and the landlord sued them, and ultimately obtained a decree. The decree in due course was executed, and the amount of it was realized from the plaintiff. The plaintiff now sues the defendant for recovery of the money paid in excess of his legitimate share of the debt. The claim is instituted, not upon any contract subsisting between the parties, but upon grounds of equity.

In the second case, the parties are joint owners of an estate under Government. The plaintiff alleges that she has paid the entire revenue and other rates to the Collector; that as her coparcener, the defendant, is bound, in law and equity, to contribute according to the quantum of his share; and that he has not contributed. This claim also is not based upon any contract to [606] so contribute. It is simply stated that the plaintiff has the right to recover in the shape of contribution so much as she has paid in excess of her share of the debt.

In each of these cases the defendant contends, inter alia, that the Court of Small Causes is not competent, under s. 6 of Act IX of 1865, to entertain them.

The question to be determined with reference to the above contention is—Whether, under s. 6 of the above Act, the Court of Small Causes has jurisdiction to maintain the present suits?

That section enacts:—"The following are the suits which shall be cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, viz., claims for money due on bond or other contract, or for rent, or for personal property, or for the value of such property, or for damages." The plaintiffs urge that the claims they have instituted are for money due on 'contract' and they rely upon a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court—Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (3)—and chap. V. of the Indian Contract Act of 1872. The defendants' contention is, that there is no element of contract, either express or implied, involved in the payment of the moneys in respect of which contribution or refund is prayed for by the plaintiffs; that the relation between the adverse parties was only quasi-contractual; and that the remedy prayed for by the plaintiffs, is one afforded by Courts of Equity upon merely equitable considerations. They rely upon a Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court—Ram Bux Chittanjo v. Moodhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (1), uniformly followed by other Divisional Benches of the same Court.

The Judge, having discussed the law and the authorities on the point at considerable length, said:—"I think this Court has no jurisdiction under s. 6 of Act IX of 1865. But as the question is not free from doubt, I should respectfully submit it to their Lordships of the High Court for an authoritative opinion. The suits will be dismissed contingent upon the opinion of the Honorable Court, but without costs."

The case was not argued.

JUDGMENT.

[607] The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We think that, for the purposes of this reference, both the cases must be considered as governed by authority in this Court.

The Full Bench case of Ram Bux Chittanjo v. Moodhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (1) clearly shows, that, in the case of co-sharers of an estate, where one co-sharer pays the whole revenue, he cannot recover contribution in a Small Cause Court from his co-sharer; co-sharers paying revenue to Government are not co-contractors in any sense, and therefore the principle laid down in the Full Bench case and in other subsequent cases with regard to them is perfectly plain.

But the case of joint tenants who hold a tenure under a zemindar or other landlord at an entire rent seems to fall within a different principle. Such co-tenants are to all intents and purposes co-contractors, as much so as persons who jointly purchase goods or borrow money; and if one should be compelled by the landlord to pay the whole rent, there seems no reason why, in accordance with the English and the Civil law, the others should not be bound by contract to re-pay him their proper proportions. This principle was acted upon by the Full Bench in Shaboo Majee v. Noorai Mollah (2), in the case of a principal and surety, where it was held that a surety having paid the debt could sue the principal in the Small Cause Court. But this distinction does not appear to have been recognized in later cases, and we have ascertained that in an unreported case, Khettermoney Dossee v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (3), heard on the 20th June 1878 by Markby and Prinsep, JJ., where the circumstances were similar to the present, it was held, apparently on the authority of Shaboo Majee's Case (2), that a suit for contribution would not lie in the Small Cause Court.

We find that a different view has been taken of such cases by the Madras and Allahabad High Courts [see Nath Prosad v. Baij Nath (4) and Govinda Muneya Tiruyan v. Bapu (5)], and [608] having regard to the number of petty cases of this nature, which must occur in the mofussil, we think that, on some fitting opportunity, it would be desirable that the subject should be reconsidered by a Full Bench of this Court. As we have not had the advantage in this case of hearing counsel on either side, we think it right to follow the rulings of this Court, and to confirm the judgment of the lower Court.

Section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code enables a party, against whom an order has been made in execution-proceedings, to bring a suit to establish his rights, whatever they may be; but it says nothing as to the nature of the suit, or the Court in which it is to be brought. Whether the party is to sue in the Civil Court or in the Small Cause Court, depends entirely upon the nature of the claim and the right which is sought to be enforced.

A person whose goods are illegally sold under an execution, does not lose his right to them, although he may have claimed them unsuccessfully in the execution-proceedings. He may follow them into the hands of the purchaser or of any other person, and sue for them or their value without reference to anything which has taken place in the execution-proceedings, except that, under art. 11, sch. ii, Act XV of 1877, he must bring his suit within one year from the time when the adverse order in the execution-proceedings was made.

Where goods have been illegally seized and sold in execution, a suit by the owner thereof against the purchaser for the goods or their value will lie in a Small Cause Court, if the value of the goods is within the amount limited by law for the jurisdiction of such Court; but if the plaintiff makes the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor parties to the suit, and requires a declaration of his right to the property, such a suit will not lie in the Small Cause Court.

[609] A suit for a declaration of right by a person against whom an order has been passed under s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code will not lie in the Small Cause Court.

Ram Dhun Biswas v. Kefal Biswas (1), Moozdeen Gaze v. Dinobundhoo Gossamee (2) and Woomesh Chunder Bose v. Muddun Mohan Sircar (3) discussed and explained.

[Com. on, 7 A. 152 (158) (F.B.); Rel. on, 21 C. 430 (433); R., U.B.R. (1892—95), Vol. II, 255 (258); 74 P.L.R. 1901; 16 B. 608 (616); 1 O.C. 272 (278).]

THIS was a reference from the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Howrah, the terms of which were as follows:—The question raised in these cases is whether a party against whom an order under ss. 280 and 281 of the Civil Procedure Code is passed may institute a suit to establish his right in the Small Cause Court, where the property in dispute is moveable property, and is valued at an amount cognizable by such Court? As the question is an important one, I beg to submit it for the decision of the High Court.

The plaintiff in the first-mentioned of these cases was the unsuccessful claimant; and that in the other case was the defeated decree-holder.

Before the passing of the Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, the rule laid down by the Calcutta High Court was that such suits, either by the decree-holder, or by the unsuccessful claimant, could not lie in the Small Court—Ram Dhun Biswas v. Kefal Biswas (1) and Moozdeen Gaze v. Dinobundhoo Gossamee (2). The contrary decision passed in the ruling in Woomesh Chunder Bose v. Muddun Mohun Sircar (1) was referred to in the first mentioned of these precedents. That being the law when the old Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, was in force, it remains to be seen if the new Code has changed matters or extended the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The words of s. 283 of the Code are that "the party against whom an order under ss. 280, 281 or 282 is passed, may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." This section is made applicable to the Small Cause Courts by sch. ii of the Act. It does not seem to me clear, however, that this application of the section to the Small Cause Courts has extended the jurisdiction of these Courts [610] to try suits to establish rights to properties, moveable and immoveable. The section provides for remedies to the defeated party, but is quite silent as to the Court which should have jurisdiction to entertain such suits. It appears from s. 5 of the Code that the sections of the second schedule of the Act extend to the Small Cause Courts, so far only as they are applicable, and this leaves no room to doubt the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Courts has not been enlarged by the Code. The section alluded to (No. 283) is not qualified by any sentences under parentheses "so far as relates to moveable property" as appears against the following section, which refers to sales in execution. It would also appear from a note under s. 283 of Broughton's Civil Procedure Code, that "the suit to establish the right of the claimant must be brought in the Court having jurisdiction to try it, not necessarily that in which the proceedings have taken place." Under these grounds I am fully of opinion that these cases are not cognizable by the Small Cause Courts.

The decision of the Bombay High Court in Nathu Ganesh v. Kalidas Umed (2) shows a contrary view of the question; but since that Court has refrained from interpreting the present state of the law, and is not in unison with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in connection with the past law, I think I am not in a position to take it for my guide.

The case of Ram Soondur Sein v. Krishno Chunder Goopto (3) would, I think, justify me in following the rule laid down by the Calcutta High Court.

Under these grounds I think I have no jurisdiction to entertain these suits, and therefore dismiss them both, contingent upon the decision of the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by

GARTH, C. J.—We think that there is no real difficulty about the point referred to us; and that the new Civil Procedure Code has made no material difference in the law upon the subject. Section 283 of the Code enables a party against whom an order has been made in execution-proceedings to [611] bring a suit to establish his rights, whatever they may be; but it says nothing as to the nature of the suit, or the Court in which it is to be brought. Whether, therefore, the party is to sue in the Civil Court or in the Small Cause Court, depends entirely upon the nature of the claim, and the right which is sought to be enforced. If the claim can be made in the Small Cause Court, the suit must be there. If not, it must be brought in the Civil Court.

The first case reported upon the subject, to which we have been referred, is Woomesh Chunder Bose v. Muddun Mohun Sircar (1). In that case, some bricks were sold in execution of a decree. The plaintiff claimed in the execution-proceedings to be the owner of them, and this claim was refused. The bricks were then sold in execution; and the plaintiff brought his suit against the purchaser in the Civil Court. It was held in that case by the High Court that, as the value of the bricks was less than Rs. 500, the plaintiff was bound to have sued in the Small Cause Court.

The case of Ram Dhun Biswas v. Refal Biswas (2) was of a very different character. A claim was there made to certain goods which the decree-holder was about to sell in execution, and the claim was allowed. Whereupon the decree-holder brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to establish his right to sell the property as being that of the judgment-debtor. This was a suit which, from its very nature, could not be brought in the Small Cause Court. It was a suit to obtain a declaration from the Court which the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to make. Sir Barnes Peacock and Mr. Justice Mitter, therefore, decided, that the suit ought to have been brought in the Civil Court.

In the next case, Moozdeen Gaze v. Dinobundhoo Gossamee (3), the circumstances were very similar to those in Woomesh Chunder Bose v. Muddun Mohun Sircar (1). A claim had been made to certain goods about to be sold in execution and the decision had been against the claimant. The property was then sold, and the claimant brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover them [612] or their value as against the purchaser. The learned Judges in that case, however, do not appear to have had their attention drawn to the case of Woomesh Chunder Bose v. Muddun Mohun Sircar (1), and supposed (erroneously as we think) that the case ought to be governed by the decision in Ram Dhun Biswas v. Refal Biswas (2). We fear that this ruling has been followed in many cases, and has led to some misapprehension.

The distinction between the two classes of cases is so clearly marked, that it seems almost unnecessary to explain it. A person whose goods are illegally sold under an execution does not lose his right to them, although he may have claimed them unsuccessfully in the execution-proceedings. He may follow them into the hands of the purchaser or of any other person, and sue for them or their value without reference to anything which has taken place in the execution-proceedings, except that, under art. 12 of the Limitation Act, he must bring his suit within a year from the time when the adverse order in the execution-proceedings was made.

The plaintiff's only difficulty in the first of these cases is one of his own creation. If he had simply sued the purchaser under the execution for his goods or their value, he might have enforced his claim as a matter of course. But he has chosen to make both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor defendants in the suit, for which there was clearly no occasion, and which was obviously a mistake. In sending this case back, therefore, to the Small Cause Court, we would recommend that the names of the decree-holder and judgment-debtor should be struck out of the record, the plaintiff paying their costs, which he avows his readiness to do; and the plaintiff may then proceed to enforce his claim, if it is a just one, against the purchaser only.

The other suit which is brought by the decree-holder to obtain a declaration from the Court as to his right, comes within the other class of cases, in which the Small Cause Court has clearly no jurisdiction.

THAKOOR MAHATAB DEO AND OTHERS (Judgment-debtors)
v. LEELANUND SINGH AND OTHERS (Decree-holders).^{*}
[7th July, 1881.]

Execution—Irregularity in Publishing and Conducting a Sale—Waiver of Irregularity by the Judgment-Debtor.

Previous to the date fixed for the sale of certain property in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtors presented a petition, praying for a month's further time to be allowed them in order that they might complete the arrangements they were making for the purpose of paying off the debt, and stating that the decree-holders had attached and advertised the property for sale. That petition being refused, the sale took place; and subsequently the judgment-debtors came in and objected to the sale, and asked to have it set aside, on the ground that there had been material irregularity in the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation, and that, consequently, they had suffered substantial injury. The Subordinate Judge refused to hear evidence on this point holding that the petition was an admission that the proceedings were in order.

Held, that the petition presented prior to the sale did not amount to an admission by the judgment-debtors that the publication and proclamation of the sale had been duly made; and that, consequently, the Court was bound to hear the evidence tendered by the judgment-debtors on that point, and to find whether there had been such irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale as to occasion substantial injury to the judgment-debtors.

Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain Singh (1) distinguished.

THIS was an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, refusing to set aside the sale of certain property belonging to the appellants, the judgment-debtors, which had been purchased by the decree-holders. It appeared that the sale has been fixed for the 6th October 1879, and that, on the 27th September, the judgment-debtors had presented a petition setting out that the decree-holders had attached and advertised for sale the property in question, but that they were making arrangements to pay off the debt, and desired a month's [614] time to enable them to complete such arrangements. That petition was refused, and the sale was proceeded with on the 6th October 1879, the decree-holders becoming the purchasers. The judgment-debtors then applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground that there had been a material irregularity in the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation on the property, and that the boundaries of the mouza sold had not been stated; and that, consequently, they had suffered a substantial injury by the property having been sold much under its value. The Subordinate

Judge held, that the petition of the 27th September amounted to an admission by the judgment-debtors that the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation had been made in due order, and that there had been no such irregularity in specifying the boundaries as alleged, as they had been sufficiently stated; and consequently, having refused to hear the petitioners' evidence with respect to the irregularity in the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation on the property, dismissed the petition.

The judgment-debtors, accordingly, now appealed to the High Court against that order.

The judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore refusing to set aside a sale. The Subordinate Judge proceeded mainly upon a petition presented by the judgment-debtors on the 27th September 1879, asking for a postponement of the sale fixed for the 6th October following on the ground that they had been able to close their negotiations to raise money to pay off the debt. The Subordinate Judge considered that it was clear from that petition that the judgment-debtors had, before the sale, acknowledged and admitted the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation.

[615] We find nothing in that petition in any decree amounting to such an admission, or to a waiver on the part of the judgment-debtors of any objection to any irregularity. In fact, had the application been granted, it would have been necessary to issue a fresh proclamation, unless the judgment-debtors had consented by some subsequent act of theirs to waive such formality.

The other objection taken is that the Subordinate Judge did not examine the witnesses for the judgment-debtors, who were present at the hearing of the case. It appears from the record at the end of the examination of the first witness that there are ample grounds for this contention. The Subordinate Judge having erroneously proceeded upon the petition, which had been made by the judgment-debtors, and having in consequence refused to examine the witnesses produced by the judgment-debtors to prove material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, which resulted in substantial injury to them, it becomes necessary to return the case to the Subordinate Judge, in order that he may examine all the witnesses tendered by the parties, and then return the case to this Court with a distinct finding as to whether there has been a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, which has resulted in substantial injury to the judgment-debtors.

FIELD, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that this case is distinguishable from the case of Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain Singh (1), decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In that case, the judgment-debtor applied for a postponement of the sale, and his petition contained the following passage: "Under such circumstances, it is prayed that a postponement of one month be granted, the attachment and the notification of sale being maintained." Now the words italicized were held by the Privy Council to amount to an admission, that there was no such mistake or irregularity as would be likely to mislead. There are no such words in the present case, and further it is to be observed that the petition made by the judgment-debtors (appellants) was disallowed by the Court.

GOGUN CHUNDER GHOSE (Plaintiff) v. DHURONIDHUR MUNDUL AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [28th June, 1881.]

Fraud—Altering a Document—Material Alteration—Bond—Forgery.

A person, who had a bond executed in his favour by one of three brothers, forged the signature of the other two brothers to the bond, and brought a suit upon it in its altered form against the three brothers. The forgery having been established, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as against all the three defendants, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court,—

Held, that the decision was correct, as a material alteration in a bond is, if fraudulently made, sufficient to render the bond void.

A party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state, as any material alteration of it will vitiate the instrument.

Where a person brings a suit upon a document which, when produced in evidence, is found to have been fraudulently altered to the knowledge of the plaintiff, no Court ought to allow an amendment to enable him to succeed upon it in its original state.

THE facts of this case, and the contention of the parties, are set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which is as follows:—

"The suit was on a kistbandi, said to have been executed on the 14th February 1876 by the three defendants—Dhuronidhur, Baburam, and Bashiram—jointly, binding themselves to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 599 by instalments. The three defendants are three brothers. They deny execution of the bond, and charge the plaintiff with having forged the document. The three defendants did not make a joint defence, but Dhuronidhur filed a separate written statement, and the other two brothers made a joint statement. The plaintiff gave his evidence, and [617] examined his gomasta and two witnesses by the names of Kepait Gazi and Poyat Paik. The Court below disbelieved their evidence, and observed that the bond had been very materially changed from what it originally was. The learned Munsif is of opinion that the bond was made by Dhuronidhur himself, and that the names of the two others are interpolations. He is confirmed in his suspicion by the further change of the pronoun ami into amara, wherever it occurs. I perfectly agree with the Court below in finding that the plaintiff has materially changed the bond. The same evidence which binds Dhuronidhur binds the other two brothers. If it were open to me to give a decree against Dhuronidhur, I would have done so; but it is not at all safe to do so, as there is no trustworthy evidence to bind Dhuronidhur. The plaintiff, having changed the bond in the way it now stands, must take the consequence of his own wicked act. I only wonder that the plaintiff was not asked to explain the erasures, either by his own pleader or by the cross-examining pleader. The plaintiff, however, does not make that a ground of complaint in his memorandum of appeal. This shows that he was perfectly aware that he had made the alteration. I have no hesitation to confirm the judgment of the Court below, and to dismiss the appeal with costs."

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and FIELD, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We think that this appeal must be dismissed. This suit is brought upon an instalment-bond against three brothers, the defendants. The plaintiff alleges that these three brothers executed the bond jointly. The suit has been dismissed in both Courts, and the lower Appellate Court finds, as a fact, that two of the defendants never executed the bond, and that their names were not upon it as it was originally executed; and further, that the plaintiff, in whose custody the bond has been, [618] has forged the names of those two defendants upon the instrument, and attempted to enforce it against them all. Upon that ground the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit.

So far as I understand him, I think he also means to dismiss it upon another ground,—namely, that he cannot trust the evidence even against the one brother; but it is not necessary to consider this point, because we are clearly of opinion that a fraudulent addition, such as has been made to this bond, is sufficient to vitiate it against all the defendants. See the case of Davidson v. Cooper (1). It was there laid down, that "a party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit, is bound to preserve it in its original state, and that any material alteration of an unsealed paper will vitiate the instrument."

In the case of Gardner v. Walsh (2), an alteration had been made very much like the present. A promissory note had been altered by another party being added. The alteration was apparently no disadvantage to the defendant; and yet because it had been made, whilst the document was in the plaintiff's possession, it was held to be invalid as against the defendant. Chief Justice Campbell there says:—"We conceive that the defendant is discharged from his liability if the altered instrument, supposing it to be genuine, would operate differently from the original instrument, whether the alteration be or be not to his prejudice. If a promissory note payable at three months after date were altered by the payee to six months, or if, being made for £100, he should alter it to £50, we conceive that he could not sue the maker upon it after the alteration, either in its altered or original form. The alleged maker was no party to a note at six months, or for £50; and the note at three months or for £100, to which he was a party, is vitiated by the alteration."

(1) 13 M. & W. Ex. Ch. 352.

Mr. Justice Byles also, in his book upon bills, p. 318, 11th Edition, lays down the rule in this way:—"By a recent solemn decision —Davidson v. Cooper (1)—a deed, bill of exchange, promissory note, guarantee, or any other executory [619] written contract, is avoided by an alteration in a material part made while it is in the custody of the plaintiff, although that alteration be made by a stranger. For, a person who has the custody of an instrument is bound to preserve it in its integrity; and as it would be avoided by his fraud in altering it himself, so it shall be avoided by his laches in suffering another to alter it."

It has been argued that in this country the law of England in this respect does not apply. I am sure I do not know why it should not; and I see much reason why it should. The law of England, so far as it is consistent with the principles of equity and good conscience, has generally prevailed in this country, unless it conflicts with the Hindu or Mahomedan law. The learned pleader who appears for the defendants seems to think that, in equity and good conscience, the plaintiff in this case ought to succeed against one of the defendants. But we are clearly of a different opinion. Where a man has been wicked enough to alter a document fraudulently in this way, we do not think it consistent with equity and good conscience, or with sound policy, (especially in a country like this, where forgery and fraud is so lamentably common), that he should be entitled to recover upon it.

Even looking at the question as one of proof merely, the plaintiff ought to fail in his contention, because he has not proved the instrument upon which he founds his claim.

No doubt, so long as mistakes are made in ignorance, and not from dishonesty, great latitude is very properly allowed by the Courts here in the way of amendment; but all amendments are in the Court's discretion; and what my learned brother, Mr. Justice Field, said just now is undeniably true, that where a man brings a suit upon an instrument which, when produced in evidence, is found to have been fraudulently altered to the knowledge of the plaintiff, no Court ought to allow an amendment to enable him to succeed upon it in its original state.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The term 'appeal' in art. 167 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) includes an appeal to the Privy Council, and the term 'Appellate Court' in the same article includes the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council sitting for the purpose of hearing appeals from orders passed by British Courts in India.

Where an appeal had been preferred to Her Majesty in Council from a decree of the High Court reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, and the High Court's decree was affirmed by an order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 15th February 1873, and an application for execution of the High Court's decree was made on the 17th November 1875, more than three years after the date of the decree, but within that period of the order of Her Majesty in Council.

Held, that, under art. 167 of sch. ii, Act IX of 1871, the limitation of such application must be computed from the date of the order of Her Majesty in Council, and consequently that the application for execution was not barred.

Where, in the course of executing a decree, accounts, in which interest was entered and charged, had, from time to time, been filed in Court and no objection had been taken thereto by the judgment-debtor from 1870 up to 1880,—

Held, that it was too late to object to interest being allowed and that the High Court would not interfere to alter the rate where it appeared that the District Judge had found that the rate ruling in the District was 12 per cent. and had allowed that rate accordingly.

IN this case it appeared that the judgment-creditors, the respondents, had lost the original suit, out of which these execution-proceedings arose, in the Court of first instance, and that their adversary had thereupon taken out execution, although an appeal had been preferred and was then pending in the High Court. When the appeal came on to be heard, the decree of the lower [621] Court was reversed, and subsequently the order of the High Court was confirmed, on appeal, by the Privy Council. This present appeal arose from an attempt made by the judgment-creditors to recover the mesne profits for the time during which they had been dispossessed in consequence of the execution of the decree of the first Court previous to its being set aside by the High Court. It appeared that the first application in the present proceedings had been made on the 17th November 1875, and it was contended by the judgment-debtor, the appellant, that limitation applied, inasmuch as it had been made more than three years after the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, and that, though the case was not finally decided by the Privy Council till the 15th February 1873, the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) did not apply to orders of the Privy Council. The Deputy Commissioner, however, decided this point against the judgment-debtor, and also allowed interest at 12 per cent., to which the appellant objected.

He accordingly now appealed to the High Court on both these points.

JUDGMENTS.

PRINSEP, J.—In this case it is first objected by the appellant's pleader that execution is barred, inasmuch as the previous application, made on the 17th November 1875, was not made within three years from the date on which the notice was served on the debtor,—that is, on the 29th October 1872. It appears that the judgment-creditors now before us lost the original suit in the first Court. Execution was then taken out by their adversary while an appeal was pending in the High Court. The High Court set aside that order, and in 1873 the Privy Council affirmed the order of the High Court.

The present matter relates to restitution on account of mesne profits for the period during which the judgment-creditors now [622] before us were out of possession in consequence of the execution of the decree of the Court of first instance, which was ultimately reversed. In answer to the objections as regards limitation it is pointed out that, inasmuch as the case was not finally decided by the Privy Council until 1873, the application of the 17th of November 1875 is within time, calculating from that date. The appellant's pleader, however, contends, that the terms of art. 167 of the second schedule of Act IX of 1871 do not apply to the present case, inasmuch as the second clause, which gives the term of three years from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, does not apply to the order of the Privy Council; and he bases this argument upon the consideration that Act IX of 1871 nowhere refers to orders passed by the Privy Council in the same way as the present Law of Limitation (Act XV of 1877) does. I observe that Act VI of 1874, s. 21, which was passed before the application which we are now considering, added to art. 169 the words which are now reproduced in art. 180 of Act XV of 1877, and so provided a period of limitation for the enforcement of any order of Her Majesty in Council. But it cannot be rightly contended that the terms of s. 177 do not apply to any order passed by the Privy Council on appeal from a decree of the High Court, because, if it were so, the consequence would be that, in order to preserve his rights, a successful party in this country would have to run the risk of executing a decree which might be set aside by the Privy Council, and that is a result which would never have been contemplated by the Legislature. It appears to me rather, that although perhaps not strictly accurate, the term Appellate Court, in art. 167 includes the Privy Council sitting for the hearing of appeals from orders passed by Courts of British India. So far then, as limitation is concerned, it appears to me that the application of the 17th of November 1875 is not barred, because limitation did not begin to run until 1873, when the final order in the case was passed by the Privy Council.

The next objection raised is, that interest should not have been charged on the mesne profits of the year 1924 Sumbut (1867-68). The order passed by the Deputy Commissioner is certainly not clear in its terms, but, as I understand it, the [623] Deputy Commissioner divided it into two parts, dealing with the mesne profits of 1924 (1867-68) according to an adjustment between the parties, and fixing the amount which was payable as regards the three months' mesne profits of 1925 (1868-69), on which he declared that interest at the usual rate should be paid. Now, although there was no express order regarding payment of the mesne profits of 1924 (1867-68), it appears that the amount agreed on, namely, 9,895 rupees, has been paid through the Court; and that, from time to time, in the course of execution of their decree, the decree-holders have attached to their application for execution an account showing that they claimed interest on that sum. No objection from 1870 up to the present time has been made to this account; payments have been made, and I find myself unable to believe that such payments having been made, the items of the account were not known to the judgment-debtor and accepted by him. I therefore consider that interest was payable by the judgment-debtor on the mesne profits of 1924.

As regards the rate at which such interest was payable, not only on the mesne profits of 1924 (1867-68), but also on the mesne profits for the broken period of 1925 (1868-69), I think that 12 per cent. should be the rate allowed.

That is the rate which has been considered by the Courts to be the usual rate where no mention of any specific rate has been made, and that is the rate which has been given by the lower Court as the rate current in the District.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

FIELD, J.—With reference to the rate of interest, I think it may reasonably be assumed that the lower Court, in allowing 12 per cent. considered this to be the rate of interest usually allowed by the Courts in that part of the country, and I think we ought not to interfere with the rate so allowed.

Then, as to the interest on Rs. 9,895, the mesne profits of the year 1924 (1867-68) up to the two dates, the 20th of December 1869, when 7,274 rupees were paid, and the 5th of April 1870, when the balance, namely, 2,621 rupees, was paid, I agree with my learned colleague that it is too late now to take this objection, seeing that accounts were, on previous occasions, [624] filed in Court, in which accounts this interest was entered and no objection taken thereto.

Then as to the third point concerning limitation, the contention is, that this decree was barred when the application of the 17th of November 1875 was made, and that the principle "once barred for ever barred" must be applied. Now it is admitted that this contention cannot be successful, if we are to yield to the argument advanced on the other side, namely, that the decree-holders are entitled to three years from the 5th of February 1873, being the date on which the original decree of the Court in India was confirmed in appeal by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In order to dispose of the question thus raised we have to determine whether the word 'appeal' in the third column, opposite art. 167 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), is to be interpreted so as to include an appeal to the Privy Council, and the words 'Appellate Court' in the same column, so as to include the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

An argument, based upon the reasoning in the case of Narsingh Dass v. Narain Das (1), has been addressed to us to this effect that, although in the corresponding column and article of the Limitation Act of 1877, the term 'appeal' may be well taken to include an appeal to the Privy Council, and the term 'Appellate Court' to include the Judicial Committee, a similar construction cannot be put upon these terms in the Act of 1871 for the following reason. The later Act contains specific provisions (in arts. 177 and 180 of the second schedule) which govern appeals to, and orders of, Her Majesty in Council; but the earlier Act of 1871 contains no such provision, and therefore could not have contemplated appeals to Her Majesty in Council, or the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee.

So far as regards the case now before us (in which the order of the Judicial Committee was made on the 15th February 1873), that argument may be effectually disposed of by a reference to s. 21 of Act VI of 1874, which amended art. 169 of the second schedule of the Act of 1871, by the addition of the [625] words "or any order of Her Majesty in Council." The Act of 1874 operated to make the Limitation Act of 1871 contemplate the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, before the decree had become barred.

But it appears to me that the fact of the Act of 1877 containing two additional articles (177 and 180), which expressly mention appeals to, and orders of, Her Majesty in Council, or the absence of such provisions from the Act of 1871, does not really affect the question which we have to decide. These two additional articles contain additional substantive provisions of limitation, but the presence or absence of these provisions does not, I think, affect the meaning of the terms 'appeal' and 'Appellate Court' in the other parts of the Act.

The term 'appeal,' standing alone and without words to qualify or restrict it, is wide enough to include any appeal, and therefore an appeal to Her Majesty in Council. So the term 'Appellate Court' standing alone and without words to qualify or restrict its meaning, is wide enough to include any tribunal exercising appellate jurisdiction. Do we thus find either in the Act itself or in the rest of the Statute-Book anything which qualifies or restricts the general meaning of these terms? The Act itself contains no definition of either term. Further, it gives no enumeration or description of Appellate Courts, of the tribunals to which an appeal lies. We must, in fact, travel outside the Act and search the rest of the Statute-Book in order to discover what tribunals exercise appellate jurisdiction. The term 'appeal' is used in the Act and the schedule of appeals under the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure and other Acts, and of appeals to different Courts. We cannot, therefore, merely from the use of the term in the Act, invent any definition of 'appeal,' which will apply in all places in which the word is used in the same Act,—i.e., so far as concerns the procedure under which, or the tribunal to which the appeal is made.

Then, when we get outside the Act, there is no definition of either term in the General Clauses Act; and if we search the Indian Statute-Book, in order to find what tribunals exercise appellate jurisdiction in respect of cases tried and decided in India, we find no less than four enactments,—viz., Reg. XVI [626] of 1797, Reg. V of 1803, Act XXV of 1852, and Act II of 1863,—which were wholly or partially in force when the Limitation Act of 1871 was passed; and which provided for appeals to Her Majesty in Council. We find no express language cutting down the general meaning of the terms 'appeal' and 'Appellate Court,' and it is not easy to suppose, having regard to the existence of these four enactments in the Statute-Book, that the Legislature intended to restrict this general meaning, so as to exclude appeals to Her Majesty in Council and the Appellate tribunal mentioned in those enactments. Then with reference to a doubt which has been started as to whether Her Majesty in Council or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council can be properly termed an 'Appellate Court,' it appears to me that there is nothing in this. It may be quite true that Her Majesty, exercising the appellate jurisdiction which she is pleased to exercise with the aid of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, does not use exactly the same forms and the same procedure which is used in her other Courts. For example, the so-called decrees of the Judicial Committee are really orders in Council made upon the recommendation of the Committee; see Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Raja Burrodacaunt Roy (1). But I take it that this does not affect the question. The essentials of a Court are (i) the actor, or plaintiff; (ii) the reus, or defendant; and (iii) the judex, or judicial power, which ascertains the facts, applies the law, and, if injury has been done, affords a remedy by its officers or otherwise. An examination of the Statutes which regulate the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council will show that this tribunal possesses all these essential elements of a Court; see more especially 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 92; 3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 41, ss. 14, 15, 16, 19 and 28; and 6 and 7 Vict., c. 38, ss. 5 and 7. The Committee is a Judicial Committee. The law speaks of its jurisdiction to hear causes (17 and 18 Vict., c. 18, s. 34). The Statute 39 and 40 Vict., c. 59, s. 14, speaks of paid Judges of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In Tronsoy v. Dent (2), the Lords of the Committee speak of "treating this Court as a [627] Court of Error." According to the constitution of England, the Sovereign is the fountain of all justice. In ancient days, he sat in Court in propria persona, and is still supposed to do so, although he does not determine, and is not by law empowered to determine, any cause or motion otherwise than by the mouth of his Judges, to whom he has committed his whole judicial authority. Part of the business now transacted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council used to be transacted by "The High Court of Delegates." The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, like Her Majesty's High Court of Chancery (the 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 92, speaks of "the Queen's Majesty in Her Highness' Court of Chancery") or Her Majesty's High Court of Justice (36 and 37 Vict., c. 66, s. 5), is one Chamber of the Aula Regia; and so far as concerns its jurisdiction to hear appeals, it is most undoubtedly an 'Appellate Court' in the proper sense of the term.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the term 'appeal' in the column of the Limitation Act of 1871 includes an appeal to the Privy Council; and the term 'Appellate Court' in the same column includes the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and the effect of this construction is that the execution of this decree is not barred by limitation.

Appeal dismissed.

LAWLESS v. THE CALCUTTA LANDING AND SHIPPING CO., LD. AND THE CALCUTTA LANDING AND SHIPPING CO., LD. v. LAWLESS.
[19th August, 1881.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 17—Right of Employer to call on Manager for account —Accrual of Right on Death of Manager against Representatives.

A manager is bound to account to his employer whenever he is called upon to do so under reasonable circumstances.

On the death of such manager a fresh right to an account accrues to the employer as against the manager's representatives.

[628] In a suit for such an account accruing to the employer on the death of his manager, limitation will not commence to run until administration has been taken out to such manager's estate.

[F., 16 C.W.N. 1042 = 16 C.L.J. 288; R., 69 P.R. 1903 = 155 P.L.R. 1903; 1 C.L.J. 232 (236) = 32 C. 719; 17 C.W.N. 5 = 16 C.L.J. 282.]

THESE were original and cross suits brought by A. W. S. Lawless against the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co., and by the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co. against A. W. S. Lawless; the former being a suit by A. W. S. Lawless, as the administrator of his father's estate, to recover a sum due, as salary and commission, to his late father from the Company; and the latter being a suit by the Company against A. W. S. Lawless, as the administrator of his father's estate, to recover from it a sum of Rs. 5,707, as a debt due by the deceased to the Company.

In the original suit the plaintiff stated that his father, W.H. Lawless, had been engaged, in March 1876, as manager to the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Co., at a monthly salary of Rs. 400, with a commission of 10 per cent. on the earnings of the Company; and that previous to his father's death, which happened on the 29th August 1877, a sum of Rs. 400 as salary for the month of August 1877, and commission to the amount of Rs. 2,758 for the first half-year of 1877, had then fallen due, and that having taken out administration to his father's estate on 27th August 1879, and having demanded the sum above mentioned from the Company, he, on their refusal to pay the debt, brought this suit on the 30th August 1880, to compel them to do so.

The Company denied that any sum, either as salary or commission, was due to the plaintiff as administrator of the estate of W. H. Lawless; and stated that W. H. Lawless, in his life-time, had drawn, from the cash under his control belonging to the Company, a sum of Rs. 5,348 in excess of the salary and commission to which he was entitled up to his death; and submitted that the plaintiff ought to be decreed to pay that sum to the Company; and they further submitted that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation.

In the cross-suit filed on the 22nd day of February 1881, the plaintiff Company admitted that W. H. Lawless had been appointed their manager, in March 1876, but stated that his duties were, as such manager, to collect, or cause to be collected, [629] all sums due to them,—to cause proper entries to be made of such moneys in the Company's books,—to spend, or cause to be spent, portions of such sums bona fide for the business and purposes of the Company, and to send, or cause to be sent, the remainder thereof to the Company's Bank and to render full and true accounts of all moneys belonging to the Company to their Directors. That, shortly after the death of W. H. Lawless in August 1877, the Company learnt for the first time that W. H. Lawless had, without their knowledge and consent, been in the habit of taking sums from the cash belonging to the Company for his own private purposes, over and above the salary and commission to which he was entitled, causing such sums to be entered not in the books of account, but in a separate account headed "Received from Cash," which was kept concealed from the Company; and that, at the time of his death, the balance appearing in the separate account was Rs. 3,773 in favour of the Company. They further stated that W. H. Lawless had not kept proper accounts since November 1876, and that he misappropriated various sums of money, and had caused false entries to be made in the books of the Company; that he had failed to collect debts due to the Company; and that, after an investigation had been made by a public accountant into the books of the Company, it had been ascertained that a sum of Rs. 5,707 was due by the said W. H. Lawless to the Company.

That these facts having been fraudulently kept from the Company, their right of suit only accrued after the death of the said W. H. Lawless, when the facts were discovered; and that they were unable to bring their suit until a legal representative had been appointed to the estate of W. H. Lawless, and that they brought their suit, therefore, against A. W. S. Lawless, the administrator of the estate of W. H. Lawless, asking that the suit brought by A. W. S. Lawless against themselves and this suit might be consolidated and heard together, and praying for a decree against the estate for Rs. 5,707, and for an account.

The defendant contended that the plaintiff's suit was barred; and stated that the Company, in 1877, had instituted a suit against one Shoshee Coomar Gangooly (their cashier) charging him with being accountable to them for the sum of Rs. 5,707, [630] which was in the present suit being sued for; and that, on the 10th December 1877, they had obtained a decree against S. C. Gangooly for a sum of Rs. 4,128, being a portion of the said sum of Rs. 5,707; and he further stated that he had no assets belonging to his father's estate in his hands.

The two suits came on for hearing together, the pleadings and judgment in the case of the Company v. S. C. Gangooly were put in, and it was admitted that the sum of Rs. 5,707 sued for in that suit was identical with the item of Rs. 5,707 sued for in the cross-suit by the Company against A. W. S. Lawless.

It appeared from the plaint in the suit which the Company had brought against Shoshee Coomar Gangooly that the plaintiff Company had stated that Shoshee Coomar Gangooly acted as cashier to the Company, and that, as such cashier, it was his duty to send out bills for collection, to enter all sums received in the Company's books, to pay all such sums into the Company's Bank, to pay bills owing by the Company when passed by the manager (W. H. Lawless), and to render true and faithful accounts; and further stated that the defendant had received various sums of money on account of the Company, and that he had accounted for all such sums save and except the sum of Rs. 5,707, for which they prayed judgment. On the 11th December 1878, the Company obtained a decree against Shoshee Coomar Gangooly, which decree was affirmed on appeal, but was never satisfied.

The issues settled were: (i) Is the debt to the Company barred by limitation? (ii) Is it barred by the former suit against Gangooly?

(iii) Whether any sum is due from the estate of W. H. Lawless to the Company?

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. T. A. Apcar), for the plaintiff Company in the cross-suit, and for the defendant Company in the original suit, contended that the company's right to sue accrued on the death of W. H. Lawless when they became aware of the defalcation.

Mr. Jackson (with him Trevelyan) for the defendant in the cross-suit and the plaintiff in the original suit.—The [631] Company having proceeded against Shoshee Coomar Gangooly for the very debt and having obtained judgment against him cannot now sue us—Kendall v. Hamilton (1). King v. Hoare (2) Hemendro Coomar Mullick v. Rajendrolall Moonshee (3). I don't admit, but say for argument's sake, that at the death of Lawless, the Company might have said his accounts were wrong to the extent of several thousands, and that, as we the Company owe him money we will write his debt off against our debt to him. They might have done this prior to suit, but, as they did not give us credit for the amount, they cannot do so now; and after the decree obtained against Gangooly the debt was merged. As regards the question of an account, unless Lawless could justify his taking the money on the ground that a debt was owing to him, no question of account could arise. The plaintiff's suit is barred; limitation runs from the time the right to sue accrued, and the right accrued in the lifetime of Lawless. The Company were aware of the defalcation more than three years before the date of their suit, as evidenced by the report of the Directors, dated the 20th December, 1877. [WILSON, J.—The agent is bound to account within a reasonable time: the cause of action in his lifetime would accrue on demand; there was no demand made in the lifetime of Lawless, and so the cause of action accrued on the day of his death.]

JUDGMENTS.

WILSON, J.—These are cross-suits. The one is brought by the administrator of Captain Lawless for arrears of salary and commission due to Captain Lawless before his death as manager of the Calcutta Landing and Shipping Company. The other suit is for money for which the defendant is said not to have accounted. There is no dispute as to the amount of the administrator's claim. On the other hand, it is admitted that Captain Lawless was bound to account for the money which came to his hands as manager. Two grounds of dispute were raised to the cross-claim: first, they claim to set off what is due, and in the cross action they claim the same relief. The objection to their claim is this: first, it is said the claim is barred by limitation. Now in the case of a person employed as manager [632] the right of the employer is to have an account rendered by the person employed whenever he is called on to do so under reasonable circumstances. There is nothing to show that Captain Lawless was ever called on to account for those moneys or to account generally. He died on the 29th August, 1877, and his agency terminated, I think, by his death, the Company acquired a fresh right to have an account rendered by his representative, and that right is recognized by art. 89 of the second schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. As he died on the 29th August 1877, the right accrued then, but no administration was taken out till the 27th July 1880. The case, therefore, is protected by s. 17 of the Limitation Act, which says, "when a person against whom, if he were living, a right to institute a suit or make an application would have accrued, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a legal representative of the deceased against whom the plaintiff may institute or make such suit or application." Therefore time did not begin to run against the Company till the 27th July 1880, and inasmuch as the cross suit was brought on the 22nd day of February, 1881, and the written statement in the other suit was filed earlier, the Company is not barred, nor precluded, from setting off the amount in the first suit. The second objection to the right of the Company is this. It is said the Company's claim is barred by their having obtained a decree in suit No. 699 of 1879, against Shoshee Coomar Gangooly. It is admitted that the aggregate sum for which the decree was obtained in that suit, is the same as is claimed in this suit, and made up of the same items. On these facts it is contended, though recovery was not obtained of the whole amount claimed, that the decree is a bar to the present suit. In support of this contention, Kendal v. Hamilton (1) and Hemendro Coomar Mullick v. Rájendrolall Moonshee (2) were cited. But they do not bear on this case. In those cases the liability was a joint liability, and the recovery was against one of the persons jointly liable. There is no trace in this case of a joint liability, the claim against Shoshee Coomar Gangooly was as banian, and the claim [633] against Lawless is as manager, and, as such, liable for sums which came to his hands. The liability was not joint, they are based on distinct contracts, one by Shoshee Coomar Gangooly as banian, and the other by Lawless as manager. The liability is distinct. The fact is that money came to Shoshee Coomar Gangooly as banian, and the same money came to Lawless as manager. There is no ground for saying that the recovery of a decree in the former suit is a bar to the present suit, or to the Company's right of set-off. There will have to be an account taken of the moneys which came to Lawless's hands, and the hearing of the two suits will be reserved till after the account has been taken.

Arrears of Rent—Enhancement—Notices of Enhancement—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s.14.

Per GARTH, C.J., PONTIFEX and MITTER, JJ. (MORRIS and McDONELL, JJ., dissenting).—A suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate brought by all the shareholders will lie, notice under s. 14 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 having been issued at the instance of some of the persons entitled to the rent.

(2) 3 C. 353 = 1 C. L. R. 488.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., on the 4th May 1881, with the following opinion :—

MACLEAN, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit, who are the appellants before us, are the proprietors of Mouza Kazibigha, in [634] which the defendants cultivate 16 bighas 11 biswas 6 dhurs. The plaint alleges that this land was formerly held on a bhowli rent, then a cash rent was paid for it for some time, and now a bhowli rent has been reverted to. The claim is for a bhowli rent for 1285 F., and for a kabuliat for five years from 1286 F. The rent demanded is at the rate of nine-sixteenths of the produce, valued at Rs. 106-13-6, for the year 1285, and it is stated in the plaint that a notice was served on the defendants, under s. 14, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, calling on them to execute a kabuliat to pay nine-sixteenths of the produce as enhanced rent.

The defendants plead that the notice served upon them was not according to law inasmuch as it was served on the application of some of the proprietors only,—viz., 14 annas 15 cowri 18 bowri 1 phowri shareholders. They also plead that each rent cannot be converted into produce rent, and that, by a decision dated 22nd December 1875, their rent was declared to be payable in cash. Exemption from enhancement is claimed.

In the first Court it was held, that the suit was bad so far as it referred to the claim for enhanced rent by these proprietors, who had not caused the notice of enhancement to be served. The other issues, save as to the quantity of land in the defendants' occupancy, were decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that all the proprietors had not joined in causing the notice of enhancement to be served, which was therefore defective.

The only question submitted for our consideration is, whether a suit by all the proprietors, based upon a notice of enhancement issued at the instance of some of them, will lie.

The Full Bench decision in Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1) has been held by the lower Appellate Court to be in point; but that case, when examined, is really no authority in the present case. There the suit was by the izardar of a share of a village or estate entitled to receive his share of the rent separately. The learned Judge of this Court, who decided the case in special appeal, held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make the persons entitled to the remainder of the rent parties to the [635] suit. On appeal under the Letters Patent, the question referred to the Full Bench was whether the plaintiff "could sue to enhance the rent of that share separately without joining the other co-sharers of the tenure," and the Full Bench answered that question in the negative.

That case, therefore, is authority for the proposition that a co-sharer cannot enhance his share of a tenant's rent, unless he makes the other persons entitled to the rest the real parties; and if it went no further than that, it would not be authority for the proposition that one co-sharer could not enhance his share if he did make other co-sharers parties. But there is another passage in the judgment which seems to meet this proposition.

Towards the close of their judgment, the learned Judges remarked :— "The Rent Law, in our opinion, does not contemplate the enhancement of a part of an entire rent; and the enhancement of the rent of a separate share is inconsistent with the continuance of the lease of the entire tenure." There is, however, direct authority—Troylochhotaram Chowdhry v. Muthoora Mohun Dey (1) and Ram Lochun Dutt v. Petamber Paul (2)—for a contrary view, which does not seem to have been discussed before the Full Bench. For my part I should be glad to have the question re-considered.

Premising that the rent was originally payable in one sum to the co-sharers jointly, but that by arrangement between the co-sharers on the one hand and the tenant on the other the latter has been in the habit of paying a portion of the rent to each co-sharer in respect of his particular share, we have abundant authority for the right of each co-sharer to realise his share by suit, subject to the rule that he must join his co-sharers either as plaintiffs or defendants; and it is difficult to see why he is to be confined to suing for rent, but prohibited from suing for rent, at enhanced rates. Suppose the tenant agrees to pay enhanced rent to one co-sharer, but refuses to do so to the rest, the latter would surely be allowed to claim the same increase as their more fortunate partners. But they must proceed according to law, and serve a notice of [636] enhancement—Salgram Opadhya v. Maharaja Moheshur Bux Sing (3). It may be said that the tenant has agreed to vary the rent of his tenure in favor of one of his landlords, but why may not one of his landlords compel him to vary it? This raises the question of the interpretation of the words "person to whom the rent is payable," in s. 14, Beng. Act VIII of 1869. If these words mean "all the persons to whom the entire rent is payable," then the authority last quoted is bad law. The co-sharer to whom the tenant has agreed to pay enhanced rent could not be compelled to join in a notice, the other co-sharers would not be "all the persons to whom the rent is payable." I must say that on the premises I do not see why a co-sharer should not sue for enhanced rent of a share conditional on his causing a notice for enhancement of the entire rent to be served through the Collector.

The object of the notice is to give the tenant the opportunity of surrendering his land, if unwilling to agree to enhancement, and he can do that just as well on a notice by some of his landlords as on a notice by all of them. If he elects to contest the liability of his rent to enhancement, he can do so on better terms, if all his landlords are arrayed against him than if some of them are neutral. In fact, all that is necessary for the suit is, that notice shall have been served upon him, that he will, for the ensuing year, be liable to pay more rent than in the previous year. If on such a notice by one co-sharer, a suit will lie for a share of the enhanced rent, all co-sharers being parties, and separate payment being proved or admitted, a fortiori, a suit can be brought by all the co-sharers for the whole enhanced rent.

But this view is opposed to the views of the Judges in Kashee Kishor Roy v. Alip Mundul (4) Prinsep, J., expresses himself thus:—"One co-sharer would not be competent to issue a notice of enhancement of the rent of the entire tenure, nor could he, under the terms of the judgment of the Full Bench, issue a notice of enhancement of the rent due on his own particular share," &c. The first of these propositions is opposed to the authority I have quoted, which the learned Judge himself would have followed if [637] he had not felt bound by the Full Bench decision. Morris, J., (1) W.R. 1864, Act X, Rul. 41.

(3) W.R. 1864, Act X, Rul. 94.

(2) Ibid, 111.

(4) 6 C. 149.

remarks that "the notice of enhancement prescribed by the Act is defective if it be not served on the application of all the co-sharers in the tenure." And again—"But inasmuch as the re-adjustment of the rent to which he agrees does disturb the terms on which the tenant holds the tenure equally from him and his co-sharer, it is necessary, before any such re-adjustment of rent can be made, that he, as well as his co-sharer, should sign the notice and apply to have it served upon the tenant."

It is however to be remarked that that suit was a suit for enhanced rent of a share on a notice in which the plaintiff only claimed the rate due on his own share, calculated on what would be due on the entire tenure. It differs therefore somewhat from the suit under appeal, the notice in which referred to the rent of the entire tenure, and not to a portion of it.

Nevertheless, the principle upon which the judgment proceeds is applicable to suits for the entire rent, upon notice of enhancement of the entire rent, and in this principle I do not concur. I think it should therefore be referred to a Full Bench for decision:—(i) Whether a suit can be brought by a co-sharer in actual separate receipt of a share of the rent for enhanced rent of his share, notice having been served in respect of the whole rent, and all the co-sharers being made parties to the suit? and (ii) Whether a suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rate brought by all the share-holders will lie, notice under s. 14, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, having been issued at the instance of some of the persons entitled to the rent?

MITTER, J.—I agree to this order of reference to a Full Bench.

The following judgments were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C. J. (PONTIFEX and MITTER, JJ., concurring).—I think that the point referred to us in the first question does not arise upon the appeal.

[638] Second.—The second question, in my opinion, should be answered in the affirmative. The practice hitherto, so far as we have been able to ascertain it, seems to have been to treat a notice to enhance as insufficient, unless it has been signed by or on behalf of all the co-sharers. I believe that this is the first occasion on which the question has been referred to a Full Bench; and I therefore consider myself at liberty to decide it according to what appears to me the reasonable construction of s. 14 of the Rent Law.

The right to enhance rent from time to time, as occasion arises, is, in my opinion, one of those incidents of a contract of tenancy which the landlords or any of them have, as much right to enforce, as a covenant to pay the road-cess, or to cultivate the land in any particular manner. It is true that all the co-sharers ought to join in bringing any suit of the kind. But suppose that some of them refuse to join as plaintiffs. Section 32 of the Civil Procedure Code provides, that no one shall be made a plaintiff in a suit against his will. In that case are those who desire to bring a suit to be deprived of their rights, because the others will not join as plaintiffs?

The reason of their refusing to join may be, that they are colluding with or influenced in some way by the tenant. Are these recusants to be allowed to deprive their co-sharers of the means of enforcing their just dues, or on the other hand to drive them to the expensive, tedious, and inconvenient alternative of a butwara? I think not. The simple and obvious remedy for such a state of things is to allow the co-sharers who wish to sue to do so, but making the recusant co-sharers defendants in the suit. The Court will thus have all the parties before it and the means of doing justice between them. If the claim made by the plaintiffs is unfounded, they will probably be made to pay the costs, not only of the tenants, but of their co-sharers defendants. If, on the other hand, their claim is a just one, and the conduct of the co-sharers defendants has been unreasonable, the latter would probably be made to pay the plaintiff's costs. The Court would have no difficulty in fairly adjusting, in a suit so framed, the rights of all the parties.

[639] Then is there any difference in point of principle between a suit brought to enhance the rent, and a suit brought to enforce any other right of the landlords? It appears to me that the rule which applies to bringing a suit is applicable also to giving the notice necessary to the suit. The notice is to be given by "the person in receipt of the rent," which is the phrase used generally in the Rent Law as signifying the landlord or landlords; and I think that those persons who are entitled to sue as landlords have also the right under this section to give the necessary previous notice. No mischief, as it seems to me, can follow from this construction; whereas the contrary construction might lead to great injustice.

I think therefore that the decision of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed, and that the case should be remanded to that Court to be tried upon its merits. The costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

The same decree will be made in the analogous cases.

MORRIS, J.—In my opinion, both the questions which form the subject of this reference should be answered in the negative.

The real question, which underlies both the questions of the reference, appears to be, whether a notice of enhancement of rent served by order of the Collector on the application of a proprietor or proprietors of a fractional share of the land held by the tenant cultivator, whose rent is sought to be enhanced, is a good notice under the Rent Law, provided that subsequently all the proprietors join in a suit brought to enforce payment of the rent at the rate specified in the notice. If the notice is a good one, then clearly a suit brought by all the proprietors on the basis of such notice would lie, though it by no means follows that a co-sharer in a joint undivided estate, who can bring a suit for his fractional share of the gross stipulated rent on the strength of what the Full Bench, in the case of Gūni Mahomed v. Morān (1), describe as a private arrangement between himself, his co-sharers, and the tenant, is competent, [640] to bring a suit for rent at an enhanced rate in the proportion due upon his share when the payment of rent at such enhanced rate forms no part of that arrangement. The notice necessarily conveys an intimation to the tenant that the terms on which he has hitherto paid the rent, and held his land, are to be altered, and that he must accept a potta, or, as I understand it, a new contract of lease, and give a counterpart kabuliāt on the terms specified, or relinquish his tenure. But if this is so, and the tenant agrees to the terms proposed, can the part-owner, who has served the notice, act independently of his co-sharers, and grant a potta and take a kabuliāt accordingly? Under the Full Bench decision just referred to, he is not competent to do so, because, to use the language of the Full Bench, the notice and the potta and kabuliati based upon it are "obviously inconsistent with the continued existence of the original lease of the tenure." This presents one strong objection to the validity of such a notice.

Then again the Rent Act, s. 14, requires that "the notice shall be served by order of the Collector on the application of the person to whom the rent is payable." When more persons than one are entitled to receive the rent, then "the person to whom the rent is payable" must signify all such persons. This is the natural meaning which these words convey, and this is, as it seems to me, the meaning which they are intended to convey wherever they are used throughout the Act. Take the case of a potta, which under s. 2 "every ryot is entitled to receive from the person to whom the rent of the land held or cultivated by him is payable." It need hardly be said that a potta, which purports to give in lease a certain property, would be an incomplete instrument if signed by a proprietor possessed of only a partial interest therein, and not authorised to sign on behalf of the other proprietors.

The right to measure is given (ss. 25 and 38) "to every proprietor of an estate or tenure or other person in receipt of the rents of an estate or tenure." Repeated decisions of this Court have held that this right cannot be exercised at the instance of a proprietor of a fractional share of a joint [641] undivided estate. The application to the Civil Court or to the Collector must be made by all the proprietors. See Santiram Panja v. Bycunt Panja (1), Moolook Chand Mundul v. Modhoo-soodun Bachusputty (2), and Shoorender Mohun Roy v. Bhuggobut Churn Gungopadhya (3).

When a tenant has been illegally ejected, and under s. 27 seeks to recover the occupancy of his land "from the person entitled to receive rent for the same," he would, in the event of there being more persons than one entitled to receive the rent, necessarily frame his suit against all, and not against one only.

So a deposit received by a Court under s. 47 would not be paid to a shareholder as "the person in receipt of the rent of the land" of the tenant depositor, unless he showed his authority from the other sharers to receive the money.

Nor would a suit under s. 53, for ejectment of a cultivator not having a right of occupancy, lie on the part of a person in receipt of only a fractional share of the rent.

The law in the matter of distraint also supports this view. By s. 68 the power of distraint is limited to "the zemindar or other person entitled to receive the rent of the land immediately from the actual cultivator." But as a sharer in a joint estate of the class referred to in the preceding section (64) is entitled to receive his quota of the rent direct from the cultivator, an express proviso is made that he shall not exercise this power of distraint independently of his co-sharers.

It appears to me that the question of this reference, bearing on the relation of landlord and tenant in the matter of enhancement of rent, cannot be determined by considerations arising out of any general or abstract rights of property; for it must be remembered that rights incidental to property in one country are not necessarily rights incidental to property in another country. We see that, throughout the Rent Act, the Legislature treat the various persons who compose the proprietary body in a joint undivided estate as one person. There is supposed to be a mal cutcheri or other common place "where rents are usually payable," at which receipts are to be given [642] and moneys are to be tendered (see s. 46 and sch. A), whence, in fact, the administration of the joint estate proceeds, and whence consequently all notices of enhancement of rent should issue. This is only in accordance with the joint family system which prevails in the country, and gives to the kurta, or head of the family, the entire responsibility of management. In a joint undivided estate, the kurta of the family, or a joint manager, is sole administrator; and if by reason of family dissension, or the intrusion of a stranger, any shareholder desires to deal separately with his own share and manage independently, he can follow what is the recognized custom of the country, and obtain a partition of his share. This course is, no doubt, somewhat tedious and oftentimes expensive; but it is the course which both law and custom sanction, and which a purchaser of a share voluntarily accepts as one of the incidents of a joint undivided estate. Nor is it an argument that as one of several joint tenants has a right to contest his liability to pay the enhanced rent demanded of him, so a part-proprietor of a joint undivided estate has a corresponding right to enhance the rent. The answer to this is, the enhancement of rent, where it is not accepted without demur by the ryot, is a right which a proprietor can only exercise subject to the restrictions imposed by s. 14 of the Rent Act. That section, as it affects prejudicially the interest of the ryot, ought, in my opinion, to be construed strictly. The ryot has a right to say that he shall be secured in the uninterrupted possession and enjoyment of his holding at the rent hitherto paid by him, unless and until all the persons entitled to receive the rent from him combine to serve him with a notice specifying the grounds on which they claim higher rent, and are prepared to establish those grounds in a Court of Law. The succeeding section (15) enacts, that any under-tenant or ryot on whom such notice has been served, may contest his liability. Therefore, if several tenants who hold land jointly are served with the notice, the law expressly allows one or all of them (though it is hardly to be supposed that all would not join if there was good ground for so doing) to contest the enhancement. In this matter of enhancement [643] therefore joint proprietors and joint tenants are not placed upon an equal footing so far as their rights in the property are concerned under the law. If a ryot can be served with notice of enhancement of rent at the instance of a part-proprietor of the land held by him, it is immaterial for the purposes of this argument, how small may be the fractional share which such part-proprietor possesses. Any proprietor, however minute his interest may be, may set the law in motion and disturb pre-existing arrangements without the previous consent of his co-sharers. And if the first question be answered in the affirmative,—that is, if it be sufficient for a part-owner, after issue of a general notice, to make his co-sharers parties as defendants to an enhancement suit, then a tenant is always liable to be exposed to the caprices of individual shareholders, and perhaps to prolonged litigation, for I can see nothing to prevent year after year a fresh suit for enhancement being brought by each separate shareholder. The plaintiff in each suit would take care to remedy the defects in proof of his predecessor, and so the tenant would be forced eventually to succumb.

But apart from this possible abuse of separate notice on their own account by individual shareholders, I think it is not an unimportant fact, that, so far as my experience extends, and I am given to understand so far as the experience of my brother Civilian Judges of this Court extends, the custom of the country and of the Courts in the matter of notices of enhancement of rent is to issue them at the instance of all the proprietors, and not of a part-proprietor only. This custom appears to me to be in conformity both with the letter and the spirit of the law as it now stands, and I think therefore that it should be maintained.

MCDONELL, J.—I am of opinion that both the questions should be answered in the negative. I concur in the view of the law taken by Mr. Justice Morris and in the judgment just delivered by him.

LOKENATH MULLICK AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. ODOYCHURN MULLICK AND OTHERS (Defendants). [19th August, 1881.]

Administration Suit—Supplemental Suit—Debts due by Appointed Managing Members under the Will of the Testator—Limitation.

A and B, two of the sons of one N, had been declared, in a suit brought to administer N's estate, to be indebted to the estate; it was also declared in such suit that a certain sum of money should be set apart for the performance of certain religious ceremonies, and paid into Court.

A and B died without having satisfied their debt.

In a suit supplemental to the former suit, the descendants of the sons of N, amongst whom were the descendants of A and B, claimed to be entitled to their share in the interest on the funds in the hands of the Court, and sought for a division of such accumulation of interest.

Held, that, notwithstanding that the debt due from A and B to the estate was barred, the descendants of A and B could not be allowed to share in the accumulations of interest in the hands of the Court without first satisfying the debt due by their ancestors to the estate.

[R., 6 L.B.R. (4th Qr.) 34=14 Ind. Cas. 508.]

IN the year 1807, a certain suit was brought in the Supreme Court for the administration of the estate of one Nemyechand Mullick; and in that suit, on the 11th July 1808, a decree was passed, declaring that certain testamentary papers executed by the said Nemyechand Mullick were valid; that his estate was joint and undivided; that his eight sons were entitled to the estate: Ramrutton and one Ramgopal being entitled to the management of the estate, and certain enquiries were ordered to be made as to what sums would be required for the performance, in a suitable manner, of the several acts and ceremonies directed to be performed by the testator Nemyechand Mullick, and a direction was given to the Master to take an account.

By another decree, dated the 23rd August 1823, a partition of the joint undivided property was ordered to be carried out, and, amongst other things, it was ordered, that the Master should [645] take an account of the rents and profits of the moveable property received by Ramgopal and Ramrutton from the date of the death of Nemyechand.

By another decree in the same suit, dated the 6th of April 1837, certain sums of money were ordered to be set apart for the performance of the acts, works, and ceremonies mentioned in the said testamentary papers; and a sum of Rs. 2,07,226 was also ordered to be paid out to the surviving sons of Nemyechand Mullick (excepting the said Ramrutton) as trustees for the due performance of the said ceremonies; but, owing to certain disagreements between the parties, this sum remained in Court, and the ceremonies remained unperformed. It was further declared by the said last-mentioned decree that there was in the hands of the said Ramrutton and the heirs of the said Ramgopal a sum of Rs. 33,65,018 belonging to the estate of the said Nemyechand Mullick, and a further sum of Rs. 9,95,887 in Court, which sums were divisible between the surviving sons and the representatives of the then deceased sons, and were ordered to be paid to them by the said Ramrutton and the representatives of the said Ramgopal, and in default of such payment being made by the representative of Ramgopal, that the master should sell the immoveable estate of the said Ramgopal. Default was made, and the estate of Ramgopal was sold. Certain parts of these sums were paid as directed, but a balance due from the estate of Ramgopal and from Ramrutton, amounting to Rs. 20,00,000, still remained unpaid.

In the year 1880 the plaintiffs, who were the descendants of one of the eight sons of Nemyechand Mullick, instituted this suit against the representatives of the remaining seven sons of Nemyechand asking that their suit might be taken as supplemental to the former suit (inasmuch as several members of the family who were defendants had since died, and the suit had not been revived against their representatives), and that they might be entitled to the benefit of the decrees already passed.

That the sums of money now in Court to the credit of the cause might be paid out and distributed after due performance of the ceremonies, &c., and that the shares of such monies [646] receiveable by the representatives of Ramrutton and Ramgopal might be applied in payment of the sums due by their estates to the estate of Nemyechand and that a scheme might be framed by the Court for the performance of the ceremonies.

The defendants, who were the representatives other than the plaintiffs, of the other sons of Nemyechand, put in various written statements: Odoychurn, the sole surviving son of Ramgopal, contending that, under the decree of the 6th of April 1837, his father's estate was sold by the Court and the proceeds applied to the debt due by his father to the estate of Nemyechand, and that, therefore, further execution of that decree against his estate was barred by limitation; and that, on the death of one of the descendants of Nemyechand in October 1875, the suit then subsisting abated, and was not revived against his representatives, and that, therefore, he (Odoychurn) could not now be deprived of his right to participate in the accumulation in Court.

Toolsee Doss, who was the representative of Ramrutton's estate, put in the same defence.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Ameer Ali), for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Stokoe (with him Mr. Hyde), for Odoychurn.

Mr. Pollinson, for Toolsee Doss.

Mr. Branson, Mr. T. A. Apcar, Mr. Handley, Mr. Mittra, Mr. White, Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Agnew, Mr. C. C. Dutt, Mr. Beeby, Mr. Chatterjee, and Mr. K. Mitter appeared for the other defendants.

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This is a suit in which the plaintiffs ask to revive certain causes which have abated, and ask that the present suit may be taken as supplemental to the said causes and that the plaintiffs may be declared entitled to the benefit of the various decrees and orders made therein from time to time.

The original suit was instituted in the Supreme Court on the 26th October 1807, and then there have been a series of [647] other suits by which the older suit has been revived from time to time. The original suit was for the administration of the estate of Nemyechand Mullick, and the parties to it were his grandsons, of whom two were defendants.

The parties to the present suit all claim under one or other of those grandsons. In 1808, a decree was made, under which certain testamentary papers were established and the grandsons declared entitled to shares, &c. Another decree was made in 1837, under which certain moneys were set apart for certain purposes which are said to have been satisfied, and it was declared that there were then in the hands of Ramgopal and Ramrutton Mullick and in those of the heirs of, &c., over thirty lacs, and it was ordered that Ramrutton should pay the balance after deduction of certain sums to be retained in diminution of the debt. It is further admitted that the debt was reduced by the sale by the master of the late Supreme Court of the immoveable estate of Ramgopal Mullick.

There is now a sum in Court arising from accumulations of interest on the sum set apart for the performance of certain acts, works, and ceremonies which were to be performed; and the specific object of the present suit is a division of such accumulations. The only serious controversy is, whether the sons and representatives of Ramgopal and Ramrutton should share without satisfying the debt declared to be due from their respective ancestors. They cannot in my judgment receive any shares. It is held in England that an executor is justified in retaining a share, though the debt is barred by limitation—Courtenay v. Williams (1); and the series of cases collected in L.R., 20 Eq., 644, establish this. There is no difference between the state of the law in England and the state of the Law here; see Mohesh Pal v. Bussunt Kumaree (2). Executors would be justified in withholding payment of a residue distributable to the two estates till the debt is satisfied. It is clear what would be the duty of executors is the duty of the Court. It follows, therefore, that the representatives of Ramgopal and Ramrutton are not entitled to share, and their shares must be divided amongst the other parties entitled. The decree will declare [648] there must be this division, and that the suit is supplemental to the old one.

There must be an enquiry whether trusts 1 to 9 have been carried out, and what sum is divisible. There will also be an enquiry as to the devolution of the estates since the decree of 1837 to ascertain who are now entitled to share. This enquiry may be assisted by investigation of the records and supplemented by affidavit. The costs of suit will be reserved.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

DULICHAND (Defendant) v. RAMKISHEN SINGH AND OTHERS
(Plaintiffs.)* [5th April, 1881.]

Money paid, but not due, and paid under compulsion.

A mortgagee of two separate properties became by purchase the owner of the equity of redemption of one of them, and of this property the value was so proportioned to his payments that the mortgage debt was in effect satisfied. This mortgagee, however obtained a decree and order in execution for the sale of the other property, on which his mortgage was the second. Of the latter property, the plaintiffs, who also represented the first mortgagee, had become purchasers, and they filed objections to the sale. These were disallowed, and they thereupon paid into Court money sufficient to satisfy the decree in order to prevent the sale.

[649] Held, that this was not a voluntary payment, nor a payment of money equitably due; but one made under compulsion of law, i.e., under pressure of the execution-proceedings. And held, that this might be recovered in a suit for a money-decree, the remedy not being confined to the execution-proceedings.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (July 20th, 1878), confirming a decree of the Judges of Patna (July 29th, 1876).

The respondents sued to obtain a refund of Rs. 78,393, with interest, from the appellant. They had paid this sum to him in order to prevent the sale, in execution of a decree which he, as mortgagee, had obtained against a third party, of lands forming a mouza, in which the plaintiffs had an interest as purchasers. The claim of the latter (preferred under ss. 278, 279 of the Code of Civil Procedure) having been disallowed, they paid into Court an amount sufficient to satisfy the decree. The question now raised on this appeal was whether the suit would lie.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. Arathoon, for the appellant.

Mr. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. Doyne, for the respondents.

The facts, as well as the orders of the Courts in India, are stated in their Lordships' judgment which was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

SIR M. E. SMITH.—This is a suit brought by the respondents, Ramkishen and others, against Dulichand, the appellant, to recover back a sum of Rs. 78,393, which the respondents had paid to the appellant to prevent the sale of a mouza called Korina, which had been attached and put up for sale in execution of a decree obtained by the appellant against one Neoghi. The suit claimed, in the alternative, that the amount of Rs. 78,393 should be apportioned between Korina and another mouza of the name of Nandan. The point, upon the facts found in the Courts below, is a short and plain one, but in order to make it intelligible, it is necessary to refer to the transactions which took place between the parties, though not at great length.

Ram Rutton Neoghi, a zemindar, was the owner of several mehals, and amongst others of two mouzas called Korina and [650] Nandan. These mouzas were mortgaged in the way which will be hereafter described. The first mortgage which appears is of the date of the 3rd July 1865, and is a mortgage of Korina made by Neoghi to the Land Mortgage Bank of India, to secure a lakh of rupees. In January 1867, Neoghi borrowed from one Lutf Ali Khan a sum of Rs. 10,000, and gave as security a mortgage-bond on certain mouzas, not including either Korina or Nandan. It is only necessary to refer to this mortgage-bond for the purpose of explaining the next mortgage transaction, and also of explaining a reference which is made in the course of the proceedings to the debt due to Lutf Ali Khan. It appears that Lutf Ali Khan obtained a decree upon his bond for Rs. 19,416. He did not, apparently, attach the properties included in his mortgage-bond, but attached, and was about to sell, Nandan. In order to prevent the sale of Nandan, on the 8th of January 1870, Neoghi mortgaged to the appellant, with several other mouzas not material to be mentioned, the two mouzas, Korina and Nandan, to secure Rs. 38,000. The mortgage of Korina was a second mortgage, it being subject to the prior mortgage to the bank; that of Nandan was apparently a first mortgage. The next transaction is a mortgage by Neoghi of Nandan and other mouzas to the respondents for Rs. 5,509. The bank brought a suit on their mortgage, and on the 17th April 1871, they obtained a decree for the sale of Korina and other mouzas to realize the debt due to them. On the 29th July 1872, Korina was attached by the bank, and also by another decree-holder, creditor, one Chuttun Singh. On the 16th December 1872, Mouza Korina was sold under Chuttun Singh's decree, but subject to the bank's mortgage, to the respondents for Rs. 115. Shortly after the sale, the respondents paid into Court Rs. 58,719 to satisfy the mortgage and decree of the bank against Korina, and in the following October (1873) were put into possession of that mouza. They, therefore, were the purchasers of Neoghi's interest in Korina, which had been sold by Chuttun Singh, and paid off the prior mortgage to the bank, and the amount so paid is found by the Courts below to have exceeded the value of Korina.

[651] Concurrently with these proceedings affecting Korina, others were going on with regard to Nandan. The respondents, on the 29th of February 1872, obtained a decree in a suit which they had brought on their mortgage of Nandan, and attached it and other mouzas. On the 5th August 1872, the appellant intervened in the execution-proceedings in this suit. He gave notice of his mortgage, and required that it should be notified at the time of the sale; and it was so notified. The sale was made subject to that notification, and of course subject to the mortgage to the appellant, upon which he at that time claimed that a sum of Rs. 1,51,239 was due. It is plain what the effect of such a notification upon the sale must have been, and the biddings were only for the equity of redemption, which was of small value. The sale took place in August 1872, and the purchaser was one Dindyal, the appellant's brother, the price being

Rs. 11,710. A certificate of sale and possession were obtained on the 11th September 1873. It has been found by both Courts that Diudyal purchased benami for the appellant. The appellant, therefore, having given notice of his mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption subject to his own debt, and thus became both owner of the equity of redemption and mortgagee. In that state of things it became material to inquire what was the value of Nandan. It has been found by the Courts that its value, beyond the purchase-money exceeded the amount due upon the appellant's mortgage, and was sufficient to cover not only that amount, but the Rs. 19,416 due to Lutf Ali Khan, if that sum was really due to him. Under these circumstances, it must be taken that the mortgage-debt was satisfied by the purchase of Nandan and the value of that estate. The appellant, having thus obtained the full amount of his debt, could no longer avail himself of any other part of his security. The mortgage was only a security for the debt, and when it was satisfied, there was an end of any right to resort to the further securities he held. What gives occasion to the present action are the circumstances which will now be stated.

On the 1st of July 1872, the appellant sued Neoghi on his mortgage for principal and interest. The claim he then made [652] was the same he had notified in the suit brought by the respondents as mortgagees of Nandan, to which reference has been already made, namely, Rs. 1,51,239. It appears that sum included penal interest, and the Courts reduced it to a sum of Rs. 78,393. In June 1873 he obtained a decree, and on the 7th January 1874 an order to attach Korina. At the time he obtained that order he had become the purchaser of Nandan under the circumstances which have been stated; and his obtaining it after his mortgage-debt had been thus virtually satisfied was clearly inequitable. Korina being attached, the respondents intervened, as the purchasers of that mouza, and as representing the first mortgagees of it, the bank, and filed objections to the attachment and sale. The respondents in this way made the strongest protest that they could against the sale, but their objections did not prevail. The Judge of Patna disallowed them, and the High Court, upon appeal affirmed the decision of the Judge, stating that the petitioner must be left to his remedy, if any, in a regular suit. The result was, that the sale of Korina was ordered to take place; and to prevent that sale, and to protect the property which they had purchased, the respondents paid into Court the sum of Rs. 78,393 to satisfy the appellant's decree. They at once gave notice in writing that they should seek a refunding of that money in due course of law, and the present suit was brought for that purpose.

It is only necessary to refer shortly to the judgments. Both the Courts have concurred in holding that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. Certain facts are found clearly and succinctly by the Judge of the District Court. His findings are these: "I find, therefore, that the following facts are established: (i) that Mouzas Korina and Nandan are both made subject to a lien of Rs. 78,393 by the mortgage of January 1870"—that is, the appellant's mortgage; "(ii) that plaintiffs have, as owners of Mouza Korina, paid off a lien of a date prior to 1870 on Mouza Korina,"—that is, the bank's mortgage,— "exceeding in amount the estimated value of Mouza Korina as estimated by defendant himself; (iii) that the whole amount of the lien of Rs. 78,393, therefore, falls upon Mouza [653] Nandan, if its value is equal to the amount of the lien; (iv) that the value of Mouza Nandan is equal to the amount of such lien, even if Rs. 18,393 paid by the defendant be deducted"—that is, the amount said to have been paid to Lutf Ali; "that plaintiffs, having paid this lien, are entitled to recover the amount so paid from the auction-purchaser of Mouza Nandan; that defendant No. 1 is the auction-purchaser of Mouza Nandan." It has been shown that at the time that this payment of Rs. 78,393 was made by the respondents to the appellant, the debt had been satisfied by his purchase of Nandan under the circumstances above stated. He has, therefore, received it twice over, and it is obvious that, in such a case, it is inequitable that he should hold the money paid to him, under compulsion, by the respondents. It is to be observed that the appellant had only a second mortgage upon Korina, but, in the view of their Lordships have taken of the case, it is unnecessary to go into the question of marshalling the securities.

The arguments at the bar were not directed to show that there is any equity upon which the appellant could retain this money; but the objections taken to the action were that the payment was voluntary, and that the remedy, if any, was in the execution-proceedings. Their Lordships think that there is no pretence for saying that the payment was voluntary. It was made to prevent the sale which would otherwise inevitably have taken place of the mouza which the respondents had purchased, and was made therefore under compulsion of law,—that is, under force of these execution-proceedings. In this country, if the goods of a third person are seized by the Sheriff and are about to be sold as the goods of the defendant, and the true owner pays money to protect his goods and prevent the sale, he may bring an action to recover back the money he has so paid; it is the compulsion under which they are about to be sold that makes the payment involuntary. See Valpy and others, assignees of Bate v. Manley (1).

It was also objected that the remedy is not the proper one, and that some further proceedings should have been taken in the execution suit; but none were pointed out by Mr. Arathoon [654] which would afford a suitable remedy, or which would preclude such an action as the present.

The Lordships think the decree of the Judge of Patna is incorrect in declaring that the plaintiffs are entitled to realize the decretal money by auction sale of Mouza Nandan; and that it ought to be amended by striking out that declaration. In the view they take of the case, the decree should be a simple money-decree. On the whole case, they agree with the Courts below, though not altogether on the same grounds, that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in the action; and they will humbly advise Her Majesty, subject to the amendment above indicated, to affirm the decrees appealed from. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Principal and agent—Form of suit for account—Procedure on taking Accounts—Misjoinder—Limitation—Notice of objections to decree by respondent—Accounts of joint property—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 250, 395 and 396; sch. iv, Form 157—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5.

In a suit for an account by a principal against his agent, the plaintiff should ask in his plaint that a proper account may be taken. If the defendant is found liable to render such account for a certain period, the Court should make [655] an interlocutory decree declaring that he is so liable, and direct him to file an account in Court within a fixed period. This decree may be enforced under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code. After an account has been filed the plaintiff should be allowed reasonable time to examine it. If the objections are numerous, the procedure prescribed by ss. 394 and 395 and Form 157 of sch. iv to the Code should be followed. When the accounts have been taken, the Court must determine the amount due, and the final decree should be for the payment of this amount, and also, if necessary, for the delivery of any papers, vouchers or other documents which have come into the hands of the agent in the course of his employment.

In a suit for an account against A and B as agents, the plaintiff asked for an account as against A from 1265 (1858) to 1283 (1876), and as against B from 1281 (1874) to 1283 (1876).

Held, that there had been no misjoinder.

The seven days within which a notice of objections to a decree by a respondent under s. 561 of the Code must be given, is not a period to which the provisions of paragraph 2 of s. 5 of the Limitation Act can be extended, and the Court has no discretion to extend the period.

[F., 2 A.W.N. 213; Appr., 9 C. 631 (632); R., 15 C.P.L.R. 61 (64)]

IN these two suits the plaintiffs, who were co-sharers in certain properties, sued the defendants, Degamber Mozumdar and Mohima Chandra Sen, as agents, and they also joined as defendants their other co-sharers, alleging against them fraud and collusion with the abovenamed defendants. As against Degamber Mozumdar and Mohima Chandra Sen the suits were for monies received by them as agents and for an account, as against Degamber Mozumdar from 1265 (1858) to Pous 1283 (December 1876), and as against Mohima Chandra Sen from Kartick 1281 (October 1874) to Pous 1283 (Dec. 1876). The employment of the defendant Degamber Mozumdar commenced in 1265 (1858), and that of the defendant Mohima Chandra Sen in 1281 (1874). The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for accounts for 1282 (1875) and up to Pous 1283 (December 1876). The District Judge modified this decree and directed that the defendant Degamber Mozumdar should render the accounts directed from 1280 (1873) up to Pous 1283 (December 1876), and that the defendant Mohima Chandra Sen should furnish accounts from Kartick 1280 (Oct. 1873) to Pous 1283 (December 1876).

* Appeal from Appellate Decrees, Nos. 447 and 448 of 1880, against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Officiating Judge of Dacca, dated the 10th of December 1879, modifying the decree of Baboo Gungachurn Sircar, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 20th of November 1878.

Against this decree these defendants appealed, contending among other things that there had been a misjoinder, inasmuch [656] as the accounts asked for from Degamber extended over a period of more than ten years while the account asked for from Mohima only extended over a period of two years out of that period. The plaintiff filed a cross-appeal within seven days of the time fixed for hearing the appeal, and put in a petition asking that the cross-appeal might be admitted though filed after time.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J.—These two appeals will be governed by the same judgment.

In No. 447, Kallynath Roy is the plaintiff, and in No. 448, Futtick Chunder Roy is the plaintiff. These two plaintiffs are co-sharers in certain properties; and they have brought these suits against Degamber Mozumdar and Mohima Chandra Sen who, they allege, were gomash-tas, or agents, employed on their behalf in making zemindari collections in the manner customary in the mofussil. The object of these suits is to obtain accounts from these agents; but according to an erroneous practice too common in the mofussil, the plaintiffs have asked a certain amount as damages if those accounts are not rendered.

In a number of cases which have recently been before this Court, the practice which ought to be followed in this class of cases has been explained. The plaintiff should ask in his plaint that a proper account may be taken. If the defendant is found liable to render such account for a certain period, the Court should make an interlocutory decree, declaring that he is so liable, and directing him to file an account in Court within a fixed period.

If the defendant refuses or omits to obey the order contained in this decree, such decree may be enforced under s. 260 of the [657] Code of Civil Procedure by imprisonment or by attachment of property, or by both. If he obey and file the account, then, as soon as it has been filed, the plaintiff should be allowed a reasonable time to examine this account, and (if so advised) to file objections to its correctness or the correctness of particular items therein. If the items of objection are few in number, they can probably be disposed of in open Court. If, however, the objections are numerous, and, in order to dispose of them, it is necessary to enter upon complicated enquiries, the proper course to pursue is, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, to appoint an officer to take and adjust the accounts and make his report to the Court. See ss. 394 and 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and Form No. 157 appended to the Code. This course may properly be pursued in the first instance, if the account required is not of such a nature as to render it probable that there will be no difficulty in dealing with the disputed items in Court. As soon as the account has been properly taken, the Court must determine the amount due to the plaintiff thereupon; and the final decree should be for the payment of this amount; and also (if necessary) for the delivery of any papers, vouchers or other documents which have come into the hands of the agents in the course of his employment. In the present case, and upon the remand which we are about to direct, the course above indicated should be followed.

The plaintiffs ask that Degamber Mozumdar be directed to furnish an account from 1265 to Pous 1283, and that Mohima Chandra Sen be directed to furnish an account from Kartick 1281 to Pous 1283.

Now, the first ground of objection raised before us on this appeal is that there is a misjoinder, inasmuch as an account is asked from Degamber Mozumdar for a period of nearly twenty years, and from Mohima Chandra Sen for a period of two years only out of that period; and it is urged that this double claim against persons not liable to account for the same period ought not to have been made in the same plaint.

It appears to us, on consideration, that this is an argument which ought not to prevail. Degamber Mozumdar is bound to render an account for a period of nearly twenty years, during [658] which he has been employed continuously in the same manner and upon the same duties, and the account which he is liable to render is a connected and continuous account. We do not think that merely because Mohima Chandra Sen is (as has been found by the lower Courts) jointly liable to account for the last two years of this period, separate suits ought to have been instituted against these two agents.

The next point urged is, that defendant No. 2 has been erroneously declared liable to account from Kartick 1280. It is admitted on the other side that this is a mistake on the part of the District Judge; and that, so far as Mohima Chandra Sen is concerned, his liability to account must date from Kartick 1281.

It will be convenient here to deal with the objection which has been taken by way of cross-appeal. That objection is, that Degamber Mozumdar ought to have been made liable to account for the year 1265. Now, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that Degamber Mozumdar was not liable to render account for any period antecedent to the time when, according to his finding, the co-sharers began to have separate collections. He says in his judgment:—"It appears from the evidence of the witnesses examined on both sides, that collections were all along made jointly on the part of all the maliks until they quarrelled with each other, an event which, according to the defendants' witness No. 1, who is a respectable person, took place about three or four years ago. Now, for the time during which collections were made jointly for all the maliks, the agents might be called upon to render a joint account for all the sharers; but I do not think that any of the co-sharers can demand a separate account for the said period in respect of his share only, when there is no special agreement to that effect." Now, here the Subordinate Judge is clearly wrong. Degamber Mozumdar was employed as an agent on behalf of a number of co-sharers, and he was bound to render an account to each one of these co-sharers. In the case of joint collections, the account which he ought to have rendered to each co-sharer would properly take the form of a copy of the account kept on behalf of the joint co-sharers. That each co-sharer is entitled to a copy of this joint account, there can be no doubt.

[659] The case then went before the District Judge, and the District Judge so far differed from the Subordinate Judge that he was of opinion that the separate collection of the rent commenced in 1280, and he modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge by declaring Degamber Mozumdar liable to account from 1280 instead of 1282, during which latter year the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the separate collections commenced, and from which year, therefore, he was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to have an account from the defendants.

Now, so far as regards the period antecedent to 1280, we think that we cannot, on the present occasion, interfere with the judgments of the lower Courts. A cross-objection to the decree of the District Judge, in so far as regards the period between 1265 and 1280, was filed; but as this cross-objection was not put in seven days before the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal, it could not, according to a number of decisions of this Court, be admitted. A petition was further presented to a Division Bench asking that, under the circumstances, if the cross-objection could not be allowed as being out of time, it might be treated as a substantive separate appeal, and admitted, though long after time. Having regard to the number of cases decided upon the amended s. 561 of the Code, we think that we cannot allow this petition. The seven days within which a notice must be given according to the provisions of the amended Code, is not, we think, a period to which the provisions of paragraph 2 of s. 5 of the Limitation Act can be extended, as the period of limitation for this application is not prescribed by the Limitation Act, but by the Act which amended the Code. The words "period of limitation prescribed therefor" in this paragraph must clearly be read with s. 4 of the Limitation Act. It was decided before the last vacation by a Division Bench of this Court, after argument and careful consideration, that the provisions of the amended Code do not allow any discretion to extend the period of seven days. The petition, asking that the cross-objection be accepted as a separate appeal, was not filed until the 14th January 1881; and under these circumstances we are unable to say that sufficient cause has been made out to our satisfaction for not presenting this substantive separate appeal [660] at an earlier date. We must, therefore, reject this petition; and confine our consideration of the case to the period commencing with the Bengali year 1280 and ending with Pous 1283. Now, there can be no doubt that Degamber Mozumdar is bound to render an account for the whole of this period, and Mohima Chandra Sen is bound to render an account for the period between Kartick 1281 and Pous 1283. Then, with regard to what both the lower Courts have said about separate collections, it is not clear to us what the nature of those separate collections was. It has not been suggested to us that there is any evidence upon the record to show that all the ryots agreed to pay their rent to the co-sharers separately,—i.e., in separate shares. If this had been so, there would as a matter of course have been separate accounts, in each of which would have been entered the payments made by each ryot in respect of the separate share. There are several forms of keeping the accounts of joint property usual in the mofussil. Shareholders may agree to have a separate account of the collections kept without requiring the ryots to assent to pay their shares of the rent separately. In a case of this kind every rupee of the rent that is paid into the zemindar's sherishta is divided, and the share to which each shareholder is entitled separately is entered in his separate account. There is also a third practice in addition to the two above noticed. All the accounts are kept as a single account of receipts, all rents paid being entered in this account; and a division subsequently made of the total sum of the collections after allowing for collection expenses. The lower Courts have not at all indicated which of these courses they find to have been pursued in the present case, or from what date a change was made in the mode of keeping the accounts, or what the nature of that change was. We think that these cases must be remanded, in order that the District Judge may come to a distinct finding as to the date from which the so-called separate collections were made, and as to what arrangements were made or instructions given as to the form in which the separate accounts were to be kept. We may point out that so long as the gomashtha remained a joint servant of all the co-sharers, he was bound, as we have already said, to [661] give to each co-sharer a copy of the joint accounts; but when this arrangement was altered, the account to which the plaintiffs are entitled would depend upon the nature of the altered instructions given to the defendants as to the keeping of separate accounts. The District Judge must come to a distinct finding as to the form of separate account which, after the change from joint to separate collections, the defendants were bound to keep by express direction or by custom or by implied understanding. The result will be, that, as to the period commencing with the Bengali year 1280 and terminating with the date upon which the new form of accounts came into effect, a joint account will be taken, and a copy of that account given to each of the plaintiffs. Allowance will be made for the sums already paid over to the plaintiff; and the District Judge will find the amount which remains due to each of the plaintiffs upon this joint account. Then as to the period commencing with the date on which the new form of accounts came into effect and terminating with Pous 1283, a separate account must be taken in respect of each of the plaintiffs, allowance being made for any sums paid over to them and for the reasonable expenses of collections, and the District Judge will here also find what amount, if any, is due to each of the plaintiffs. With these instructions the two appeals will be sent back to the District Judge. We direct that the costs of this hearing do abide the ultimate result.

When the above judgment was delivered, Mr. Bell for the respondents represented that his clients are willing to accept copies of the accounts which the defendants say they have already delivered to Monmohan Roy, and if the defendants file in Court true copies of the account within a reasonable time to be fixed by the District Judge, the procedure above laid down can be applied to those copies.

Cases remanded.

[662] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Morris and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KHAMIR. THE EMPRESS v.
KHAMIR.* [29th July, 1881.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 114, 372, 479, 498—Discharge by Magistrate—Order of Commitment by Sessions Judge—Omission to call on Accused to show cause against such commitment—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 296, 283.

A Sessions Court has no power, under s. 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the commitment of a person discharged by a Deputy Magistrate, without first giving such person an opportunity of showing cause against such commitment.

But under s. 296, as amended by Act XI of 1874, the Court has power to direct the subordinate Court to enquire into any offences for which it considers a commitment should be ordered.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 349 of 1881, against the order of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Sessions Judge of Mymensing, dated the 19th May 1881.

When, however, a trial under such a commitment made by order of a Sessions Judge has been duly held, and no actual failure of justice has been caused by the error of the Sessions Judge, s. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be a bar to the reversal of his judgment.

THE accused in this case was charged before a Deputy Magistrate of the second class, under s. 498 of the Penal Code, with enticing or taking away, or detaining with criminal intent, a married woman. He was, however, discharged by the Magistrate under s. 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The complainant then moved the Sessions Judge to take action under s. 296 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and after calling for the record, the Sessions Judge was of opinion, that the facts alleged against the accused really amounted to abetment of rape and adultery; and he, therefore, directed the Magistrate to commit the accused under ss. 114 and 376 and 114 and 497, and to send him up for trial before the Sessions Court, remarking that, even if the case came under s. 498, the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try it, he being only vested [663] with second class powers. The commitment was made, and the trial held before the Sessions Judge.

The assessors were of opinion that the accused should be convicted under ss. 114 and 497 of the Penal Code; but the Sessions Judge, differing from both the assessors, found that the accused had committed an offence under ss. 114 and 376 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Girish Chunder Chowdhry, for the appellant, contended that the Sessions Judge had no power to order the commitment under ss. 376 and 497, as the Magistrate was competent to try the case under s. 498, and had discharged the accused; and further, that the order for his commitment was made without calling upon the accused to show cause against the order—Re Bundhoo (1), Nowab Singh v. Kokil Singh (2). The commitment ought, therefore, to be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MORRIS and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by MORRIS, J.—In this appeal it was contended, first, that the order under which appellant was committed to take his trial in the Court of Sessions, is on two distinct grounds illegal and ultra vires; and next, that, on the merits, the prisoner ought not to have been convicted.

The case had been instituted against the prisoner under s. 498 of the Penal Code. The Deputy Magistrate, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution, discharged the accused under s. 215, Criminal Procedure Code.

The complainant then moved the Sessions Judge to take action under s. 296, Criminal Procedure Code.

That officer was of opinion that the facts alleged against the accused really amounted to abetment of rape or of adultery; and those offences being triable only in the Sessions Court, he directed the Deputy Magistrate to commit the accused accordingly.

[664] He remarked that, even if the case properly came under s. 498, the Deputy Magistrate had no power to try it, inasmuch as he was vested with only second class powers. This dictum is opposed to the provision made in sch. iv of the Criminal Procedure Code in regard to s. 498 of the Penal Code.

It is quite clear, however, that the case before the Deputy Magistrate was one under s. 498; and that he being duly empowered by law to try such a case, discharged the accused under s. 215. The Sessions Judge had, therefore, no power to order a commitment under ss. 376 and 497. He had, under the proviso added to s. 296, Criminal Procedure Code, by Act XI of 1874, power to direct the subordinate Court to enquire into these offences, but no more. In ordering the commitment the Judge unquestionably transgressed the law.

It further appears upon an affidavit made on behalf of the appellant, that the order for his commitment was made by the Judge without giving him any opportunity of showing cause against it, which procedure is not in accordance with what the High Court has laid down on this subject; see Re Bundhoo (1), Nowab Singh v. Kokil Singh (2). It has been submitted that the trial and conviction ought to be set aside for the two reasons above set forth. These are, no doubt, serious irregularities, and more especially the first, which is a direct transgression of the law; and if they had been brought to the notice of this Court before the trial had taken place, the commitment would properly have been quashed; but as the trial has been held, and as we do not consider that any actual failure of justice has been caused by the errors, we are disposed to hold that s. 283, Criminal Procedure Code, is a bar to the reversal of the judgment on these grounds.

(His Lordship then proceeded to consider the merits of the case, and set aside the conviction).

Conviction set aside.

[Affirmed, 8 C. 677.]

THIS was a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendants from trespassing on, or in any way using a certain lane to [666] which the plaintiffs laid claim under an express grant from the original owner of the property.

The plaintiffs stated that they were the owners of certain premises known as Nos. 119 and 120, Bulloram Dey's Street, in Calcutta, and also of a certain lane which led from Bulloram Dey's Street to the main entrance of their houses; that the defendants, who were the owners of the premises Nos. 124, 125, 126, and 127 in Bulloram Dey's Street, but who, as they said, had no rights or user by prescription in the said lane, had, prior to the 7th June 1880, claimed to be entitled to use this lane for their own purpose and for the purpose of drainage from their premises, and that they had opened certain doors in their premises abutting on the lane, and claimed to be entitled to enter, and had entered, through such doors into and upon the land of the plaintiffs, and had used the lane for the purpose of removing their nightsoil to the injury and annoyance of the plaintiffs. They further charged them with breaking down a certain wall built by the plaintiffs, and they, therefore, brought this suit against the defendants to restrain them from further trespassing on or using the lane in question.

The defendants contended, that the block of buildings formerly belonged to one Bydonath Dutt, who, in 1864, sold to Gooroo Churn Sen, and that the Dutt had, previously, more than twenty years ago, let out the land to tenants as ryotti lands, and had opened the said lane and dedicated it to be public as a passage from Bulloram Dey's Street to the various portions of the land so let out by him; that they all claimed through Gooroo Churn Sen, and that, since the time they had erected houses on the land so acquired from Gooroo Churn Sen, they had respectively used the lane as a means of passage from the backdoor of their premises, and that, had they no other title, the user of the lane for a period of twelve years before suit gave them an indefeasible title to the user thereof.

The effect of the evidence on both sides was, that both the plaintiffs and defendants had equally a right to use this lane; and that the plaintiffs were not the owners of the soil of the lane. The wordings of the different deeds of sale on which the parties particularly relied as giving a title to the lane in [667] question, are fully discussed in the judgment. A question whether or not there had been a misjoinder of defendants was entered into at the hearing.

JULY 20.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

7 C. 665.

WILSON, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit are the owners and occupiers of a house and premises Nos. 119 and 120, Bulloram Dey's Street. The defendants, the Setts, are owners of No. 124; the defendant Tara Soondery, of No. 125; the next group of defendants, of No. 126, which is a temple, of which they are trustees; and the defendant Shama Churn Dey, of No. 127.

The plaintiffs' premises have no frontage on the street, but are reached by a lane running first north from the street, and then west along the south of the plaintiffs' premises. The defendants' houses all have a frontage to the street, but also abut on the lane.

The plaintiffs' complaints are three—

1st. That the defendants use the lane for the passage of mehters and the cleaning of their privies.

2nd. That they, or some of them, have used the western portion for drainage of their houses.

3rd. That they combined together to pull down a wall erected by the plaintiffs to prevent their access to the lane. That the defendants did combine to do this is admitted.

The plaintiffs allege themselves to be owners of the soil of the lane, and claim to treat the defendants as trespassers. They put their case in the alternative as one of obstruction of their right of way over the lane.

The rights of the parties have been contested with much pertinacity both here and elsewhere, and this is natural, for the value of their respective houses must be materially affected by the result of this case.

The case is, to my mind, one by no means free from difficulty.

The site of all the houses in question, together with a good deal of land besides, was conveyed by Bydonath Dutt and others to Gooroo Churn Sen many years previously to October 1864. [668] It has, however, been shown, I think very clearly, that Gooroo Churn was a mere benamidar for his father Gunga Gobind Sen, with whose money the land was bought. And on the 4th of October 1864 Gooroo Churn conveyed whatever remained unsold of the property to his father.

The land so sold had a comparatively narrow frontage to Bulloram Dey's Street on the south; on the north it was bounded by what was then an open public drain, having generally some depth of water in it; on the east it was bounded by the land of other persons; on the west by the land of other persons, and by the drain already mentioned. It was thus completely landlocked except on the south. This is now changed, because the drain has been covered over and made into a lane.

Prior to the sale to Gunga Gobind Sen in the name of Gooroo Churn, the land was partly waste and partly tenanted. There was no defined lane where the present lane is. The tenants made their way amongst the huts as best they could.

The Sens bought with a view of re-selling in plots for building, and for that purpose they laid out the lane in question. The exact order of events is not very clear upon the oral evidence. Gooroo Churn's deposition in a former suit was put in by consent. He contradicted himself a good deal as to whether the lane was made before or after the earlier sales of land. His brother Doorga Churn Sen was examined. He says, the lane was reserved before the conveyance to Gungamoney, which was very nearly the first in date. I think it clearly appears on the evidence, that, from the time the lane was made, all the tenants, upon all the lands ultimately plotted out and sold, used it as they pleased. Indeed, as it completely cut the property in two by a line running east and west, this must have been so.

On turning to the documents the order of dates becomes, I think, fairly clear.

On the 26th of November 1862, there is a conveyance to Issur Chunder Day and Shama Churn Day of a portion of No. 127. In that conveyance the lane is not mentioned. But six days afterwards, on the 2nd of December, two sales take [669] place. One is to Kunnuckmoney Dossee, of No. 117 (the position of which is shown on Mr. Bayne's plan), "together with your pathway to and from the said land." Therefore, at that time the eastern arm of the lane was in existence. On the same day there is a sale of No. 126, and the northern boundary described as "the ryotti road."

On the 6th of December, four days later, there is a sale to Gungamoney of a part of No. 124. The northern boundary is "a narrow passage of six feet in breadth;" and the eastern, "a gully six feet in breadth." And on the same day No. 125 is sold, the northern boundary being described in the same words.

The fair conclusion from the evidence seems to me to be, that the lane was in existence, and was in use by the tenants upon all the various portions of the property, when the series of sales in question commenced.

So far I have examined certain of the deeds in evidence all prior to the first conveyance to the plaintiffs, only with a view to ascertain at what time the lane began to be used. It is necessary, however, to consider those and other deeds more carefully in order to ascertain what rights over the lane they conveyed to the various parties concerned.

The plaintiffs' title commences with a conveyance to them from Gooroo Churn Sen of No. 120, dated the 17th of March 1863. It describes the plot sold as bounded "on the south by the land of the said Gooroo Churn Sen, out of which he has allowed a passage six feet broad, running almost straight west to east, and terminating in another passage leading to Bulloram Dey's Street, and which two passages the said Gooroo Churn Sen hath granted and allowed, and doth hereby grant and allow, as the passage for the said Chunder Coomar Mookerji, Gungadhur Mookerji, Gopal Chunder Mookerji, and Ram Cally Mookerji, their heirs, representatives, and assigns, and all the other purchasers of the northern portion of the said piece of land, No. 68-7." Another deed, dated the 27th of July 1863, executed in consequence of a change in the direction of the lane, declares, that "no one shall be able to throw sweepings or filth on the said road, or make it unclean." By a deed of the 5th of June 1872, Gooroo Churn Sen purported to convey to [670] the plaintiffs the soil of the lane in question. And by a deed of the 9th of June 1873, No. 19 was conveyed to the plaintiffs.

The effect of the deeds prior to that of the 5th June 1872 has already been decided by an Appellate Bench of this Court, and that decision I am bound to follow. It was to the effect that the plaintiffs took no title to the soil of the lane, but only a right of way. That right would, of course, be subject to any right previously granted to other persons. And it would not interfere with the right of the owner of the soil to grant subsequently any rights over it to other persons, provided they did not conflict with the right granted to the plaintiffs.

Nor can the deed of the 5th of June 1872 alter the case. Gooroo Churn had, from the first, been a mere benamidar for his father. He had in 1864, conveyed everything to his father. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot, as against the defendants, gain anything under that deed.

The rights of the various defendants must be examined separately.

The title to No. 124 begins with the conveyance of the 6th of December 1862, which describes the property as bounded on the north and east by the passage and the gully. It is at least doubtful whether that description would of itself carry a right of way over the passage. See Harding v. Wilson (1); but see also Roberts v. Karr (2) and Espley v. Wilkes (3).

The deed goes on to grant, amongst other things, all "ways, paths, passages to the said hereditaments and premises belonging . . . or reputed so to be . . . or with the same . . . now or at any time or times heretofore held or used;" and the question arises whether these latter words carried the right to use this passage.

About the law applicable to this question, there is, I think, no doubt. The words 'appurtenant' or 'belonging' will ordinarily carry only actually existing easements, and therefore will carry no right over the land of the grantor—Whalley v. Thompson (4), Barlow v. Rhodes (5), Pheysey v. Vicary (6)—though [671] it would seem that, under certain circumstances, even these words might have a wider construction: Morris v. Edgington (7).

Where further words are used, such as those in this deed, 'there withheld or used,' the case is different. Those words will carry a way formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession: James v. Plant (8). On the other hand, such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly: Thomson v. Waterlow (9) and Langley v. Hammond (10). Where again, during the unity of possession, a way, which has never existed as an easement, is in fact used for the convenience of one of the tenements afterwards severed, the authorities show that the words in question are large enough to carry it: Kooystra v. Lucas (11), Watts v. Kelson (12), and Kay v. Oxley (13).

I think the facts of this case bring it within the last of these three classes of cases. The lane in question was certainly not made by the vendor Gunga Gobind Sen for the more convenient use of the property as a whole while in his own hands. It was made with a view to the sale of the land in plots, for the benefit, as I think on the evidence, of all those who might purchase; and it was used, I think, by the tenants upon all the plots prior to the sale of No. 124. In my opinion, therefore, the original deed of conveyance gave the purchaser of that plot a right of way over the lane.

The subsequent conveyance of a further portion of No. 124 does not, I think, affect this question.

The title to No. 125 is also based upon a conveyance of the same date, the 6th of December 1862, which contains exactly similar general words. That deed, therefore, also gave, in my judgment, a right of way over the lane. The subsequent conveyance of a further portion does not affect the matter.

The title to No. 126 rests upon a conveyance of the 2nd [672] December 1862. That is a Bengali conveyance, and describes the plot sold as bounded on the north by the ryotti road ; but it contains no words appropriate to pass a right of way.

And the subsequent conveyance of a further area does not, I think, carry matters further.

The title to No. 127 rests upon a conveyance of the 26th of November 1862, which contains general words as to ways similar to those in the deed I have already considered.

Another document has to be considered in connection with Nos. 125, 126 and 127. That is a deed, dated the 23rd of July 1864, between Gooroo Churn and the owners of the lands in question. It is subsequent to the first conveyance to the plaintiffs, and cannot, therefore, convey any right inconsistent with those given to the plaintiffs, but it might well give any right not inconsistent. The object of the deed was to give a means of draining the premises in question by means of a drain which is shown in the map running towards the north along with the west boundary of the plaintiffs' land.

The deed, as translated in the first place by one of the Court translators, runs thus : " In the year 1269 I sold to you several parcels of land for your dwelling-houses. For the purpose of passing in and out therefrom, I gave you a lane, and as disputes and quarrels have arisen amongst you in respect of keeping a watercourse or drain by the side thereof, in order to settle such disputes. I fix the price of a strip of land ;" and then it goes on to describe and convey the strip of land running north.

The deed so translated expressly declares that the lane had been granted to the persons in question, and such a declaration would, I think, be a perfectly good grant to any of them who had not a right of way already.

A question was, however, raised as to the correctness of the translation, and I referred the matter to Mr. Owen, the Chief Interpreter. He reports that the words of the deed are capable of two meanings. They may express a passage 'into' your lands, or a passage 'within' your lands, in the latter case only describing the locality of the lane ; there being this ambiguity, the context and the circumstances existing at the [673] time must be looked at. The object of the deed was, as appears from its terms, to settle a controversy and to give a mode of drainage to the north. The controversy was as to the keeping of a drain at the side of the lane. The drain was part of the lane as appears from the evidence of Mr. Bayne and other witnesses. The controversy was, therefore, about the use of this lane by the owners of the houses in question, and the grant was of a drain running north which could only be reached from those houses by using the lane. Under these circumstances I think 'I have provided' must mean, 'I have provided for you;' and, therefore, that a right of way passed to any of the parties to that deed who had not one before.

The result is that, in my opinion, the owners of Nos. 124, 125, 126, and 127 have equally, with the plaintiffs, a right to use this lane.

I have now to consider whether the plaintiffs have shown any right to relief in respect of any of their grounds of complaint.

With respect to the wall which the defendants pulled down, I have stated my reasons for holding that the plaintiffs are not the owners of the soil of the lane, and that the defendants have a right of way over it. The defendants had, therefore, a right to pull down the wall erected to exclude them from the lane.

As to the drain, it may probably be that, as against the plaintiffs, whose grant was of the use of a way six feet wide, none of the defendants had any right to use any part of the lane as a drain. But I think it clear that the drain has been in use for many years, and that the owners of Nos. 125, 126, and 127 were allowed, without objection, to arrange the drainage of their houses with reference to it. Mr. Bayne shows it to be an old brick-drain, and I have no doubt it must be as old as the drain running north with which it connects. It has not been shown that the plaintiffs have suffered, or are ever likely to suffer, any inconvenience from it, the more so as it is in a part of the lane some distance beyond the door of their houses. Under these circumstances, I think it is too late for them to come now and ask for an injunction.

The remaining ground of complaint is as to the use of the lane for the passage of mehters and the cleansing of privies; [674] and as to this the rights of the parties are not quite so easy to determine.

I have said that, in my opinion, all the parties concerned have a right of passage over the lane. One, however, who has a right of passage must not, any more than the owner of the soil might, use it in an excessive or improper manner so as to obstruct the exercise by others of their rights. And I think it was rightly argued that the number of persons using the lane in a particular manner may be taken into account; because that which might be no nuisance if done by one, may become a serious nuisance if done by many—Thorpe v. Brumfitt (1).

Attention was called to the fact that, in the former suit, already, referred to by the now plaintiffs, against the owner of No. 114, the latter was restrained from cleaning his privies by the lane as being an obstruction of the plaintiffs' right of way. But that does not conclude this case. In that case it was decided, on the evidence given, that the plaintiffs' use of the lane had been materially obstructed. This case must be decided on its own evidence.

In the second place, that was a suit against a mere wrong-doer, who had no right to go upon the lane at all.

In the third place, at the time of the transaction then under consideration, the Municipality had not taken charge of the cleaning of privies; it was provided for by the occupiers of houses themselves, so that the then defendant was responsible not only for the fact of cleaning the privies through the lane, but also for the mode in which it was done; whereas the present defendants, though they are, no doubt, liable for using the lane for that purpose, if it be wrong of them to do so, are not, in my opinion, responsible for any negligence or impropriety in the mode in which the Municipal mehters carry on their duties.

It appears to me that a right to use a passage enjoyed as incident to a house, must in general include, a right to use it for all ordinary household purposes, for the passage of mehters among the rest. The circumstances existing at and before the date of the plaintiffs' conveyance strengthen this view. The whole of the land brought by Gunga Gobind Sen was being [675] sold off in plots for building, and all the plots, except the four having a frontage to the street, were completely landlocked but for this lane. It must have been evident, therefore, at the time the plaintiffs bought, that the lane must be used by mehters, and the practice has been in accordance with this. It is clear that the occupiers of the plots to the east, Nos. 115, 116, 117 and I think 118, sent their nightsoil to the street by the lane until other means of egress were provided by the owner of No. 117 purchasing other land to the east, and the turning of the open drain into a lane. The occupiers of No. 119 did the same until the plaintiffs purchased and added it to their house. The occupiers of Nos. 121, 122, and 123, sold after the plaintiffs purchased, did the same. The plaintiff, who was examined, admitted that he has done so too, at least at times. I am satisfied too, that the soil from the several defendants' privies has always been removed by the lane. No doubt, there is much conflict of testimony about this. Most of the plaintiffs' witnesses declare that the defendants' privies were, till June of last year, always cleaned through the houses to the street. But one of the plaintiffs' witnesses, Hari Madhub Lahiri, who lived, in No. 127, from about 1876 to 1878, admitted the contrary. And Mr. Bayne's evidence as to the construction and arrangement of the houses and privies makes the plaintiffs' story incredible. Indeed, in the case of No. 126, the temple, it is all but physically impossible.

These considerations are, I think, sufficient for determining how far the plaintiffs are entitled to redress in this matter of the privies and the mehters.

When the evidence for the plaintiffs is closely examined, their complaints seem to me to resolve themselves into three,—

First, it is complained that the lane is used for the passage of mehters with nightsoil from the defendants' premises to the street. For the reasons I have stated, I think the defendants have a right to this extent to use the lane. And I do not see any evidence that this alone really obstructs the plaintiffs' right of way.

The second complaint is, that the mehters are in the habit of placing tubs of nightsoil in the lane, and letting them stand, [676] there. And this, it is said, and I have no doubt said with truth, is a serious annoyance to the plaintiffs' customers coming to and from their premises in the early morning. It is further said, and I doubt not with truth, that the same practice hinders the plaintiffs in moving casks and cases of goods along the lane from their godown to the street. This practice is shown, I think, on the evidence to be wholly improper; and I should be quite disposed to restrain it by injunction in this suit if I could; but (subject to what I have to say about certain of the premises in question) I think it has also been shown to be wholly unnecessary. I do not see, therefore, how the defendants can be made answerable for what is apparently the negligence or misconduct of the Municipal mehters. The plaintiffs must address themselves to the officers of the Municipality, and if this unnecessary nuisance should continue, the plaintiffs would not be without remedy.

The third complaint is, that certain of the defendants actually clean their privies direct on to the lane. This is not the case with No. 124. In that house the only entrances to the privy are upon the premises themselves. The privies therefore are, and must be, cleaned upon the premises. And if anything is done beyond simply carrying the nightsoil from the backdoor to the street, the fault lies with the mehters, and the case is the same with No. 126.

But with Nos. 125 and 127 it is otherwise. Those premises are so constructed that the mehter's doors are in the lane, and the privies are cleaned direct into the lane. I am satisfied on the evidence that this is a cause of serious annoyance, and I think it is entirely in excess of any right of the defendants occupying those premises. Mr. Bayne said, no doubt, that everything beyond the mere carrying away of the nightsoil might be done on the premises. But these cases must be looked at, not with reference to abstract possibility, but practically. And I think it quite clear that so long as the present state of things continues, these defendants will be improperly using the lane and causing a nuisance to their neighbours. They may make whatever doors they may find necessary, but they must clean their privies on their own premises. An injunction will issue [677] restraining the defendants Tarasoodery, the owner of No. 125, and Shama Churn Day, the owner of No. 127, from using their present mehter's doors for cleaning their privies into the lane, or otherwise using the lane in connection with the cleaning of their privies, except merely for the carriage of the nightsoil from their premises to the street.

The plaintiffs will recover their costs on scale No. 2 from the defendants Tarasoodery and Shama Churn Day. As against the other defendants, the suit will be dismissed, and if any extra costs have been incurred by reason of those defendants having been joined, the plaintiffs must pay them.

RAMANATH DASS AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. BOLORAM PHOOKUN
AND OTHERS (Defendants).^{*} [23rd June, 1881.]

Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Mortgage bond—Money-Decree—Mortgage Decree—Lien—Sale in Execution-purchaser.

Where a mortgagee obtains a decree against his mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy his debt, he cannot sell that property reserving his own rights over it, because it is for the very purpose of satisfying those rights that the sale is made. And if, instead of obtaining a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee obtains only a simple money-decree and sells the mortgaged property under it, he is precisely in the same position as far as his own interest is concerned. In either case, the purchaser at the execution-sale takes the property sold freed from the mortgagee's lien.

[678] But where the mortgagee puts up the mortgaged property for sale at a time when the mortgagor has no longer any interest in the property, then nothing passes by the sale and the execution-purchaser does not get any benefit from the fact that previously to the sale the mortgagee had a lien on the property.

IN January 1871, one Jogessur Gossami borrowed Rs. 600 from a lady named Basunti Priya, for the repayment of which he gave her a bond, pledging a tenure, which he held from Government, containing some 866 bighas of land.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1746 of 1879, against the decree of W. E. Ward, Esq., Judge of the Assam Valley District, dated the 5th May 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Shib Prasad Chuckerbutty, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Gowhaty, dated the 3rd November 1878.

(6) See 7 C. 714.

Jogessur's rent having fallen into arrear, the Government sold a portion of his tenure, amounting to 261 bighas, which was purchased by one Boloram Phookun, the defendant.

Basunti's mortgage being a specially registered one, she, subsequently to the defendant's purchase, sued Jogessur upon his mortgage-bond, and obtained a money-decree under s. 50 of Act XX of 1866.

In execution of that decree Jogessur's entire tenure was put up for sale, including the portion which had been purchased by the defendant; and the plaintiff Ramanath purchased that portion for Rs. 241.

After the purchase, the plaintiff got his name registered in the Collector's books as the Government tenant of the lot which he had purchased, and obtained possession of it.

Thereupon the defendants, who had previously objected to the attachment of his 261 bighas in execution of Basunti Priya's decree (but which objection was overruled), brought a suit against Basunti under the impression that she, and not the plaintiff Ramanath, was the real auction-purchaser of the lot; and in that suit he prayed to have the sale cancelled, to have his own name registered in the Collector's book as tenant, and to have possession given to him.

[679] In this suit Basunti never denied that she was the real auction-purchaser, and the result was that the defendant obtained a decree.

In execution of this decree Ramanath was dispossessed. He then applied to the Civil Court, under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859, to be restored to possession; but the Assistant Commissioner who tried the case dismissed his suit, upon the ground that he had purchased nothing at the sale. This decision was upheld on appeal by the Deputy Commissioner; and on special appeal to this Court the same result followed. It was observed, however, by the learned Judges of the Division Bench that although they were unable to agree with the lower Courts that Ramanath had purchased nothing, they were not prepared to say what he had purchased. They suggested that he might have acquired the mortgagee's lien, but even if he had, they considered that it would not have entitled him to recover possession in that suit. This present suit was then brought by the plaintiff Ramanath against Boloram to recover the Rs. 241, which he paid at the sale, professedly for Jogessur's right, title and interest in the 261 bighas.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 241, upon the ground that Boloram was liable for the mortgage-debt in proportion to the value of his share in the mortgaged property. He appeared to consider that the High Court had already decided in the former case that the plaintiff Ramanath had acquired by his purchase the mortgagee's lien, and he abstained from deciding, what was in fact the main question in the suit, whether the plaintiff had in fact purchased the mortgagee's rights at the execution-sale.

It would appear that the Munsif fixed Rs. 241 as the sum to which the plaintiff was entitled, as being presumably the amount of the mortgagee's lien upon the 261 bighas.

The defendant Boloram appealed, and the District Judge reversed the Munsif's decree. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

GARTH, C. J.—In this case I think I cannot do better than adopt the statement of facts made by the Court below. (His Lordship then stated the facts as above and continued):—

The Judge in the Court below has, in my opinion, dealt with the question with great care and judgment. He considers, and I think rightly, that, notwithstanding the observation made in the special appeal by the learned Judges of this Court, he was bound to determine the question whether the plaintiff had purchased the mortgagee's rights at the execution-sale. He thought, in the first place, that those observations were not necessary for the determination of the special appeal; and in the next place that the learned Judges had in fact declined to give any definite opinion as to what interest, if any, the present plaintiff had purchased. In this view I quite agree.

Having then very fully discussed the leading authorities upon the question, and especially the Full Bench judgment in the case of Syud Emam Montazooddee Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Das (1), the District Judge arrived at the conclusion, that Ramanath did not purchase the mortgagee's rights at the sale, and consequently that his suit should be dismissed.

On appeal to this Court the point has been argued very ably by Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, the learned pleader for the appellants, who has called our attention to several cases which have followed the Full Bench decision.

Having taken time to consider our judgment, and having more fully examined these authorities, I find nothing in any of them which, in our opinion, supports the appellants' contention.

The Full Bench Ruling, as I understand it, amounts to no more than this, that where a mortgagee obtains a decree against his mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy his debt, he cannot sell that property reserving his own rights over it, because it is for the very purpose of satisfying those rights that the sale is made; and it would be contrary to all justice and to the avowed object of the sale, to allow the mort-[681]gagee to sell the property for the purpose of satisfying his debt, and yet to reserve his mortgage rights as against the purchaser.

Then the Full Bench further decided, that if, instead of obtaining a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee obtains only a simple money decree, and sells the mortgaged property under it, he is precisely in the same position, so far as his own interest is concerned, as if he had obtained a decree for sale. In either case, when he sells the property, he sells it with his own lien; or perhaps, the more accurate and less misleading expression would be, that he sells it free from his lien.

But how can this ruling of the Full Bench assist the appellants' argument in this case? It seems to us to be quite beside it. Indeed, the reasoning of the Full Bench seems rather opposed to the appellants' contention.

When the mortgagee puts up for sale the mortgagor's property, and sells it, his lien passes with the property, because, having regard to the nature and object of the sale, the lien is inseparable from the property.

But when the mortgagee professedly puts up the mortgagor's property for sale, but in fact sells nothing, because the mortgagor has no property to sell, why should the mortgagee's lien pass to the purchaser? The reason why it passes in the other case is entirely absent in this; and I know of no provision of the law which enables a judgment-creditor, under colour of selling his judgment-debtor's property, to sell his own.

Besides which, it appears to me, that if the appellants' contention were correct, it would defeat the very object of the Full Bench, which was to prevent the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property reserving to himself his own lien.

Suppose a case of this kind. A mortgages a property to B, and then sells his own interest to C. B sues A for the mortgage-debt, obtains a money-decree, and puts up A's right, title, and interest in the property for sale.

At the same time B also sues C, praying that the mortgaged property in C's hands may be sold to satisfy the mortgage-debt; and he obtains a decree to that effect.

The sale under the decree against A takes place first, and D, [682] becomes the purchaser. The property is then sold under the decree against C, and E becomes the purchaser.

Under which sale does the mortgagee's lien pass?

If the contention of the appellants' pleader is correct, it passes by the first sale, and yet the consequence of this would be, that E, under the second sale, would have bought the mortgagor's property, subject to the mortgagee's lien which would then be vested in D. In other words, the mortgagee would thus have been enabled to do that which the Full Bench considered to be contrary to justice,—namely, to sell the mortgagor's interest for payment of his mortgage-debt without giving the purchaser the benefit of his own lien.

I only think it necessary to notice a few of the authorities to which our attention was called by the appellants' pleader, because in our view of the case, they do not support his argument.

One was the case of Gopee Bindhoo Shandra Mohapatur v. Kalée Pudo Banerjee (1). In that case the plaintiff and defendant both took mortgages of the same property from the same person. The plaintiff had two mortgages, both of which were prior to that of the defendant. He sued upon the last of his mortgages, obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree bought the property himself. After this the defendant brought a suit upon his mortgage, obtained a decree, put up the property for sale, became himself the purchaser, and obtained possession. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover possession from the defendant upon the strength of his own prior purchase, and he obtained a decree for possession in all the Courts. In the High Court the learned Judges thought it right to make a declaration that, upon the defendant's paying to the plaintiff the sum due to the latter upon the first of the plaintiff's mortgages, the defendant should become the holder of the first charge upon the property; but this, as I take it, was not because the defendant had bought anything under the sale in execution of his decree, but because, being the mortgagee, he had a right (independent of his decree) to redeem the first mortgage.

We were then referred to the case of Ram Kant Roy v. Rajkishore Deb (2). In that case the plaintiff's vendor had purchased certain property from A, and the plaintiff in A's right sued R. K. for possession. R. K.'s defence was that A had mortgaged the property under certain bonds; that a decree had been obtained by the mortgagee upon those bonds; and that, in execution of that decree, R. K. had purchased the property in question, and obtained possession. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover this property from R. K., upon the ground that he had purchased it before the attachments under which R. K. had purchased, and the lower Appellate Court found in favor of the plaintiff, upon the ground that if R. K. had any rights under the mortgage-bonds, he should have enforced them against the plaintiff in another suit; but the learned Judges of this Court considered, that as they had all the parties before them, they might adjust their rights in the one suit without compelling R. K. to bring another suit to establish his lien. We do not understand that the point which we have to determine here was ever argued or present to the minds of the learned Judges in that case.

Another decision to which we were referred is that of Doss Money Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (1). The judgment in that case has now been virtually overruled by a Full Bench—Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Doss Money Dossee (2); but even if that case were good law, it would not have assisted the appellants' argument, because I think that the High Court meant to decide, not that the lien passed to the plaintiff under the sale, but on the contrary, that either by obtaining the decree itself, or by the sale under it, the plaintiff had lost his lien.

The last authority cited, to which I think it right to refer, is the Full Bench judgment of the Allahabad High Court—Khub Chand v. Kalian Doss (3). The Court there differed in some respects from the Full Bench of Calcutta and there is much in that judgment, more particularly in the observations of Mr. Justice Turner, which deserves our best consideration; but I find nothing in that judgment which, in my opinion, supports the appellants' contention here.

[684] We have had some doubt whether, having regard to the difficulty of the subject, and the apparently contradictory nature of some of the decisions upon it, we ought to refer this case to a Full Bench; but, on the whole, we do not find that any of the authorities are so opposed to our present view as to render that course necessary. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

MCDONELL, J.—I concur in dismissing the appeal. I would merely add, that it seems to me, that all that the plaintiff purchased under his sale, which was held under the old law, was the right, title and interest of the mortgagor; and as, at the time of the sale to plaintiff, the mortgagor had no right, title or interest remaining, the plaintiff purchased nothing, and is not entitled to the relief he claims in the present suit.

Appeal dismissed.

An order made under s. 37, Bengal Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), is a decree within the meaning of the definition contained in the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), and an appeal lies therefrom under the provisions of s. 544.

A proprietor of an estate or tenure has a right to make a general survey and measurement of the lands comprised in his estate, under the provisions of s. 37 of the Rent Act, without proving that he is in receipt of the rents, there being nothing in law which prevents him from making such a survey or measurement as is contemplated by ss. 26 and 27, merely because his estate happens to be sublet to a number of tenure-holders.

The only excepted case is where there is a special agreement to the contrary.

IN this case the plaintiff sought, under the provisions of s. 37 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, to establish his right to measure certain [685] lands comprised in Mouza Akhari and several other mouzas. He alleged that he had purchased the zemindari, at a revenue-sale, on the 4th October 1877, for Rs. 10,000, and duly obtained the sale-certificate and delivery of possession under the provisions of s. 29, Act XI of 1859; that he, subsequently, sent an amin to measure all the lands of the zemindari set out in the plaint, but that the defendants resisted such measurement being made, and therefore he was obliged to make the present application to the Court.

A number of the defendants appeared and filed written statements resisting the application on various grounds, and denying that the plaintiff had any cause of action against them; and the following issues were settled amongst others:—

1. Is the suit untenable by reason of its having been brought against all the defendants jointly?
2. Is the suit bad on the ground of nonjoinder?
3. Is the plaint, or rather the application, defective in consequence of the plaintiff's omission to state therein the quantity of land held by each of the defendants, the kismut in which it is situated, and the value thereof?
4. Was the plaintiff formerly a 4-annas shareholder in the zemindari, of which he applies to make measurement on the strength of his having purchased it at a revenue-sale? And should this application be disallowed in consequence thereof?
5. Should the suit be rejected because the plaintiff served no notice upon the defendants?
6. Is the plaintiff entitled to measure the lands of those defendants who say that they held those lands in virtue of their mokurari tenures?
7. Has the plaintiff no right to measure the lands because he has been out of possession from before?

The lower Court found the first five issues in favour of the plaintiff, holding, that although the plaintiff admitted that, previous to the purchase, he owned a 4-annas share in the zemindari, he was not on that account disentitled to the relief he sought.

With regard to the sixth and seventh issues the Judge found that the plaintiff intended to make a minute measurement [686] of the lands; that most of the lands were covered by howladari and other intermediate tenures; and that most of the ryots held under such intermediate holders, and paid their rents to them and not to the plaintiff; and that it was admitted on both sides that the plaintiff was never in possession of the estate by receiving rent from the ryots or from the intermediate tenants. On these grounds, therefore, he held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he sought, and dismissed the suit accordingly.

Against the order the plaintiff accordingly now appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by PRINSEP, J.—We think that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in this case is clearly erroneous. The plaintiff is the purchaser of an estate at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, and he has brought this present suit, under s. 37 of the Bengal Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), in order to make a measurement of the estate so purchased.

A preliminary objection was taken which we may well dispose of in the first instance. It is contended that no appeal lies in a case of this sort. We think, however, that the order made by the District Judge under the provisions of s. 37 of the Rent Act is a decree within the meaning of the definition contained in the existing Code of Civil Procedure. 'Decree' means "the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed, or defence set up, in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it decides the suit." This is the portion of the definition essential to the present case. Now the right here claimed is the right to make a measurement of the estate, and it is quite clear that the Subordinate Judge has adjudicated upon the right. But then [687] it is contended that this was an application, and not a suit. We think, however, that this objection is effectually disposed of by the language of the section itself, wherein we find the following words:—"The person claiming the right to measure such land may apply, to establish his right to measure such land, in the Court which would have jurisdiction in case such suit had been brought for the recovery of such land." The Legislature here, although it uses the word 'apply' in the first portion of the passage cited, has deliberately termed this application a suit in the concluding words just quoted. We are then clearly of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of s. 540 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this appeal will lie.

The Subordinate Judge, dealing with the right of the plaintiff to make a measurement, says:—"With regard to the sixth and seventh issues, which ought to be tried together, I have to observe, that, from the plaint it appears, that the plaintiff intended to make a minute measurement of certain land contained in the zemindari purchased by him, but it is shown by the evidence adduced on the part of the defendants, that most of the lands are covered by the howladari and other intermediate tenures, which some of the defendants have in the said estate. Whether these intermediate tenures are valid or not, is a question which need not be enquired into in this suit, but it is clear that the ryots, at least most of the ryots, of the mehal hold their lands under the said intermediate holders and pay rents to them and not to the plaintiff. Besides, it is admitted on both sides, that the plaintiff, either before or after purchase, was never in possession of the estate by receiving rents from the ryots or from the intermediate tenants. Under such circumstances I am of opinion, that the plaintiff is not entitled to measure the lands, especially when he seeks to make a minute measurement of the mehal." Now, in the first place, it is not clear to us that the plaintiff wants to make a minute measurement of the mehal, if by that the Subordinate Judge means such a measurement as is contemplated by s. 38 of the Rent Law. It is not set out in so many words in the plaint under what section the plaintiff has applied to the Court, but if we refer to the matter of the plaint, it is [688] quite clear that this matter brings the case within s. 37 and that there is nothing in the plaint which affords the details contemplated by s. 38. Under these circumstances we assume that this is a case under s. 37, and we deal with it accordingly; and we may further say that the vakil for the appellant has assented to this view. Now s. 25 of the Rent Act is as follows:—"Every proprietor of an estate or tenure, or other person in receipt of the rents of an estate or tenure, has the right of making a general survey and measurement of the lands comprised in such estate or tenure or any part thereof, unless restrained from doing so by express engagement with the occupants of the lands." Whether the words "in receipt of the rents of an estate or tenure" are here to be construed as qualifying as well "proprietor of an estate or tenure" as "other person," is a question as to which there has been some difference of opinion. In the case of Wise v. Ram Chunder Bysack (1), decided upon the corresponding section in Beng. Act V of 1862, Norman and Seton-Karr, JJ., thought that they did. In the later case of Ranee Krishto Motee Debia v. Ram Nidhee Sircar (2), the Court took a contrary view; and Seton-Karr, J., appears to have changed his opinion, and is at pains to show that the decision in the prior case proceeded on the ground that the plaintiff was seeking to establish a title which was disputed. If the words be taken as qualifying "other person" only, it may be said, that the expression "other person in receipt of the rents of an estate or tenure" implies that the person previously mentioned, i.e., the proprietor of an estate or tenure, is a "person in receipt of the rents, &c." This construction would show it to be the intention of the Legislature, that only a proprietor who is in actual possession by receipt of rent—a de facto and not merely a de jure proprietor—can measure; and this is in accordance with other cases; see Pureejan Khatoon v. Bykunt Chunder Chuckeroutty (3), Kalee Doss Nundee v. Ramyuttee Dutt Sein (4), Durga Churn Mazumdar v. Mahomed Abbas Bhuya (5). If instead of 'other,' the word 'any' [689] had been used, there might have been more room for doubt. It is to be observed that the words "entitled to receive the rents of an estate or tenure" are to be found in s. 38, with which, as already pointed out, the present suit is not concerned; but do not occur in s. 37, which is as follows:—"If any person intending to measure any land which he has a right to measure, is opposed in making such measurement by the occupant of the land, &c." Now, in order to ascertain what persons have a right to measure, we naturally refer to s. 25 already quoted. If that section is to be construed as giving the right to measure to persons in receipt of the rents and to those only, it is difficult to account for the use of the words "entitled to receive the rents" in s. 38, while they are omitted from s. 37. It could scarcely have been intended to use the term 'entitled' of a de jure title merely which was not also a de facto title. Such a construction would give a dangerous extension to s. 38. "Entitled to receive the rents" probably means no more than "in receipt of the rents;" and the natural construction to be put upon the omission of these words from s. 37 is, that the class of persons referred to in this section, and who have a right to measure under s. 25, is not necessarily the same class as is mentioned in s. 38; in other words, that the proprietor of an estate or tenure has a right to measure under s. 37 without proving that he is in receipt of the rents. The case of Raj Chunder Roy v. Kishen Chunder (1) agrees with this view. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff in the present case is the proprietor of the estate, and in this view it is clear that, as a proprietor, he has the right to make a general survey and measurement of the land comprised in his estate. The defendants, in their written statement, do not deny the plaintiff's title; they say that they are not unwilling to pay him rent; and although he has not, since his purchase, actually received any rent from them, in all probability owing to this dispute about measurement, he is, nevertheless, the person admitted to be entitled to the receipt of the rents. There is nothing in the law which precludes the proprietor of an estate from making a general survey and measurement such as is contemplated by [690] ss. 25 and 37, merely because his estate happens to be sublet to a number of tenure-holders. The only excepted case is where there is a special agreement, and no such special agreement is pleaded in the present case. Under these circumstances, we think the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside, and this case must be remanded in order that he may proceed to do that which the law empowers him to do. The costs will be assessed on the same scale on which the lower Court has assessed them, and will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

KHOSHELAL MAHTON AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. GUNESH DUTT alias NANHOO SINGH AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).^{*} [11th June, 1881.]

Limitation—Time for presenting Plaint—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 3, Limitation Act, XV of 1877, s. 5.

The provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) apply equally to suits under the Bengal Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869).

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 297 of 1880, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of Patna, dated the 24th June 1880, reversing the order of Baboo Sheo Suran Lal, Munsif of Behar, dated the 13th February 1880.

(1) 4 W.R. Act X, Rul. 16.

In a suit for rent, where it appeared that a deposit had been made in Court under the provisions of the Bengal Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), and that the six months allowed by s. 31 of that Act for the purpose of instituting a suit had expired on a day when the Court was closed for an authorized holiday, but that the plaint had been filed on the first day the Court re-opened,—

Held, that the provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to such cases, and that, consequently, the suit was not barred.

Golap Chand Nowluckha v Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (1) and Hossein Ally v. Donzelle (2) followed.

Purran Chunder Ghose v. Mutty Lall Ghose Jahira (3) dissented from.

[F., 18 C. 631 (634); Expl., 17 C. 263 (266); R., L.B.R. (1872-92), Vol. I, 338 (340).]

THIS suit, which was instituted on the 3rd December 1879, was brought to recover arrears of rent for the years 1284 to [691] 1286 (corresponding with the years 1876 to 1879) in respect of Mouzas Bargawan, Bozerg, Khord, &c., Pargana Behar, Zilla Patna. The plaintiffs alleged that they held and owned a share in the lands under and by virtue of a purchase, and that collections and realizations from the said share had continued to be made from before, and management and settlement thereof since, the cultivation season of 1286 F. S. (1877-1878) separately from the other shareholder; that, previous to that date, settlements at different rates had been entered into between their vendor and his co-shareholder and the cultivators, but that, in 1285 (1877-1878), the tenants, of whom the principal defendant was one, agreed, by a fresh settlement, for the plaintiffs' exclusive share, to pay an additional eight annas per bigha; that, after such settlement, the defendant and the other tenants had, at the instigation of their co-shareholder, ignored such settlement, and deposited rent in the Civil Court misstating the arrears and the rents actually due; and that they first came to know of such deposit on the 25th Jeyt 1286 (3rd June 1879). The second defendant, being the son of the principal defendant, and living jointly and in commensality with him, had been joined as a party; but he filed a written statement denying all interest in the land in question. Khoshelal Mahton, the principal defendant, denied any such fresh settlement. He alleged and pleaded payment in full up to the year 1286 (1877-1878), and with respect to the rent due for that year, stated that it had been deposited in Court under the provisions of the Rent Act.

The Munsif dismissed the suit, on the ground that it was barred under s. 31 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and that the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) did not apply to such suits; and although he found that the rent in respect of 1286 had been deposited on the 3rd Magh 1286 (11th January 1879) before it was due, he held that that did not alter the case.

The Judge of the lower Appellate Court, while agreeing with the original Court on the point of limitation, had that question arisen, held, that no such point arose, and that the deposit by the defendant was not a deposit under the law, and that therefore s. 31 of the Rent Act did not apply. He considered that, [692] as the rent was not due till the 1st Assar 1286 (5th June 1879), and as it was deposited on the 3rd Magh 1286 (11th January 1879), it was not a deposit in compliance with the law, as the plaintiffs were not bound to accept the rent before it was actually due; and that, as the provisions of s. 31 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 were not applicable, the plaintiffs were not barred by limitation from recovering

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J.—The plaintiffs instituted this suit on the 3rd December 1879 to recover arrears of rent for the years 1284, 1285, and 1286 F. S. (corresponding with the years 1876 to 1879). The defendants alleged, that the rents for the years 1284 and 1285 (1876—1878) had been paid in full, and that of the year 1286 (1878-79) having been deposited under the provisions of the Rent Act, the notice of such deposit was given to the plaintiffs on the 31st May 1879. They pleaded that the suit, not having been instituted within six months from the 31st May 1879, was barred under the provisions of s. 31 of the Rent Act.

The Munsif held, that the suit was barred, while the Judge on appeal came to the contrary conclusion. The latter officer based his decision on the ground that the deposit of the rent of the year 1286 (1878-79) was not legal under the Act, because it had not then become due.

It is contended before us, that the Judge is wrong in assuming without evidence that the rent was not due. Although we are of opinion that the Judge ought not to have made any assumption of fact without taking evidence, still we think upon [693] another ground that his conclusion is right. The last day of the six months from the 31st May 1879 fell upon an authorized holiday, and the suit was instituted on the first day the Court re-opened.

Under these circumstances, we think that the suit should be deemed to have been instituted within the time limited by the law. The days during which a Court remains closed should be considered as non-existent. It is but reasonable to hold this, otherwise great injustice might be done. Take, for instance, a case like this. A plaintiff comes to file his plaint on the last day allowed by law, and finds that the Court has been closed unexpectedly. It would be manifestly unjust to throw out this plaint, if filed on the next day the Court re-opened, as barred by limitation.

This Court has acted upon this principle in the cases of Hossein Ally v. Donzelle (1) and Dabee Rawoot v. Heeramun Muhatoon (2). We are aware of a contrary ruling in Purran Chunder Ghose v. Mutty Lall Ghose Jahira (3). This last-mentioned case was decided when Act IX of 1871 was the general Limitation Act. That law is no longer in force, and it has been decided under the present Limitation Act (XV of 1877) that the provisions of s. 5, which embody the principle laid down above, would apply to suits under the Rent Act; see Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (4).

We are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

CIVIL.7 C. 694 =
9 C.L.R. 303.Liberty to erect Places of Worship—Irregularity in place of Trial—District Judge holding his Cutcherry in a Munsif's Court.

In India, members of a sect are at liberty to erect a place of Worship on their own property, although it is more or less contiguous to a place already occupied by a place of worship appertaining to another sect. The people of any sect are at liberty to erect on their own property places of worship either public or private and to perform worship, provided that, in the performance of their worship, they do not cause material annoyance to their neighbours.

Seshayyengar v. Seshayyengar (1).

Where a District Judge took advantage of his presence in the locality, and heard and decided a suit in the Munsif's Court which had originally been instituted in that Court, but subsequently transferred to the Judge's Court for trial, and it appeared that the course taken was with the consent, implied, if not express, of both parties who were represented at the hearing.

Held that the District Judge was justified in taking the course he had done.

THIS suit was originally instituted on the 28th March 1876 by three plaintiffs, the plaint being filed in the Court of the Munsif at Aurangabad. The object of the suit was to have a shivali and thakurbari erected by the defendant demolished, on the ground that it had been erected close to a mosque, and was therefore prejudicial to the plaintiffs' religion. The plaintiff stated the cause of action accrued on the 15th Mohurram 1293 Hijri (corresponding with 12th February 1876), the date on which the foundations of the shivali and thakurbari were commenced; and they prayed that it might be demolished, and the defendant prohibited from doing any new act contrary to the old usual practice, and thereby causing harm to their religious rites.

The defendant stated in his written statement, that the plaintiffs were only ryots, and therefore not entitled to bring the [695] suit; that, on the 17th Sawan 1278 F. (corresponding with the 19th July 1871), he had taken the lands in question from the proprietors of the mouza, and erected the shivali and thakurbari, as well as sunk a well and planted trees, and that no one had till now raised any objection thereto; and that in addition, the mosque was never used, and consequently there could be no objection to his acts, on the ground of their interfering with the plaintiffs' religious rites.

On the 1st May 1876, the following issues were settled by the Munsif:—

1st. Is the cause of action alleged by the plaintiffs dated correctly?

2nd. Are the shivali and thakurbari erected by the defendant likely to cause any interruption to the plaintiffs' offering prayers in the mosque? If so, should the walls of the shivali and thakurbari be demolished?

On the 27th June 1876, the Munsif held a local investigation and found that the shivali and thakurbari were about forty yards distant from the mosque.

On the 17th July 1876, the defendant applied for the transfer of the case from the Court of the Munsif, on the ground that he being a Mahomedan would not adjudicate fairly on a matter relating to his own religion: and on the 18th August 1876, the case was accordingly transferred to the Judge's file.

Subsequently, in December 1879, the District Judge took advantage of his being at Aurangabad, and directed the parties to be present in the Munsif's Court, and proceeded to dispose of the case.

It appeared that, while the suit was thus pending, two out of the three plaintiffs had died, as well as the defendant, who was now represented by his widow.

The District Judge took the deposition of the surviving plaintiff, and then finding that the facts of the case were undisputed held, that the litigation had originated out of a quarrel between the plaintiffs and the defendant, whose house was situated next to the mosque, and that the mere erection and construction of a shivali and thakurbari at a distance of forty yards from the mosque was not opposed to the Mahomedan [696] religion, and could not, in any way, disturb or interrupt the plaintiffs' prayers. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff now appealed to the High Court against that decree, on the grounds that the Judge had no right to hold his cutcherry in the Munsif's Court, but should have tried it in his own Court, and that he was wrong in dismissing the suit without summoning and hearing the plaintiff's witnesses, and that the proper issues had not been raised and tried in the case.

No one appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by MITTER, J.—The first objection taken before us is, that the District Judge was not authorized by law to hold his cutcherry in the Munsif's Court, but we do not think that there is any force in this objection. We find that this course was taken with the consent, if not express, yet implied, of both parties. The Judge says, he took the opportunity of his visit to Aurangabad to direct the parties to be present, in order that the cases might be decided, and then we find that the plaintiffs were represented by their pleaders, and probably this course was to the advantage of the plaintiffs, as they had probably already engaged their vakils in the Munsif's Court, where this suit was originally instituted.

The next objection taken to the Judge's judgment is, that he is not right in holding that the plaint discloses no cause of action. We think that the view which the Judge has taken of the plaint is correct. Taking all the allegations stated in the plaint as established by evidence, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any of the reliefs expressly mentioned in the plaint, or to any cognate relief which the plaintiffs might have asked the Court to grant upon the plaint. Our view is supported by a recent Madras case of Seshayyengar v.

Seshayyengar (1). The ruling in that case is to the following [697] effect: "In India, the members of a sect are at liberty to erect a place of worship on their own property, although it is more or less contiguous to a place already occupied by a place of worship appertaining to another sect. The people of any sect are at liberty to erect, on their own property, places of worship, either public or private, and to perform worship, provided that, in the performance of their worship, they do not cause material annoyance to their neighbours."

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal without costs, as no one appears for the respondent.

NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. MODUN MOHUN PAL (Plaintiff).^{*} [1st July, 1881.]

Sale in Execution—Arrears of Rent—Under-tenure—Service Tenures—Permanent Tenures—Tenure at Will—Long Possession—Presumption.

The plaintiff purchased a maurasi taluq at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against the taluqdar for arrears of rent of the taluq, and then sued to recover possession of certain lands held by the defendants within the taluq. The defence was, that the lands in question were held by the defendants under a patta which had been granted to their ancestor, in 1733, by the then taluqdars in respect of certain services to be performed by the grantees and their descendants. The Court of first instance found that the patta was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the patta was a forgery; and that although the lands had been granted to the defendants' ancestor in respect of services, yet the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession, as he did not require the services to be performed. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's claim.

Held, that the decree was right, for having found that the patta on which the defendants chiefly relied was a forgery; the Subordinate Judge was not bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the tenure was a permanent one merely from the fact of long possession of the lands.

THIS was a suit brought by the purchaser of a maurasi taluq, which had been sold in execution of a decree for its arrears [698] of rent against the defendants, tenants within the taluq, for khas possession of the lands held by them. The material portion of the plaint was as follows:—"The particulars are, that when the three Mauzas—Nabla, Ulai, and Udoypur—were held by the deceased Brojokishore Roy, the deceased Gungagobind Roy, the deceased Surba Chunder Roy, and others, in maurasi right under the proprietors, the said maurasi taluq was sold in execution of a decree for its arrears of rent due to the proprietor, and purchased by me jointly with my co-sharers; that under a private partition subsequently made by arbitration, the said purchased maurasi taluq was obtained by me alone, and accordingly I now own and hold the same; that the defendants are holding the disputed lands in Mauzas Nabla, Ulai, and Udoypur, appertaining to the said maurasi tenure, on the allegation that they obtained the same as service-lands from the former maurasidars, but the said maurasi mehal having been sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent as alleged above, such service-tenure, even if it actually existed, became void under the law; and since the auction-sale, the defendants having left the service,—i.e., on their not doing any service under the purchasers of the maurasi tenure, their alleged right of service-tenure has further become extinct; that the defendants are holding the lands without any right and without obtaining any settlement, although they have not any right to hold it; that although I duly served a notice on the defendants in Pous last to take out a settlement of the said land from me or to give up possession, up to the month of Cheyt 1284 (March--April 1877), they did not take out any settlement, nor give up possession of the lands."

The defendants filed a written statement, the material portions of which were as follows:—

"5. The defendants' ancestor, Ramdeb Dutt, was, while living, a trustworthy agent entrusted with the collection of rent of the debuttur lands of Ram Bhuddur Roy, the ancestor of the former proprietors of the plaintiff's alleged maurasi ijara tenure, and in lieu of his salary granted him a permanent maurasi patta, dated the 15th Magh 1139 (corresponding with 27th January 1733), in respect of fifty bighas of homestead [699] garden at a fixed rental of Rs. 12, stipulating to hold the same from generation to generation. The said patta contains a further stipulation to the effect that, if the post be resigned, or the service be dispensed with, a yearly rental of Rs. 12 should be paid. The land in claim is covered by the said patta. As the said land has all along been held by us by bona fide payment of the aforesaid rent under the said patta from generation to generation, since before the time of the Permanent Settlement, we cannot be ejected from the said land.

"9. The allegations, that the disputed lands were held by us as obtained from the plaintiff's predecessor, maurasidar, in lieu of certain service, and that it was left after the plaintiff's purchase of the mokurari ijara right, are all false.

"10. Our predecessor, the deceased Ramdeb Dutt, used to collect the rent of the debuttur lands of the deceased Ram Bhuddur Roy, and applied the same to the worship of the idol; the said service was formerly done by our predecessors, and now it is performed by us: besides which we had nothing to do with the mokurari ijara mehal, and the land in claim was not granted in lieu of any service done in connection with the said mokurari ijara mehal."

The Court of first instance found that the patta of 1733 was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, after going minutely into the evidence, said:—"Considering the evidence, as well as the surrounding circumstances, I am inclined to hold that the patta set up by the defendants is not genuine, and that the defendants failed to prove they had any ryotti right in the lands. The service in lieu of which the lands were originally granted to the defendants' ancestor not being required by the plaintiff, the latter is entitled to call upon the defendants to surrender their lands." He then reversed the decision of the Court below, and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

[700] The following judgments were delivered :—

JUDGMENTS.

GARTH, C. J.—I think this appeal must be dismissed. The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from certain lands, which the defendants and their father and grandfather before them had held for the performance of certain services. There does not appear to be any doubt as to what the services were, although the Subordinate Judge does not describe them; because both parties seem to agree, that they consisted in collecting the rents of certain debuttur lands, and paying those rents, or applying them in some way, for the worship of an idol. The defendants' case was, that they had a permanent tenure which had its origin in a grant given to their ancestor in the year 1139, and the first Court having found this grant to be genuine, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The Subordinate Judge took a different view. He considered, for the reasons which he gives in his judgment, that the document brought forward by the defendants was not genuine, and he believed it to have been fabricated within the last few years. At the same time he finds that the defendants and their predecessors in title did hold the lands for many years in consideration of their rendering to the plaintiff certain services; but he says—"The services in lieu of which the lands were originally granted to the defendants' ancestor, not being required by the plaintiff, the latter is entitled to call upon the defendants to surrender the lands."

Reading this passage in conjunction with what the Subordinate Judge says in other parts of his judgment, I think he means to say, that as the grant put forward by the defendants in support of their case is untrue and fabricated, he is not bound to make any presumption of a permanent grant in favour of men who have brought forward such an instrument, and therefore, notwithstanding the long possession, he considered the holding to be at will; and as the services were no longer required, the plaintiff was at liberty to put an end to the defendants' tenancy.

Now the question for us is, having regard to the fact that the defendants, their father, and grandfather, and perhaps a generation before them, had performed the services in consideration [701] of holding the lands, whether the Subordinate Judge was bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the defendants had a permanent tenure. I think he was not bound to make such a presumption. It may be, that he was at liberty to presume, if he had thought proper to do so, a permanent grant; and that, in that case, we could not have disturbed his finding. But having declined to make such a presumption, I think we have no right to say that he was in error. I certainly for one, am not disposed to assist men who have by means of a fabricated deed attempted to deceive the Court. I should add, that if I thought there was any real doubt as to the nature of the services, or as to the nature of the evidence upon which the defendants' case is based, I should have had no objection, if my learned brother thought it necessary, to remand the case for further enquiry. But it seems to me, that there is really no such doubt. The parties are agreed as to the nature of the services, and the nature of the case set up by the defendants is plain enough. I consider, therefore, that a remand is unnecessary, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

FIELD, J.—I also think that no ground has been made out which would justify us in interfering in this case upon second appeal. The plaintiff is an auction-purchaser, and he sued to resume a certain tenure which he alleged to have been held by the defendants in lieu of wages.

The defendants, in support of their case, in the 9th paragraph of their written statement, denied that the plaintiff's account of the nature of the service-tenure was correct; and, in the 10th paragraph of their written statement, they set out, what, according to their contention, was the nature of the service upon which the tenure has been held; and further, they set up an old patta bearing a date antecedent to the Permanent Settlement.

The Subordinate Judge has found against the genuineness of this patta, and that is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere upon second appeal.

But although the Subordinate Judge found against the genuineness of the patta, he seems to have been of opinion that the tenure was a service-tenure. He does not say in so many words whether he found the nature of the services [702] to be such as was alleged by the plaintiff, or such as was alleged by the defendants. What he says in his judgment is this—"The services in lieu of which the lands were originally granted to the defendants' ancestor, not being required by the plaintiff, the latter is entitled to call upon the defendants to surrender their lands." As I understand the Subordinate Judge, what he means in this, that, notwithstanding the failure of the defendants to prove the patta set up by them, there was other evidence on the record—taking together the allegations of the plaintiff and those of the defendants, and such evidence as had been produced on either side—which left no doubt on his mind that this tenure was really some kind of a service-tenure; but that the defendants had not succeeded in proving the particular case set up by them, had not in fact succeeded in proving that the tenure was of such a nature that they were entitled to hold the land after they had ceased to perform the services. And if this was the intention of the Subordinate Judge, I think that we have not been shown that his view is incorrect.

I may observe that the patta upon which the defendants themselves rely, contains within it sufficient to show that they had no idea of setting up a tenure of such a nature that it depended upon any old village custom, or any other basis than that of a grant by the zemindar, and this being so, if the services were such as alleged by the zemindar, I think we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the zemindar was not entitled to resume the land granted by himself when he ceased to require the performance of those services. In this view I also think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Every lease, or agreement for a lease in writing, must be registered before being given in evidence. But a proposal in writing to take a lease of certain lands on certain terms, made by one person to another, need not be registered, unless the proposal in writing has been so accepted that the proposal and acceptance constitute a contract in writing.

The defendant held lands under the plaintiff at a certain rate per bigba. The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent on a new agreement alleged to have been entered into by the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the latter agreed to pay a higher rate per bigba. The lower Appellate Court found that the new agreement had never, in fact, been entered into, and gave a decree for the old rate of rent without going into the question whether it was a fair rent or not.

Held, that the decision was correct.

On a reference to a Full Bench from a special appeal, the Full Bench will decide the special appeal; but on a reference from a regular appeal, the Full Bench will only decide the point referred, and send the case back to be dealt with by the Bench which made the reference.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ., on the 16th May 1881, with the following opinion:—

"The plaintiff having obtained an ex parte decree, the District Judge, at the hearing of the appeal of the defendants, himself took a preliminary objection not raised either in the first Court or in appeal, and after giving the parties time to consider it, he dismissed the suit, setting aside the judgment of the first Court solely on those grounds.

"The District Judge held that the plaintiff had based his suit on a doul durkhast, which bears on its face the words 'munzur kur data,' and what purports to be the signature of the plaintiff. If this document be a memorandum of an agreement [704] to lease, it requires a stamp under sch. ii, art. 11, Act XVIII of 1869.

"If this document be a complete and binding lease, it ought to have been both stamped and registered. In either case the doul durkhast is inadmissible in evidence.

"As regards the question of stamp, it is settled law that an Appellate Court is not competent to set aside a decree on account of the improper reception of evidence by the first Court of a document which should have been stamped, or indeed to consider the matter, as it is an irregularity not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (s. 578, Act X of 1877). So far, accordingly, as this part of the case is concerned, even supposing that the District Judge is correct in holding that the doul durkhast should have been stamped, his judgment as an Appellate Court cannot be upheld. We would, however, refer to the case of Choonee Mundur v.

"The lower Appellate Court was, however, competent to raise an objection that the document had not been registered, and it now becomes necessary to consider this point.

It may be urged that the addition of the words 'munzur kur data,' signifying the acceptance by the zemindar of the proposal made by the ryot to lease his lands for seven years, completes the agreement, and that thereupon the document became 'a lease' within the meaning of s. 17 (d) and s. 2 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, and should have been registered.

"We are unwilling to give effect to our opinion, because it would seem to be in conflict with that of two Division [706] Benches in the cases of Choonee Mundur v. Chundee Lall Dass (1) and Bibee Meheroonnissa v. Abdool Gunee (2); and we are informed that zemindars and tenants in this part of the country have adopted the system of doul durkhast, instead of executing and registering leases.

"Under these circumstances we are of opinion, that the point should be decided by a Full Bench, and we accordingly submit the following question, viz., whether an application of this description, embodying the tenant's application for a lease on specified terms, and the landlord's acceptance of those terms, attested by his signature and by the signatures of witnesses, is a document which should be registered, or whether it falls within the exception (h) to s. 17 of the Act?"

Mr. M. L. Sandel, for the appellant.—This document is neither a lease nor an agreement for a lease, and does not require registration. It is the tenant's letter, which is kept by the landlord, and no assent in writing is given to the lessee. Writing the word 'granted' in the proposal is merely making a memorandum of what has been done by the landlord, and does not amount to an acceptance in writing. Bibee Meheroonnissa v. Abdul Gunee (2) is in point here. In Doe dem Lambourn v. Pedygripn (3), the words "me approve this draft" were written and signed by the parties, and yet no stamp was necessary. JUDGMENT.

GARTH, C.J.—If the application of the defendants was accepted by the plaintiff by writing the word 'granted' in the margin, we think that the instrument in question was a lease, and therefore required registration. Even if it was an agreement for a lease, it also, in our opinion, required registration; because, coupled with possession by the defendants, its effect clearly was to give the latter an interest in the property for the term mentioned in the doul; and it does not appear that any other document to complete the transaction was contemplated by the parties.

This view seems to us perfectly consistent with the two decisions, which are mentioned in the reference—the cases of Choonee Mundur v. Chundee Lall Dass (1) and Bibee Meheroonnissa v. Abdool Gunee (2), because, in those cases, the application of the tenant was not accepted in writing. It was a mere proposal, which was accepted, if at all, orally, in which case the entire lease or agreement not being in writing, did not require registration.

In disposing of the second appeal, the only doubt which has occurred to us is, whether, as a matter of fact, the word 'granted' which appears upon the document, was in itself the acceptance of the application, or whether the application had been previously granted orally by the plaintiff or his agent, and the word 'granted' was afterwards written by the plaintiff for his own purposes.

Certain it is that the document was not returned to the defendants, but was retained in the plaintiff's own keeping.

Had the question of registration been raised in the first Court, some evidence might have been given upon this point; but it was raised on appeal, and then not by the defendants but by the Judge, so that the plaintiff had no opportunity of giving any explanation.

We think, therefore, that the case should go back to the Court below, in order that this point may be enquired into.

[708] There is no doubt a certain degree of danger, in allowing evidence on such a point to be given after the case has been discussed; but the lower Court will of course be quite alive to that danger, and will deal with any evidence that may be adduced on the part of the plaintiff with due caution.

It has been suggested to us that the defendants had a duplicate proposal in their own hands duly accepted in the same way by the plaintiff. If they had there will of course be an end of the question.

We think that the costs in this Court and in the Court below should abide the result.

MAHARAJA LUCHMISSUR SINGH (Plaintiff) v. MUSSUMAT DAKHO (Defendant)

AND

MAHARAJA LUCHMISSUR SINGH (Plaintiff) v. RUNG LAL (Defendant).*

[F., 7 C. 717 (718) ; 24 C. 20 (25).]

THESE two cases were referred to a Full Bench by CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ., under the same order of reference as was made in the foregoing case of Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali. The doulis in those cases did not contain the term for which the lands were said to have been granted, and were not signed by the parties. The defendants had been tenants of the same lands previously to the making of the alleged agreement evidenced by the doulis, and at a rate of rent lower than that mentioned therein. The lower Appellate Court found that no new agreement had in fact been entered into, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the old rent only. The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. H. Bell and Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, for the appellant.—These doulis are ordinary village papers; it would be impossible to register such documents; see Registration Act, [709] s. 21. Kedarnath

* Full Bench Reference in appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 708 of 1880 made by Mr. Justice Cunningham and Mr. Justice Prinsep, dated the 30th May 1881.

Dutt v. Shamloll Khettry (1) shows that no document requires registration unless it forms the whole contract between the parties. This case comes within the principle of Gunga Persad v. Gogun Singh (2). Even if the Judge did not find the new contract was entered into, he should have given a decree for a fair rent, and not for the old rent merely. [Mr. Gregory.—That does not arise in this reference. GARTH, C. J.—When we sit in a Full Bench, on a reference from a special appeal, we decide the special appeal; when we sit on a reference from a regular appeal, we merely decide the point referred and send the case back.] Counsel also referred to Currie v. Chatty (3).

Mr. Gregory and Baboo Nil Madhub Sen, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—We think that, as the douls in both these cases contained a portion only of the terms upon which the new lease or settlement was to be granted, they were neither leases, nor agreements for leases, within the meaning of the Registration Act, and consequently were admissible in evidence without having been registered.

But, as it has been found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that the arrangement for the new lease was never, in fact, completed, we think that the District Judge was right in holding that the new rent had not become payable; and that, under such circumstances, the Court was not at liberty to go into the question of what was a fair rent, but was bound to give the plaintiff a decree for the old rent only.

Both appeals must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

GHATURI SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. MAKUND LALL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).^{*} [11th June, 1881.]

Ejectment of Tenant holding over—Notice to quit.

There is no difference in law between the position of a ryot holding without a patta and that of one holding over after the expiry of the term covered by a patta, with the consent of his landlord.

Such a tenant cannot be evicted without a reasonable notice to quit being given; and the relationship does not come to an end at the expiration of each year, without some act on the part of the landlord and tenant jointly, or of either of them.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of five bighas four cotas of land, which the plaintiffs alleged were held by them under a patta, and from which they had been wrongfully evicted by the defendants. The plaint stated that the land in suit was in the occupation of the plaintiffs from the time of their father, under a patta granted by the former proprietors on the 25th Jeyt 1278 F. (corresponding with 29th May 1871); that, on the 11th July 1878, the defendants, who were the purchasers of a certain share in the estate in which the land was situated attempted forcibly to oust the plaintiffs from it, and thereupon the latter lodged a complaint in the Criminal Court, which, on the 2nd August 1871, referred them to a civil suit; and that under the colour of that order, the defendants had wrongfully dispossessed the plaintiffs on the same day. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title to the land in suit, and stated that, neither they, nor their father, had ever been in possession of it, [711] but that the land formed the zerat property of the malicks, and had been for the last two years in the khas possession of them, the defendants, who were the purchasers of eight pie, eighteen krants, nine and-a-half masants share of the estate in which it lay.

The only issues settled in the suit were whether the plaintiffs held the land in dispute as tenants, and whether they had been wrongfully evicted from it by the defendants.

It appeared that the patta, dated the 25th Jeyt 1278 F. (corresponding with 29th May 1871) was only for one year,—namely, 1279 (1871-72).

The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the genuineness of the patta had not been satisfactorily established, and as the plaintiffs based their title solely on that patta, the suit could not be maintained, and that they could not fall back on "mere possession;" that even if the patta was genuine, the mere fact of the landlord having permitted them to hold over for some years after its term had expired, viz., till 1285 F. (1877-78), did not create in their favour any right of occupancy; and that they were, therefore, only yearly tenants, and had not been illegally ejected, as they had been ejected at the end of the year. The lower Appellate Court, however, reversed this decree, holding that the plaintiffs' suit was not based on the patta, that being only the document under which the plaintiffs' possession commenced; and that, therefore, the plaintiffs' case would not, in any way, be prejudiced by their failing to prove the patta; and, in addition, the Subordinate Judge considered that the evidence was legally sufficient to prove its genuineness, and that he saw no reason to disbelieve it; that in any event there was ample evidence that the plaintiffs had been in occupation for some years on payment of rent to the malicks, and that they were, therefore, to be taken as tenants-at-will and entitled as such to a reasonable notice to quit, expiring with the end of the year, before they could be ejected.

The defendants now specially appealed to the High Court.
Mr. Sandel and Baboo Prau Nath Pundit, for the appellants.
Baboo Rujunee Kant Banerjee, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J.—It is found by the lower Courts, that the plaintiffs held the disputed land in jote, and were ousted by the defendants in April 1285

(1878) without any notice. It is also found that they had not, before ouster, acquired a right of occupancy. The defendants are owners of a fractional share of the estate in which the lands lie, but they claim an exclusive right to them as their zerat. The suit was dismissed by the first Court while the lower appellate Court, reversing that judgment, has awarded a decree, on the ground that the plaintiffs could not be legally evicted without a reasonable notice.

It has been contended before us, that a ryot not having a right of occupancy may be evicted at the end of the year without a notice. No doubt, a ryot holding under a patta having a fixed term may be evicted without notice at the end of the fixed term. But that is not the case here. The plaintiffs allege that their father obtained a patta for one year, viz., 1279 (1871-72), and they were allowed to hold over till Assin 1285 (October 1877) when they were dispossessed. This patta was rejected as not established, by the Munsif, but the Appellate Court has expressed no final opinion regarding it, although it is inclined to believe its genuineness.

But, in the opinion of the Appellate Court, this point was immaterial. The lower Appellate Court is right in that view; because, so far as the point raised in the case is concerned, there is no difference in the law between the position of a ryot holding without a patta, or that of one holding over after the expiry of the term of a patta.

The lower Appellate Court mainly relies upon the Full Bench decision in Rajendronath Mookerjee v. Raseedar Ruhoman Khundkar (1). But what is decided in it is, that a suit for possession cannot be treated as a notice in the case of a ryot entitled to a notice to quit. But, however, in Ram Khelwun Singh v. Mussamut Soondra (2), the point was decided in accordance with the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. [713] We also think that the view of the law taken by the lower Appellate Court is deducible from the provisions of s. 20 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, which lays down that ryots like the plaintiffs cannot relinquish without a notice to the landlord. In our opinion it follows from this, that a landlord cannot evict such a tenant without a notice; because, in order to justify an eviction without a notice, it must be held that the tenancy, unless renewed, comes to an end at the end of the year. But if that were so the ryot could throw up the land without a notice.

The relation of landlord and tenant cannot be said to have ceased so far as the landlord's right to evict is concerned, but not with reference to the ryots' right to relinquish. But it seems to us, that the relationship does not come to an end at the expiration of each year, without some act on the part of the landlord and tenant jointly, or of either.

If the law were otherwise, the ryots would have been placed in a very disadvantageous position. It is generally the case that ryots of this class derive their livelihood from cultivation only.

If they were liable to be evicted without notice at the end of the year, they would find in many cases, great difficulty in obtaining a suitable quantity of land for cultivation from other zemindars.

On the whole we think that the lower Appellate Court has laid down the law correctly. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ., on the 2nd June 1881, with the following opinions:—

This matter, in a different form, has already been before a Division Bench of this Court (Jackson and Kennedy, JJ.). The judgment delivered has been reported in I.L.R., 3 Cal., 363, where the facts are fully set out.

The parties in that and the present case are the same. In that case the plaintiff, the mortgagee, having purchased in execution of his own decree obtained under s. 53 of the Registration Act of 1866, sued the purchaser of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, to enforce the lien created by the mortgage-bond against the lands purchased. That suit was dismissed for reasons stated in the judgment.

The plaintiff has now sued for possession of the property itself.

Having regard to the uncertainty felt by us, and by other Judges of this Court, regarding the effect of the judgment of [715] the Full Bench in Syud Emam Momtazooddeen Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (2), to the judgment delivered by a Division Bench of this Court in a previous suit between the parties now before us (1), and to the importance of having the law clearly and authoritatively determined, we refer this case to the Full Bench for determination of the following questions:—

1st.—Can the purchaser under the decree obtained on the specially-registered bond sue the first purchaser for restoration of the mortgaged property?

2nd.—If he can sue for restoration of the mortgaged property, is he bound to give the first purchaser the opportunity of redeeming the property?

3rd.—In such a case are the rights of a purchaser from the mortgagor previous to the passing of a money-decree in favour of the mortgagee, different from those of a purchaser subsequent thereto but without notice of any proceedings taken?

4th.—If he has previously sued the first purchaser for a declaration that he held the property subject to the mortgage, and that suit has been

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, for the appellant.—The Full Bench of Syud Emam Momtazooddeen Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (1) is conclusive of this case. There it is laid down that a suit for a money-decree is the same as a suit for a mortgage-decree; and that being so, the doctrine of lis pendens applies. [MITTER, J.—The doctrine of lis pendens must be limited to cases in which the property is the subject-matter of the suit. PONTIFEX, J.—One effect of applying for a money-decree is to turn the debt into a judgment-debt, and interest is given only on the judgment-debt, at the Court rate, 6 per cent.; but the lien remains the same.]

Baboo Srinath Dass, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The decision of the Full Bench was delivered by GARTH, C. J.—We think that the first question should be answered in the affirmative.

[716] The plaintiff has clearly no right to sue for the restoration of the mortgaged property. His proper course, in our opinion, was that which he adopted in the first instance,—namely, to sue to have his lien upon the property declared.

The High Court judgment in Dossmoney Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (2) appears to us to be erroneous. The learned Judges in that case seem to think that because the plaintiff had obtained a decree for his mortgage-money, he had thereby lost his lien; but this is not so. There is ample authority in this Court to show that such a proposition is unfounded. A man who has an equitable lien for a simple contract-debt does not lose his lien by turning his debt into a judgment-debt. Under certain circumstances he may be restrained from pursuing both his remedies simultaneously; but having enforced one remedy without fully realizing his debt, he may afterwards proceed to enforce the other; see Barker v. Smart (3).

It has been suggested to us that the judgment and decree were not properly signed; but whether they were or not, we are unable in this suit to give the plaintiff any relief. Of course it is quite open to him to make an application in the former suit to the proper Division Bench, either for a rehearing or a review, as he may be advised.

The second question referred to us, we do not think it necessary to answer.

[Cons., 11 C.L.J. 22 = 2 Ind. Cas. 89.]

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had obtained a malguzari tenure of the lands for which the rent was claimed, under a doul darkhast dated the 2nd of April 1876, at a yearly rent of Rs. 46; and that he had made default in payment. The defendant denied that he held the lands at the rate alleged by the plaintiff, and also pleaded payment. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree; but this decree was reversed on appeal to the District Court of Purneah. The material portion of the Judge's judgment was as follows:—

"The suit proceeded on a doul darkhast, dated the 2nd of April 1876. Now the doul purports to be signed by three witnesses, and it contains the words: 'isliye darkhast hamara minibtidai San 1284, sal laghayat San 1286, sal mulkike, sir-i-sal sezamin zimma kiya. Jama salana mubligh 46 rupaiya, [718] zarb halba mujib tofsil bad kharij paya. Patwari salha sal diya karengee.' It clearly is a kabuliat for a term of three years, and it ought to have been registered under s. 17 (4), Act VIII of 1871. I find it is not uncommon to put forward as mere applications for settlement, documents which are really contracts, or portions of final agreements (in regard to leases) reduced into writing, the object being to evade the registration laws. I hold that the present doul darkhast is really a counterpart of a lease and an undertaking to occupy, and falls within the definition of a lease in s. 3, Act VIII of 1871. As this document contains the terms of the alleged contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, the document itself is the only evidence of those terms (s. 91, Evidence Act) which can be accepted; and as the document cannot be put in for want of registration, the plaintiff's case as to the enhanced—for it is admitted to be an enhanced—jama must fail." The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose, for the appellant.

Mr. Sandel, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MODONELL, J.) was delivered by GARTH, C.J.—So far as we can see, the District Judge appears to have rejected the doul darkhast, which was offered in evidence in this case, upon insufficient grounds. In the case of Maharaja Luchmissur Singh v. Mussamut Dakho (2), we decided in a Full Bench of this Court that a doul darkhast, if it amounted to nothing more than a proposal by a tenant to pay a certain rent for certain land, does not amount to a lease or an agreement for a lease. If it is accepted in writing by the landlord, it is a different thing. In another case—Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali (1)—which we also decided in a Full Bench, the document was not only a proposal for a lease, but had the word 'granted' signed by the landlord himself upon it. In that case we considered, that if that word was written upon the [719] document in token of the acceptance by the landlord of the tenant's proposal, it would require registration, because it would then amount to a complete offer by the tenant and an acceptance by the landlord of the terms of the proposed lease.

(1) 7 C. 703.

(4) 17 W.R. 509.

On the other hand, it was decided by this Court, in Choonee Mundur v. Chundee Lall Dass (1) and in Bibee Meheroonnissa v. Abdool Gunee (2), that a doul darkhast being a mere proposal for a lease, unaccepted by the landlord, was not a lease within the meaning of the Registration Act. That is a very plain distinction, and we think, having regard to the rule laid down by the Full Bench, that the document here was admissible in evidence, and was improperly rejected.

The case must go back to the lower Court for re-trial. If it should turn out that the landlord has agreed to the proposal of the tenant in writing, the document will of course require registration. The costs of this Court and of the Court below will abide the result.

Receiver, Appointment of—Reference to District Court—Appealable Order—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 503, 504 and 505.

No appeal lies from an order passed under s. 505 of the Civil Procedure Code by a Court subordinate to a District Court, submitting the name of a person sought to be appointed a receiver, together with the grounds for the nomination, such being only a preliminary order or expression of opinion, and not an order under s. 503.

Nor does an appeal lie from the order of the District Court confirming such nomination, but the District Court ought, when the question is raised, to decide on the necessity for the appointment of a receiver, the words "or [720] pass such other order as it thinks fit" in s. 505 being sufficient to include that question, and not merely to decide the fitness or otherwise of the person nominated to the office of receiver.

THIS appeal arose out of a reference by the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, under s. 505 of the Civil Procedure Code, to the District Judge. The plaintiffs applied under s. 492 for the issue of an interim injunction restraining the defendant from realizing the profits of the immoveable properties or the debts due to the estate and to a certain firm which formed portion of the estate, or from otherwise dealing with the property, the subject-matter of the suit then pending. The Subordinate Judge, in dealing with the application, considered that the facts did not justify him in granting the injunction sought for, but he thought that sufficient cause had been shown for the appointment of a receiver; and accordingly, having

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J.—The respondents in this case are plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of the property of two brothers, their [721] nephews, now dead, which is in the possession of the appellant, the widow of one of them.

The respondents prayed for an injunction under s. 492 of the Code to restrain the defendant from wasting or alienating the property which consists of moveables and immoveables, including a money-lending business of some extent. The Subordinate Judge, however, on the evidence submitted to him, thought that there were no grounds for issuing such an injunction as was asked for; but then he proceeded to find that it was necessary for the realization, preservation, and better management of the property in dispute that a receiver should be appointed, and accordingly submitted the name of a suitable person to the District Judge, who sanctioned the appointment. The appellant objected to the appointment of any receiver and the Judge considered that he had no authority to enter into that question; his functions under s. 505 being, in his opinion, confined to considering the fitness or unfitness of the person nominated by the Subordinate Judge for the post.

This appeal is preferred against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, dated 21st August 1880, and of the District Judge, dated 4th September 1880. Neither of these orders is, in my opinion, appealable. The former, because it is not an order under s. 503, but only a preliminary order or expression of opinion of the Subordinate Judge that he will appoint a receiver. He could not make an order appointing one until he had received the District Judge's authority under s. 505, and it is the order not yet passed, appointing the receiver and providing for the other matters referred to in s. 503 (a), (b), (c) and (d) that is appealable.

The District Judge's order of 4th September 1880 is not one against which the law allows an appeal.

In my opinion the District Judge ought to have taken the necessity for the appointment of a receiver into his consideration. I do not think that his duty is only to approve or disapprove of the particular person nominated by the Subordinate Judge. He is also required to make "such other order as he thinks fit;" and these words, in my opinion, give him full control over the matter of the appointment of a receiver.

[722] But although the order of the Subordinate Judge is not appealable, we think we ought to give such directions to the lower Court as the circumstances of the case require for its guidance in defining the powers to be granted to the receiver whom the Subordinate Judge will proceed to appoint.

We think that, as to the share of the property devolving from Chut-terbhuji, the plaintiffs' claim is prima facie a good one, and that the receiver should have full authority to represent that share until the suit is decided. He should, therefore, be empowered to manage the entire estate jointly with the defendant, all moneys realized by the joint management being divided into portions, one portion to be paid into Court, the other being at the disposal of the defendant.

As this state of things may prove to be inconvenient, it is very desirable that the hearing of the suit should be expedited by the parties as much as possible, and the Subordinate Judge should give them special facilities for bringing on the hearing at the earliest possible date.

The costs of the proceedings in this Court, including vakeel's fee, should, we think, be costs in the suit.

Subsequently, a rule having been issued at the instance of the plaintiffs (respondents), the matter came on for disposal on the 20th July 1880.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by MITTER, J.—In our judgment of the 6th of May 1881, we held that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 4th September 1880, soliciting the sanction of the District Judge to the appointment of a receiver. We further gave certain directions as to the conditions under which a receiver was to be appointed, &c. These directions were given by us, being under the impression that no receiver had then [723] been appointed. It now turns out that a receiver had been appointed before our order was passed. Therefore these directions must be cancelled, and our order dismissing the appeal upon the ground that no appeal lies will alone stand. It is represented to us that the Subordinate Judge has made no provision regarding any payment of money to the appellant for the purpose of defending the suit pending in the lower Court; and Mr. Bonnerjee on behalf of the plaintiffs gives his consent that there should be a direction given to the Subordinate Judge to allow to the defendant from time to time such sums of money as would be reasonably necessary for conducting the litigation on her behalf. We, therefore, direct that the lower Court, if any application be made to it on behalf of the defendant to be supplied with reasonable funds for the purpose of defending the suit, should take that application into its consideration, and allow such sums of money from time to time to be paid by the receiver to the defendant as in its discretion would be necessary to defend the suit.

The costs of this application will be costs in the cause. Let the record be forthwith sent back.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution-Sale—Material Irregularity—Sale of a Portion of a Tenure—Sale for Arrears of Rent—Mortgage-Decree—Civil Procedure Code—(Act X of 1877) s. 311.

The mere fact that the amount of rent payable in respect of a tenure brought to sale in execution of a decree is not stated in the sale-proclamation, is not a material irregularity within the meaning of s. 311 of the Civil [724] Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) though, if the amount of rent payable were stated to be more than it actually was, that might constitute such an irregularity and tending to lessen the price at which purchasers might be willing to buy.

Where decrees for arrears of rent had been obtained by fractional shareholders in a tenure, and in execution thereof a moiety of the tenure had been sold, it appeared that the other moiety had been sold at the same time in execution of a mortgage-decree against some of the judgment-debtors in the rent-suits on an objection being taken to the confirmation of such sale on the ground that the whole tenure should have been sold in execution of the rent decrees,—

Held that all that the decree-holders were entitled to have sold was the right, title, and interest of their judgment-debtors and that they were in the position, ordinary creditors having no lien on the tenure; and that, consequently, of the mortgagor being entitled to enforce his lien against the moiety covered by his mortgage, the sale of the remaining moiety in satisfaction of the rent decrees was a good sale and could not be set aside.

THESE two appeals, which were heard together, were against the orders of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pargannas confirming two separate sales with respect to one property, which had been held on the same day, viz., 20th September 1880.

In the first case (No. 108), the decree-holders were the mortgagees of an eight-annas share in the property, and they had obtained an order dated the 15th February, 1880, directing that the eight annas share in the property, covered by their mortgage and belonging to the judgment-debtors in that case, should be sold in satisfaction of their decree.

In the second case (No. 109), the decree-holders were fractional shareholders of the tenure, and the decrees held by them were for arrears of rent against both the judgment-debtors (appellants) in that case, and the mortgagors of the other eight annas share.

The objections raised in both cases against the sales being confirmed, were substantially the same, the judgment-debtors alleging that there had been material irregularities in publishing and conducting the sales, and that in consequence they had suffered substantial injury; and an additional objection was urged in the second case, that the Court should have sold the entire tenure in execution of the decrees for arrears of rent, and not merely the eight annas share which had been sold.

[725] The nature of the objections appears sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court, both cases being heard at the same time.

The following judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) were delivered by FIELD, J :—

JUDGMENTS.

No. 108.—This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas confirming a sale, and it is contended that this sale ought not to have been confirmed—first, because there was material irregularity in publishing it; and secondly, because substantial injury had been sustained by the appellants in consequence of such material irregularity. The first material irregularity alleged is that the sale-proclamation was not published in the mofussil. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the weight of evidence is in support of the sale-proclamation having been duly published in the mofussil.

The next contention is that, as the amount of annual rent payable upon the tenure was not stated in the notification of sale, this is a material irregularity. We certainly are of opinion that the amount of rent payable upon the tenure ought, in the careful transaction of business, to have been set out in the sale-proclamation; but we are not prepared to say that the absence of this information, which is not, in so many words, prescribed by the law, was a material irregularity within the meaning of s. 311. If the annual rent had been stated to be more than it really was, this might have been material as tending to lessen the price at which purchasers would be willing to buy; but no information being given on the point, purchasers cannot be said to have been misinformed.

Then it is contended that the decree-holders dissuaded purchasers from bidding at the sale. We think that the remarks [726] of the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence bearing upon this point are proper; and we see no reason to differ from the view which he has taken on this question. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion, that no material irregularity has been established; and this being so, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

No. 109.—With reference to the question of material irregularity, the grounds taken in this appeal are the same as those taken in Appeal No. 108, and will be disposed of by the observations already made in the judgment in that case. There is, however, a further contention in this appeal,—viz., that the tenure ought to have been sold in its entirety, and that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in selling a moiety of the tenure only in execution of the decrees for rent. Now, these rent-decrees were obtained by persons who were sharers only, and consequently, under the law at present in force, these decree-holders were not entitled to bring the tenure itself to sale under that special procedure by which a tenure is sold, in execution of a decree for arrears of its own rent, free from all incumbrances. All that these decree-holders, being sharers, were entitled to sell, was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. Now, let us see what this right, title and interest amounted to in the present case. There was admittedly a mortgage-decree obtained upon a mortgage-bond, by which one moiety of the tenure had been hypothecated; and this decree entitled the mortgagee to enforce his lien. This being so, it is clear that all that remained to sell in satisfaction of the rent-decrees, and after the mortgage had been satisfied, was eight annas only. Taking another view of the question, it is clear that the holders of the decrees for rent had no lien upon the tenure. Whatever contention may be raised when a tenure is sold under the special procedure in order to satisfy the arrears of its own rent, that the landlord must be presumed to have a lien upon the tenure for such rent, we think no such contention can possibly be raised in a case in which the decree-holder, being a sharer only, is entitled to sell not the tenure itself, but the interests of the judgment-debtor only. This being so, we have here the case of one secured [727] creditor holding a decree, which entitles him to enforce his lien; and another decree-holder not secured and holding a simple money-decree. Under these circumstances, we think it impossible to say that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing the mortgaged eight annas to be first sold in execution of the mortgage-decree, and then selling the remaining moiety in execution of the decrees for rent. This appeal, therefore, must also be dismissed with costs.

Res Judicata—Finality of Arbitrator's Award, when Judgment is passed thereon—Question dealt with by such Award raised in a subsequent Suit.

Where a case was referred to arbitration, and the award was subsequently filed and judgment passed in accordance therewith, and subsequently, in another suit between the same parties, a question dealt with in the award was raised,—

Held, that such question was res judicata between the parties, the judgment on the award having the same effect as an ordinary judgment of a Court, and being conclusive on the point.

[F., 21 B. 465 (467).]

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent for the years 1284 and 1285 (1876—1878). The rent was payable in kind, and the amount of land in respect of which it was alleged to be due was found by the original Court to be 44 bighas and 12 cottas. The plaintiffs alleged that they were entitled to a nine-anna share and that the defendants were only entitled to a seven-anna share; but the defendants disputed this, and contended that the plaintiffs were only entitled to an eight-anna share of the produce, and that a tender had been made of that amount and refused previous to the suit being brought.

[728] The original Court found the shares to be in the proportion of nine to seven, on the ground that this question had been decided in a previous suit between the parties, which had been referred to arbitration. It appeared that the award, which was dated the 12th November 1877, had been confirmed by the Munsif, and subsequently upheld on appeal by the District Judge. The remaining facts in the case having been found against the defendants, the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount they claimed, and this decree was confirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court. The defendants accordingly now appealed to the High Court, on the ground amongst others, that the decision of the arbitrators, acted on by the Courts below, was not a finding of a Court of competent jurisdiction upon the question at issue in the present suit, and that it was, therefore, not admissible, if at all, as conclusive evidence on the question.

JUDGMENT.

MITTER, J.—This was a suit for arrears of rent for the years 1284 and 1285 (1876—1878), the rent being admittedly payable in kind. The plaintiffs claim to recover in the proportion of nine-sixteenths of the produce: the defendants allege that the proportion is half and half.

It appears that there was a previous suit between the parties in respect of the rent of the years 1281 to 1283 (1874—1876). In that suit also, they were at issue upon this point, viz., in what proportion the plaintiffs are entitled to receive the produce. The whole matter in difference in that suit was referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator submitted his award, deciding this question in favour of the plaintiffs. Certain objections were taken against the award, but the Court overruled them and passed judgment in accordance with it. The defendants appealed against [729] that judgment, but failed, on the ground that the judgment being in accordance with the award was final under the law.

The Courts below in this case have treated the former judgment as conclusive evidence on this point, and the question raised before us is whether it has that effect.

We are of opinion that the lower Courts are right in treating the former judgment as conclusive upon this particular issue. It has been contended before us that a judgment can be only treated as res judicata when it is the decision of a Court of competent jurisdiction; and that an arbitrator is not a Court of competent jurisdiction, his jurisdiction being limited to the decision of the particular matter referred to him.

This argument seems to us not to be sound. It is not simply the award which has been held to be res judicata in this case, but the award followed by the judgment of the Court.

Section 325 of Act VIII of 1859 (the reference was under that Act) says, that if the Court shall not see cause to remit the award, &c., &c., the Court shall proceed to pass judgment according to the award; and s. 185 says that the judgment shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereupon, and the reasons for the decision. It is clear, therefore, that a judgment passed in accordance with s. 325 incorporates in itself the decision upon the points at issue as contained in the award. It has the same effect as an ordinary judgment of a Court. This view is supported by an authority cited at p. 17 of "Bigelow on the Law of Estoppel." It is to the following effect:—"The award of arbitration under a rule of Court, if final and valid, is also conclusive upon the parties. The case first cited—Lloyd v. Barr (1)—was an action on a note against a prior by a subsequent indorser, who had paid a judgment given by arbitrators in an action by the holder against all the indorsers; and as no technical issue had been framed, it was contended that the judgment was not an estoppel to the present defendants to deny demand and notice. But the Court ruled otherwise.”

It has been also urged that the question of proportion was incidentally tried in the former suit. But we are unable to take [730] this view. It appears to us, that the point arose directly in that case as it also arises directly here.

The decision of the lower Courts is, therefore, correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Sale in Execution of Decree—Irregularity—Material Injury—Presumption—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 311—Witnesses, Laches in summoning

On an application under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) to set aside a sale, it appeared that there had been a material irregularity in publishing the sale; but no witnesses were called to prove that substantial injury had been caused thereby. It also appeared that seventeen days after the applicant had applied for proclamations to be issued to his witnesses, he deposited the requisite fees; and that, subsequently, there was a delay of seven days in the office in issuing such proclamations, which were ultimately issued only three days prior to the day fixed for the hearing. On the applicant alleging that, in consequence of such delay, he had not been allowed a fair opportunity to produce his witnesses,—

Held, that the Court cannot presume that substantial injury has been caused from the mere fact of there having been a material irregularity in publishing a sale; but when both a material irregularity and substantial injury have been proved, the Court may reasonably presume that the substantial injury is due to such irregularity.

Held also, that the applicant having been guilty of laches himself, could not be allowed to set up the delay in the office, as a ground for the non-production of his witnesses.

[R., 11 A. 333=9 A.W.N. 115; 5 M.L.J. 70 (74).]

THIS was an appeal against an order rejecting an application under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) to set aside a sale.

[731] The lower Court found that there had been a material irregularity in publishing the sale, and the principal allegation of the appellant was that he had not been allowed an opportunity of producing his witnesses to show that he had sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity. He also alleged that the sale had never been published at all; but the lower Court held that if this was so, it could not be set aside under the provisions of s. 311, that section applying only to cases in which there had been an irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, and in addition that there was no other section under which a sale could be summarily set aside.

The application having been rejected, the judgment-debtor now appealed.

The judgments of the Court were as follows :—

JUDGMENTS.

FIELD, J.—The first point, which it will be convenient to dispose of in this appeal, is the allegation that the appellant was not afforded fair opportunity of producing his witnesses. Now, the facts as to this objection are these. He applied for and obtained an order for the issue of a proclamation on these witnesses on the 8th January. He did not put in the requisite court-fees for the issue of these proclamations until the 25th January,—that is, seventeen days afterwards, although he was aware on the 8th January that the 5th February had been fixed for the hearing. Now, it appears to us, having regard to the ordinary despatch with which business is done in the mofussil that he might have been well aware when he paid in the court-fees on the 25th January, after seventeen days, that it was improbable that these proclamations could have been served in such time as to allow of the witnesses being in attendance on the 5th February. As a matter of fact, the proclamations did not issue till the 2nd February, and although this delay of seven days in the office is a delay which would have [732] given the appellant some ground of complaint if he himself had acted with reasonable expedition, yet, having regard to the fact that he himself delayed seventeen days in the first instance, we think he cannot be allowed to set up the laches of the office, so as to succeed in this appeal.

The next question is concerned with substantial injury. The provisions of s. 311 of the Code are :—“ No sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity, unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.” An argument has been addressed to us to the effect, that the fact of irregularity being proved, the Court ought to presume substantial injury; and in support of this argument the case of Gopce Nath Dobay v. Roy Luchmeeput Singh (1) has been quoted. It appears to us that the judgment of the learned Judges in that case does not support the contention sought to be based thereupon. As we understand that judgment, it merely comes to this, that if the fact of irregularity is proved, and also the fact of substantial injury, then the Court may reasonably presume that the substantial injury was due to the irregularity, or, as the words of the section show, was caused “ by reason of such irregularity.” We think that this is a reasonable presumption in most cases; and explained in this way, the judgment is one which has our concurrence. But it certainly does not support the argument of the learned pleader, that from the fact of irregularity a Court ought to presume that there was substantial injury, —a presumption which might be contradicted in many cases by the fact of the property having been sold for its fair value.

It is then contended, that in this case there is not an irregularity, but an entire absence of any notification, and that this being so, the provisions of s. 311 are not applicable. If the provisions of this section do not apply, we are not aware of any section of the Code under which this application could have been made; but it appears to us that the facts in this case, if true, would have amounted to an irregularity within the meaning of that section. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[733] PRINSEP, J.—I am of the same opinion. I would only add that I have always considered the judgment in the case of *Gopee Nath Dobay v. After the issue of the sale notification, and three days prior to the date fixed for the sale, one of the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale stayed, on the ground that an administration-suit was pending with respect to the property of his father, the mortgagor, and also asked that a receiver might be appointed and arrangements made for the purpose of paying off the mortgage-debt, and saving the property from being sold. On this application the Court passed an order staying the sale.

Held, that such order was appealable, being a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of that decree, and as such coming within the provision of cl. (c), s. 244, Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J.—The appellant in this case obtained, on the 25th May, 1880, a decree on a mortgage-bond, executed in his favour by Ram Goti Nag. The three sons of Ram Goti Nag were judgment-debtors under that decree, which directed that the mortgage lien should be enforced—first, by sale of the property specifically mortgaged; and secondly, if the mortgage-debt were not thereby satisfied, by the sale of the other property in the possession of the judgment-debtors. The decree-holder proceeded, in February, 1881, to execute this decree against the properties specifically mortgaged; and, after the issue of the sale-notification, it appears that a petition was presented to the Court in which the execution-proceedings were pending by one of the sons of Ram Goti Nag. This petition was presented three days before the date on which the sale was to take place. The purport of the petition was this, that the three sons of Ram Goti Nag were disputing as to the respective shares of their father's property, and they had instituted an administration-suit in order to have the property administered under the directions of the Court, and they asked that the sale of the mortgaged property at the instance of the decree-holder, appellant, should be stayed until the final disposal of the administration suit. The Subordinate Judge made an order staying the sale; and against that order this appeal has been preferred.

A preliminary objection is first taken that no such appeal will lie. It appears to us, however, that this order, passed [735] under s. 243 of the present Code, comes clearly within cl. (c) of s. 244, inasmuch as the question raised thereby is a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and relating to the execution of the decree. It is contended that this question does not really relate to the execution of the decree, and in support of that argument the case of Gambhirmal and Bana Chand v. Chejmal Jodhmal (1) has been quoted. Now, in the first place, there is a marked distinction between that case and the present case, in this, that Bana Chand, who was the assignee of the decree for costs, was not a party to the second suit there instituted; and West, J., observed,—“but a strictly literal interpretation of the words we have quoted would exclude Bana Chand from the operation of the section as not having been a party to the suit.” In the next place, we think that the arrangement of the present Code, and the difference between the language of the present Code as compared with the language used in the old Code, must make a material difference in the interpretation, and we entertain no doubt that the order now appealed against, which stays the execution of the decree for an indefinite time, and prevents a secured creditor from availing himself of the benefit of his security, is, according to all common sense, a question relating to the execution of the decree.

Then, as to the merits of the case, we entertain no doubt that the order appealed against ought not to have been made. The decree-holder is a secured creditor. He has obtained a decree upon a mortgage-bond, and that decree entitles him to realise the amount due to him from the property specifically hypothecated by that mortgage-bond. There is no reasonable ground for saying that, because the sons of Ram Goti Nag are disputing as to their shares in the property of their deceased father, a secured creditor is to be debarred from enforcing his security until that quarrel is determined. Under these circumstances, we think that the order of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside, and this appeal decreed with costs.

BHUTTACHARJI (Plaintiff).^{*} [15th August, 1881.]

Declaratory Decree—Cause of Action—Civil Suit to contest the Genuineness and Validity of a Registered Document—Registration—Onus of Proof—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 74, 75—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39.

Under the special procedure provided in the Registration Act (III of 1877), the defendant, in whose favour a document was said to have been executed, succeeded in obtaining an order from the District Registrar for the registration of the same, although the plaintiff, who was alleged to have executed it, appeared before the Sub-Registrar, and subsequently before the Registrar, and denied executing it, and alleged it to be a forgery.

In a suit brought under the above circumstances to have the document declared void, and to have it cancelled, the Court placed the onus of proving its genuineness and its execution by the plaintiff on the defendant—

Held, that the proceedings of the Registrar, when he enquired whether the document had been duly executed or not, were in no sense those of a "competent Court," but only those of an executive officer invested with quasi-judicial functions, and that, consequently, such a suit was maintainable; and that, under the circumstances, the onus of proof was properly placed on the defendant.

Held also, that the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) applied, s. 39 evidently contemplating and providing for such a suit.

Ram Chunder Paul v. Becharam Dey (1) dissented from.

Prasana Kumar Sandyal v. Mathurnath Banerjee (2) followed.

THIS was a suit to have a registered kobala, dated the 22nd Chait 1284 (corresponding with April 3rd, 1878), set aside on the ground that it was a forged document. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant Mohima Chunder Dhur presented the kobala for registration before the Sub-Registrar of Manickgunge on the 6th May, 1878, and that thereupon a summons was issued against him, as he appeared on the face of the document to have executed it; that, upon the receipt of such summons, he appeared before [737] the Sub-Registrar and denied having executed it; but that the defendant had then appealed to the Registrar, who heard evidence on both sides and ordered its registration on the 22nd August, 1878.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 632 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ganguly, Second Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 21st January, 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Okhay Kumar Sen, Additional Munsif of Malickgunge, dated the 21st February, 1879.

(1) 10 W.R. 329.

(2) 8 B.L.R. App. 26.

The defendant stated that the plaintiff had executed the document in his favour after having received 152 rupees, the consideration-money; and that, after its execution, the plaintiff had been persuaded by his co-sharers in the property covered by the kobala not to register the same, whereupon he had taken the proper steps to have it registered; and having succeeded in getting registration effected, had taken possession of the property in the usual way by fixing up a bamboo-post.

The Original Court, after hearing evidence on both sides, found the kobala to be a forgery and ordered it to be set aside; and the decision was upheld on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

The defendant now appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the kobala having been duly registered, the present suit would not lie, and that the Original Court was in error in placing the onus of proving the genuineness of the document on him.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by FIELD, J.—In this case the plaintiff sued to have a kobala or bill of sale set aside and declared spurious. It appears that the defendant presented this bill of sale for registration, and, under the special procedure provided in the Registration Act, he succeeded in obtaining an order of the District Registrar for the registration of the document. The first contention raised before us on appeal is, that this suit is not maintainable; and, in support of this contention, the case of Ram Chunder Paul v. Becharam Dey (1) is quoted. Now, that case we think to have [738] been virtually overruled by the case of Prasanna Kumar Sandyal v. Mathurnath Banerjee (2), which latter case has been since followed in several other cases in this Court. Most decidedly, if we had to form an independent opinion, our view would be the same as that taken by the learned Judges in the latter case; but we think that, whatever may have been the state of the law before the passing of the present Registration Act and the present Specific Relief Act, these two enactments have put the point beyond doubt. The case of Ram Chunder Paul v. Becharam Dey (3) was decided when Act XX of 1866, was in force, and under the provisions of s. 84 of that Act, it was the District Judge who heard the petition made against the order of the registering officer refusing registration. Phear, J., who delivered judgment in that case, certainly regarded that as a decision of a "competent Court." The present Registration Act enacts, that where the registering officer refuses to register, the procedure is by way of an appeal to the Registrar, and the Registrar is then to enquire—first, whether the document has been executed; and secondly, whether the requirements of the Registration Law have been complied with. It appears to us, that it is impossible to say that the proceedings of the Registrar, when he enquired whether the document had been executed, are in any sense proceedings of a "competent Court." They are the proceedings of an executive officer invested with quasi-judicial functions for the limited purpose of the Registration Act. In this view we think that, even if the case of Ram Chunder Paul v. Becharam Dey (3) had not been overruled and dissented from in several other cases, it would no longer have a binding effect, regard being had to the alteration made in the Registration Law. Then, if we turn to s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, we find that a suit of this nature is there contemplated and provided for. That section enacts, that "any person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable, who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it adjudged void or voidable, and the Court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it and order it to be delivered up and cancelled."

[739] It then proceeds: "If the instrument has been registered under the Indian Registration Act, the Court shall also send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been so registered, and such officer shall note on the copy of the instrument contained in the books the fact of its cancellation." We think, having reference to these specific enactments of the Legislature, there can be no doubt that a suit of this kind is maintainable.

The second point taken is that the burden of proof has been wrongly placed upon the defendant. It appears to us that this contention is untenable. The plaintiff himself came forward and denied the execution of the document, and this was sufficient to cast upon the defendant the burden of proving its execution and its genuineness. Under these circumstances, we think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Field.

BUNGSEE SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. SOODIST LALL
(Plaintiff).^{*} [5th August, 1881.]

Jurisdiction—Property situated in different Districts—Pleading—Multifariousness—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 28, 31—Parties—One Member of Joint Hindu family contracting alone—Undisclosed Principal—Splitting Cause of Action.

A, B, C, and D were the proprietors of a 2a. 13g. share in mouza E, and also of a 2a. 13g. share in mouza F, both in the district of Bhagalpore. On the 19th September 1872, A mortgaged a 1a. 4p. share of E to H. On the 20th September 1872, A, B, C, and D mortgaged their shares in E and F, together with property in the district of Tirhoot, to the plaintiff. On the 24th March 1873, A mortgaged his share in E and F to J. On the 13th November 1874, A and B mortgaged their shares in E to K.

On the 25th March 1874, J obtained a decree on his mortgage, and the interests of A and B were purchased on the 5th January 1875 by L.

[740] On the 17th April 1874, M, to whom the first mortgage had been assigned, obtained a decree and attached the property mortgaged. L objected that he had already purchased the interests of A, and on the objection being allowed, M instituted a suit against L for a declaration of priority, and obtained a decree on the 9th August 1876. In execution of this decree, the property first mortgaged was sold on the 4th March 1878, and after satisfying the mortgage a surplus of Rs. 7,664 remained. After the institution of the first suit, and before L's purchase, the plaintiff instituted a suit upon his mortgage in the Tirhoot Court without having obtained leave to include that portion of the mortgaged property situate in the Bhagalpore district. On the 17th July 1874, a decree was made in this suit. On the 17th January 1877, K obtained a decree on his mortgage, and the shares of A and B in E were sold, and purchased on the 3rd September 1877 by N. The plaintiff had his decree transferred for execution to the Bhagalpore Court, and he attached the surplus sale-proceeds and a 1a 9g. share in E. This attachment was withdrawn on the objection of L who drew out the surplus sale-proceeds. The share purchased by N was also released from attachment.

The plaintiff now sued L, N, and the mortgagors for a declaration that his decree of the 17th July 1874 affected the E property, to recover the surplus sale-proceeds from L, and in case the decree should not be valid to the extent mentioned, for a decree declaring his prior lien on the property in E.

It was contended for the defendants that the Tirhoot Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the Bhagalpore property; that the suit was bad for multifariousness; that certain persons, co-sharers with the plaintiff, should have been made parties; and that the cause of action had been split.

Held that the Tirhoot Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the Bhagalpore property; that the suit was not bad by reason of multifariousness; and that it was not necessary to make the plaintiff's co-sharers parties, as he might be regarded as contracting on behalf of himself and the other members of the family as undisclosed principals.

Sims v. Bond (1), Bottomley v. Nuttall (2), Agacio v. Forbes (3), and Jones v. Robinson (4) followed.

Held also, that the cause of action had not been split.

Grish Chunder Mookerjee v. Rameseuree Dabee (5) and Rao Karan Singh v. Nawab Mahomed Fyzali Khan (6) followed.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

PRINSEP, J.—The facts of this case are somewhat complicated; but when these facts are understood, no real difficulty arises in dealing with the case. Four persons, who are in the suit termed the third party defendants, viz., Dukharun Lall Dobay, Baiju Lall Dobay, Gopal Dobay and Lalji Dobay, were the proprietors of a 2a. 13g. 1c. 1cr. share out of 10 annas out of the entire 16 annas of Mouza Shazadpore Dumduma, alias Rohimcore, and also of 2a. 13g. 2c. 1 cr. of Mozufferpore Thatha. Both these properties are wholly situate in the district of Bhagalpore. There were four mortgages affecting this property. The first mortgage was by Dukharun alone in favour of Raghunath Prasad. This mortgage is dated the 19th September, 1872, and it was a mortgage of 1a. 4p. share of Shazadpore Dumduma. The second mortgage is dated the 20th September 1872. It was executed by Dukharun Lall, Baiju Lall, Gopal Dobay, and Lalji Dobay in favour of the plaintiff in the present suit, Soodist Lall, and the property covered thereby consisted of the whole of the two shares above set forth, as also of other property which was situate in the district of Tirhoot, the two properties Shazadpore Dumduma and Muzafferpore Thatha being as already stated, wholly situate in the district of Bhagalpore. The third mortgage is dated the 24th March, and was created by two deeds, dated respectively the 24th March and 23rd April, 1873. It was in favour of Rughoonath Sahoy, and the property mortgaged was the whole of the two shares already mentioned. The fourth mortgage is dated the 19th November 1874. It was executed by Dukharun Lall and Baiju Lall in favour of Deep Narain, and the property mortgaged was the whole of the above share in Muzaffarpore, together with some other property. Upon these mortgage-bonds there were four suits. The first suit in point of time was brought by the third mortgagee, Rughoonath Sahoy, who, on the 25th March, 1874, obtained a decree, and sought to [742] enforce his lien against the property mortgaged to him. In execution of this decree he brought to sale the interest of Dukharun Lall and Baiju Lall, and these interests were purchased on the 5th January, 1875 by Chowdhry Bungsee Singh and others, who are the first party defendants in the present case, and are now the appellants before us. The second suit in point of time was brought by Gobind Lall, the assignee of the first mortgagee Rughoonath Prosad, and he obtained a decree on the 17th April, 1874. In execution of this decree he attached the 1a. 4p. share which was mortgaged by the first mortgage-deed on the 19th September, 1872. An objection was thereupon raised by the present appellants, to the effect that they had already purchased the interest of Dukharun Lall, and that objection was successful. Whereupon Gobind Lall instituted a suit against the appellants for the purpose of having the priority of his mortgage declared, and he obtained a decree on the 9th August, 1876. In execution of this decree the 1a. 4p. share, which was the subject of the first mortgage-bond, was brought to sale, and was sold on the 4th March, 1878 for Rs. 11,400. The first mortgage was satisfied out of these sale-proceeds, and there remained a surplus of Rs. 7,664-6-1. These surplus sale-proceeds may be taken as representing the value of the equity of redemption of the 1a. 4p. share of Shazadpore Dumduma, which was the subject of the first mortgage. The third suit was instituted by the present plaintiff after the institution of the first suit and before the present appellants had become purchasers. It will be remembered that the present plaintiff Soodist Lall was the mortgagee not only of the two shares, but of the other property situate in the district of Tirhoot. The third suit was instituted under the old Code of Civil Procedure, and it was instituted in the district of Tirhoot. In that suit Soodist Lall sought to enforce his mortgage lien not only against the property situate in Tirhoot, but also against the property situated in the district of Bhagalpore. Now, according to the old Code of Civil Procedure, Act VIII of 1859 (s. 12), it was necessary to have obtained the sanction of the High Court in order that the property situated in the district of Bhagalpore might be made liable under the [743] decree which would be passed in the suit. No such sanction was obtained; and on the 17th July 1874, a decree was passed in favour of Soodist Lall. The fourth suit was brought by the fourth mortgagee, and he obtained a decree on the 17th January 1877. In execution of this decree, he attached a 2a. 13g. 2c. 1cr. share in Mozufferpore Thatha. It was sold on the 3rd September 1877, and purchased by the second party defendants, Tribani Persad Singh and others. The remaining facts of the case are as follows:—Soodist Lall had his decree transferred for execution with a certificate from the district of Tirhoot to the district of Bhagalpore, and in this latter district he attached in execution the surplus sale-proceeds, Rs. 7,664-6-1, and also the 1a. 9g. 2c. 1cr. share of Mouza Shazadpore Dumduma. The present appellants came forward and made a claim (i) as to the surplus proceeds, and (ii) as to the share of Baiju Lall,—that is, 17g. 3c. 1d. share. In consequence of this claim, the attachment was withdrawn both as to the surplus sale-proceeds, and as to the 17g. 3c. 1d. share just mentioned; and the present appellants, on the 24th August, 1878, drew out the surplus sale-proceeds already mentioned. Tribani Persad Singh and others, second party defendants, also made a claim in respect of 2a. 13g. 2c. 1d. share which they had purchased; and on the 21st January, 1879, an order was made releasing this share from attachment. The present suit has now been instituted by Soodist Lall, and he asks (i) that the decree of the 17th July, 1874 obtained by him in the Tirhoot Court may be declared valid to affect the 17g. 3c. 1d. share of Shazadpore Dumduma, and also the whole share of Mozufferpore; (ii) that he may recover the surplus sale-proceeds, Rs. 7,664-6-1, together with interest, from Bungsee and others, the present appellants; and (iii) that, if the decree of the 17th July, 1874 be not held valid so as to affect the properties abovementioned, then a decree may now be given to him declaring his prior lien upon the 17g. 3c. 1d. share of Mouza Shazadpore Dumduma, and upon the 2a. 13g. 2c. 1cr. share of Mouza Mozufferpore Thatha. Now, it is to be borne in mind that Bungsee purchased the interest of Dukharun and Baiju Lall at a sale under a decree obtained upon the third mortgage. The plaintiff, who is the [744] second mortgagee, has, therefore, in respect of the surplus sale proceeds, and also in respect of Baiju's share, a prior lien to that of Bungsee, who claims only in right of the third mortgagee. Then, as to the share in Muzafferpore Thatha, Tribani Persaul and others, second defendants, are purchasers under a decree obtained upon the fourth mortgage, and as regards this share also, the plaintiff, being the second mortgagee, has a prior lien.

Four points have been argued before us upon this appeal. The first point is, that the Tirhoot Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the property situate in Bhagalpore, and therefore the decree of the 17th July, 1874 is not valid so as to affect the Bhagalpore property.

The second point is, that the suit is bad for multifariousness, inasmuch as the first set of defendants and the second set of defendants are interested not jointly but severally, and in respect of separate portions of the property. The third point is, that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue alone, because there are four other persons—viz., Mohesh Lall, Chutoorbhooj Lall, Gopal Lall, and Ram Lall (one of whom, viz., Chutoorbhooj, is a minor), who are members of a joint Hindu family,—co-sharers with the plaintiff. It is, therefore, contended, that the plaintiff Soodist Lall is not alone interested in the subject-matters of the suit, and is not competent to sue alone. The fourth point is, that this suit is not maintainable, because it is a suit brought after splitting a cause of action; in other words, as the plaintiff had already brought a suit in the Tirhoot Court, and did not, in order to make the decree in that suit effectual as against the whole of the mortgaged property, obtain the sanction of the High Court, he is now precluded from bringing this second suit in respect of the Bhagalpore property.

As to the first point it is conceded on behalf of the plaintiff respondent, that the decree of the Tirhoot Court is not valid to affect the property in the Bhagalpore Court, and it is not necessary for us to say anything further upon this point. The second point is concerned with multifariousness, and in order to understand how far this objection can be sustained in connection with the present case, we must bear distinctly in mind what are the exact facts.

[745] The plaintiff sues in respect of a single transaction affecting several items of property. He sues upon a single contract as between himself and his mortgagor; and he is compelled to sue by reason of this fact that subsequent to the execution of his mortgage, several other persons have become interested in different portions of the property which, as a whole, was the subject of his mortgage-bonds. Now it appears to us that this is just the case which s. 28 of the present Code of Civil Procedure was intended to meet and provide for. That section enacts that "all persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or, in the alternative, in respect of the same matter." The right to relief, so far as regards the first and second set of defendants, is undoubtedly, a right to relief as against these sets of defendants severally, but the cause of action arises out of the single subject-matter which formed the subject of the plaintiff's original mortgage. We may also advert to s. 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "no suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder of the parties, and the Court may, in every suit, deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it." We are of opinion that the two sections which have just been quoted are a sufficient answer to the objection of multifariousness raised upon this appeal.

Then, with reference to the third objection, the mortgage-bond was executed in favour of the plaintiff alone. If this were not the case, there would, undoubtedly, be much in the objection that the plaintiff, whether regarded as a member of the partnership or as a member of a Hindu family, could not alone maintain this suit. But we think that the fact of the mortgage-bond having been executed in the name of the plaintiff alone entirely alters the case. The plaintiff may be regarded as contracting not only on behalf of himself, but on behalf of undisclosed principals—i.e., the other members of the family. The rule of law on this subject is to be found in the case of Sims v. Bond (1). The learned Chief Justice of England, in delivering the judgment of the Court, then said:—"It is a [746] well established rule of law, that where a contract, not under seal, is made with an agent in his own name for an undisclosed principal, either the agent or the principal may sue upon it; the defendant, in the latter case, being entitled to be placed in the same situation at the time of the disclosure of the real principal as if the agent had been the contracting party. This rule is most frequently acted upon in sales by factors, agents, or partners, in which cases either the nominal or real contractor may sue." The same principle is applicable to the case of partners contracting in their own names, but really on behalf of themselves and their unnamed partner—Bottomley v. Nuttall (2); for, as Baron Parke said in Beckham v. Drake (3), all questions of this sort between partners are mere illustrations of the same questions between principal and agent. In the case of Agacio v. Forbes (4), it was held by the Privy Council, that one partner, with whom personally a contract was made, was entitled to sue upon this contract in his own name without joining his co-partners as plaintiffs; see also Jones v. Robinson (5).

The same principle of law is embodied in s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act, which enacts, that, "in the absence of any contract to that effect, an agent cannot personally enforce contracts entered into by him on

(1) 5 B. and Ad. 393.

(2) 5 C. B. N. S. 122.

(3) 9 M. and W. 98.

(4) 14 Moore's P. C. 160.

(5) 1 Ex. 454.

behalf of his principal, nor is he personally bound by them. Such a contract shall be presumed to exist in the following cases :—(i) Where the contract is made by an agent for the sale or purchase of goods for a merchant resident abroad ; (ii) where the agent does not disclose the name of his principal.” Now, in the present case the contract was made with Soodist Lall, the plaintiff, alone. It has not been expressly pleaded, and there is no evidence upon the record to show, that Soodist Lall did, at the time of making the contract, disclose that he was contracting not only on behalf of himself, but also on behalf of the other members of the partnership. Under these circumstances, we think that this ground of appeal must also fail.

Then the fourth ground of appeal is that the cause of action [747] has been split. Now, the present case is on all fours with the case of Grish Chunder Mookerjee v. Ramessuree Dabee (1), in which the case of Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (2) is referred to. In the case of Grish Chunder Mookerjee v. Ramessuree Dabee (1) it was held that the cause of action was not split, because the plaintiff did not, in the first case, either relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim ; but the necessity for the second suit arose out of the fact that the decree in the first suit had become infructuous, so far as regarded a certain portion of the property, in consequence of its having been made without jurisdiction. We see no reason to dissent from the principle there laid down, and that principle must govern the present case. Were it otherwise, we think that there is another principle of law laid down by the Privy Council which would be applicable to the present case. We think that the cause of action in this second case is not the same cause of action upon which the plaintiff sued in the first suit. In the first suit the cause of action was the nonpayment of the money secured by the mortgage-bond, and the real contention was as between the mortgagee on the one hand and the mortgagors on the other Land. The second suit is directed to enforce the plaintiff's prior mortgage lien against subsequent mortgagees, and the cause of action is that the subsequent mortgagees have denied the plaintiff's right to a prior lien. The real contention is not between the mortgagee and the mortgagors, but between the prior mortgagee and the subsequent mortgagees. We think, therefore, that this case falls within the principle explained in the case of Rao Koran Singh v. Nawab Mahomed Fyzali Khan (3). The appellants thus fail upon all the grounds which have been taken and argued before us, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENTS.

FIELD, J.—The question raised in these appeals is, whether a judgment-creditor, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of an undertenure transferable by its own title-deeds or by the custom of the country, is bound to bring that undertenure to sale in execution before he can proceed against the other immoveable property belonging to his judgment-debtor. There can be no doubt that if this question had to be answered under the old law, it must have been answered in the affirmative. Such is the effect of the decision in the case [749] of Desaratulla v. Nawab Nazim Nazar Ali Khan (1). It is contended that this decision is still applicable. Section 61 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 enacts as follows in its last paragraph:—

“If, after sale of any such undertenure in execution of such decree, any portion of the amount decreed remains due, process may be applied for and issue against any other property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the debtor.” Now, this is the first provision contained in the Act which allows execution to be taken out against immoveable property, and having regard to the point of time at which the judgment-creditor is here allowed to proceed against the debtor's immoveable property, it may well seem that it was not the intention of the Legislature to allow him to proceed against immoveable property until after the sale of the undertenure. This was in fact the construction placed upon s. 105 of Act X of 1859 by the decision to which I have just referred. But although, as I have said, the provision above quoted is the first specific provision in Beng. Act VIII of 1869 which allows process of execution to be taken out against immoveable property, there is another section in the Act which appears to have a very important bearing upon the question, that is, s. 34, which enacts :—"Save as in this Act is otherwise provided, suits of every description brought for any cause of action arising under this Act, and all proceedings therein, shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure." The effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Doolur Chand Sahoo v. Lall Chabul Chand (1) is that that section extends to rent-suits the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure concerning execution and the property which may be taken in execution ; and that the result of this extension is that a judgment-creditor, in a case such as that with which I am now dealing, has the option of proceeding either against the undertenure or against the other moveable or immoveable property of his judgment-debtor. In that case the question before their Lordships was whether what had been sold in execution of a rent-decree was the undertenure itself or merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor. Their Lordships refer to s. 59 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and say :—[750] "The Maharaja, if he had pleased, was authorized to apply for the sale of the tenure." They then quote the words of that section, and proceed as follows :—"It appears, therefore, that although the Maharaja might, if he had pleased, have applied to sell the tenure in execution of his decree, he had also a power to proceed against other property of the defendant." From this it appears to have been the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council, that the effect of s. 34 was, as I have already said, to give the judgment-creditor the option of proceeding to sell the undertenure or proceeding against any other property of the judgment-debtor. It is deserving of notice that Sir Barnes Peacock, who was the Chief Justice of this court, and who delivered the judgment in the case of Desaratulla (2), was one of the Lords of the Privy Council who heard the case to which I have just referred ; and this fact is strong to show that the old law, as settled by Desaratulla's case (2), was not overlooked in putting a construction upon the new Act of 1869, which incorporated, by reference, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. It, therefore, appears to us that, as the law now stands, we must take it that the decision in the case quoted upon the old s. 105 of Act X of 1859, is not applicable to ss. 59 to 61 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. The appeals will be dismissed with costs.

PRINSEP, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the judgment in Doolur Chand Sahoo v. Lall Chabul Chand (1) (the passage I refer to is to be found at page 564) held, that s. 34 of the Rent Act gave the Civil Courts a concurrent jurisdiction under the Code of Civil Procedure, and enabled a decree-holder, in a suit for arrears of rent, to proceed either under the general powers conferred under the Code or under the Rent Law. We must now accept the law as thus laid down. The appeals will be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

GOPAL AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. MACNAGHTEN
(Plaintiff).^{*} [23rd April, 1881.]

Enhancement of Rent—Parties to Suit—Enhancement by single Share holder.

Even if a single shareholder can raise the rent of a joint tenant without the consent of his co-parcener, he can only do so in a suit to which all the sixteen annas proprietors must be made parties.

IN this suit the plaintiff, as ticcadar of an eight-anna share of Mouza Mohenpoor, Ruttonpoor, sought to recover arrears of rent at an enhanced rate on a notice served by him alone. The proprietor of the other eight annas share was not a party to the suit.

The notice specified the different kinds of land in the holding of the defendants, and demanded different rates according to their respective qualities. It informed the defendants that the rent of the whole holding would be raised from the succeeding year.

In the plaint the plaintiff claimed his share only of the enhanced rent. The grounds of enhancement were stated in the notice as well as in the plaint,—viz., (i), that the plaintiff having constructed embankments in the mouza, the productive power of the land had increased otherwise than through the agency of the tenant, and (ii), that the rates prevailing in the neighbouring mouzas were higher than those current in the village in question.

The Munsif at first dismissed the suit, upon the ground that a fractional shareholder of a property cannot alone enhance the rent of a joint tenant. But the District Judge, on appeal, overruled the decision, and remanded the case to be tried on the merits.

The Munsif, on remand, held that the grounds of enhancement in the plaint and the notice were not made out. But, [752] after holding a local investigation, he came to the conclusion that the lands of the mouza in question were of the same quality, and that the average rate of rent paid by the bulk of the ryots was 3 rupees 4 annas per bigha; and as the defendants' rent was lower, he awarded a decree at that enhanced rate. The District Judge on appeal by the defendants upheld this decision.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. H. E. Mendies and Baboo Gopal Palit for the appellants.

The Advocate-General (The Hon. G. C. Paul) and Baboo Amarendro Nath Chatterjee for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

—The first question that has been argued before us is, whether an undivided fractional shareholder of a Mouza can enhance the rent of the holding of a joint tenant. But whether he can or not, we are clearly of opinion that such a suit as this is not maintainable in the absence of the other shareholder or shareholders. Conceding that a single shareholder can raise the rent of a joint tenant without the consent of his coparceners, it is clear that he can only do so in a suit to which all the sixteen annas proprietors must be made parties, otherwise the rent of the same holding might be raised to two or more different amounts at the instance of the several coparceners.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the lower Courts is not sustainable, and we dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts.

This decision will govern Appeals Nos. 2663 to 2763, 2861 to 2870, and 2880 to 2885 of 1879, in which the plaintiff's suit is likewise dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Priority—Registration Conveyance—Unregistered Conveyance accompanied by Possession.

One who holds under an unregistered deed of sale, the registration of which is not compulsory, and is in possession of the property conveyed, has a superior title to one who sets up a registered conveyance of a later date unaccompanied by possession. The second purchaser presumed to have notice of the title of the first purchaser from the fact of possession having been given.

JUDGMENTS.

FIELD, J.—In this case the plaintiff purchased certain immoveable property on the 26th Aughran 1289 (10th December 1873), and his conveyance was registered. He alleged in his plaint that he got possession of the property after the execution of his conveyance. The Munsif was of opinion that he got possession of part only of the property; but the Subordinate Judge does not support the Munsif's finding, even to this extent. The defendant claims the same property under two unregistered kobalas, dated respectively the 5th and the 15th Aughran 1279 (19th and 29th November 1872), and she alleges that she obtained possession of the property upon the execution of these conveyances, and has been in possession ever since. The amount of [754] consideration for each of these instruments to less than Rs. 100. Registration was therefore optional; and the instruments themselves, though not registered, admissible in evidence to prove the defendant's title.

The Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found the following facts, viz., that the defendant's two unregistered conveyances have been satisfactorily proved; and that it has also been proved that she obtained possession of the property upon the execution of, and under, these conveyances. He thinks it very probable that the defendant's vendors, after selling the property to her, got up the subsequent registered conveyance (which purports to convey to the father-in-law of one of the vendors) for the object of committing fraud. He does not, however, find fraud as a fact, nor does he find that the purchaser under the subsequent conveyance had notice of the previous unregistered conveyances. The case does not, therefore, come within the principle that, notwithstanding the stringent provisions of the Registration Act, a person who claims under a registered instrument is estopped in equity from saying that this instrument shall prevail against a prior unregistered instrument, if at the time when he took his registered instrument he knew of the existence of the prior unregistered instrument. See the remarks of Lord Selborne in the case of The Agra Bank, Limited v. Barry (1). This case was decided upon the Statute 6 Anne, c. 2, Ir., the fourth section of which provides that all registered deeds shall be taken "as good and effectual in law and equity according to the priority of time of registering;" and the fifth section provides, that "every deed not registered shall be deemed and adjudged as fraudulent and void," not only as against a registered deed, but as against all creditors. "Any person," said Lord Chancellor Cairns, in the case just quoted, "reading over that Act of Parliament would, perhaps, in the first instance, conclude, as has often been said, that it was an Act absolutely decisive of priority under all circumstances; and enacting that, under every circumstance that could be supposed, the deed first registered was to take precedence of a deed which, although it might be executed before [755] was not registered till afterwards. But by decisions which have now, as it seems to me, well established the law, and which it would not be, I think, expedient in any way now to call in question, it has been settled that, notwithstanding the apparent stringency of the words contained in this Act of Parliament, still if a person in Ireland registers a deed, and if, at the time he registers the deed, he himself, or an agent whose knowledge is the knowledge of his principal, has notice of an earlier deed, which though executed is not registered, the registration which he actually effects will not give him priority over that earlier deed. And I take the explanation of those decisions to be that which was given by Lord King in the case of Blades v. Blades upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, that, inasmuch as the object of the Statute is to take care that by the fact of deeds being placed upon a register those who come to register a subsequent deed shall be informed of the earlier title, the end and object of the Statute is accomplished, if the person coming to register a deed has aliunde, and not by means of the register, notice of a deed affecting the property executed before his own. In that case the notoriety which it was the object of the Statute to secure is effected in a different way, but effected as absolutely in respect of the person who thus comes to register, as if he had found upon the register notice of the earlier deed." The same principle has been adopted in cases concerned with property in England, see Le Neve v. Le Neve (1), Davis v. Strathmore (2), Willis v. Brown (3), Rolland v. Hart (4) and Bradley v. Riches (5); and has also been applied to instruments registered under the Indian Registration Act, see Sheikh Rahmatulla v. Sheikh Sariutullah Kagchi (6), Wamon Ram Chandra v. Dhondiba Krishnaji (7), and Fuzludeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (8). As I have already observed, the present case does not fall within the principle of these decisions, which are nevertheless valuable to show that, however strict the language of Registration [756] Act may be, they will not be construed so as to enable their provisions to observe fraud.

Upon the findings of fact abovementioned, the Subordinate Judge held that the defendant had acquired a good and valid title in the property by her unregistered conveyance, which was accompanied by possession, and that the plaintiff's registered conveyance cannot prevail against this title. It is now contended in appeal, that this decision is wrong, and that under the provisions of s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) the plaintiff is entitled to succeed upon the strength of his registered conveyance.

Section 53 is as follows:—"Every document of the kinds mentioned in cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of s. 17, and cls. (a) and (b) of s. 18, shall, if duly registered, take effect, as regards the property comprised therein, against every unregistered document relating to the same property." What is the meaning of the words 'take effect' in this section? Do they mean "have effect to pass the property and give a good title to it," even although the vendor had neither property nor title when he executed the registered conveyance, or that which is more reasonable, take effect in those cases in which effect can be given by reason of the property being still in the hands of the vendor?

If A, pretending to be the owner of property which really belongs to B, and in which A never had any interest, convey that property by a registered document to X, it will scarcely be contended that X, by this registered conveyance, acquires any title to such property. Now, if A sells the same property to C on the 1st January 1880 by an instrument which the law does not require to be registered, and which, therefore, although unregistered, is admissible in evidence to prove the transfer and the title of the transferee; and if this legal conveyance, made in legal form, is further followed immediately by delivery of the possession of the property to C, upon what principle can it be reasonably contended that A has, on the 1st February of the same year, any right which he can convey to X. If A has no interest to convey, the fact of this second conveyance being registered ought not to give X any title to the property in the [757] case last put any more than in the case first put. But it is contended that there are decisions of this Court which leave the question no longer an open one, and that, upon these decisions, X has a good title which will prevail against C. If the question is concluded by decision, there is an end of the matter, but I apprehend that an examination of all the cases will show that the result is in favour of, not X, but C. Before proceeding to examine the cases, it will be well to define exactly the case with which we have to deal—

(a) It is not a case in which it is contended that the subsequent registered purchaser is estopped, because he had notice of the prior unregistered conveyance.

(b) It is a case in which the vendor first sold by an unregistered conveyance and gave the first vendee possession, and had no possession to give to the second vendee.

(c) Registration of the prior conveyance was optional, not compulsory, and therefore the prior vendee can produce and use his unregistered conveyance to prove his title.

(d) It is in fact a case of possession and a prior unregistered conveyance, registration of which was optional, versus a subsequent registered conveyance, and nothing more.

1. The first case is that of Girija Singh v. Giridhari Singh (1). Here the plaintiff claimed under a registered kobala, dated the 29th October 1866. The defendant claimed under an unregistered kobala of May 1855, alleging that he had been in possession since the execution of this prior unregistered kobala. This possession was found as a fact, and it was held that possession under an unregistered kobala created a title which could not be defeated by a subsequent registered instrument. Macpherson, J., remarked that the transfer of the property to the defendant was complete, and nothing was wanting to perfect it recording to the law then in force; and that s. 50 of the then Registration Act could not be construed as vitiating all titles acquired prior to the passing of this Act. Now this is a distinct authority that a registered conveyance and possession taken thereunder are a complete transfer of the vendor's interest so as to leave him nothing [758] which he can subsequently convey. But it is not exactly on all fours with the present case, because the prior unregistered instrument was executed before the new Registration Act came into operation. The Madras High Court have decided to the same effect in Tirumala v. Lakshmi (2).

2. In the case of Syud Furzund Ally v. Syud Abdool Ruhim (3) it was decided that a kobala registered under the provisions of Act XIX of 1843 has no priority over an unregistered kobala under which enjoyment has actually taken place. Section 2, Act XIX of 1843, enacted as follows:—"Every deed of sale or gift of lands, houses, or other real property, a memorial of which has been or shall be duly registered according to law, shall, provided its authenticity is established to the satisfaction of the Court, invalidate any other deed of sale or gift of the same property which has not been registered, and whether such second or other deed shall have been executed prior or subsequent to the registered deed." Observation may be made upon the distinction between the terms 'shall invalidate' used in this section, and the words of the present law 'shall take effect against.' In connection with this Act the case of Maharaja Maheswar Bax Singh Bahadur v. Bhikha Chowdhry (4) may be noticed, in which it was decided, in accordance with the previous decisions of the Sadr Court, that a registered deed of sale had no priority over an unregistered mortgage-deed of an earlier date; and see the remarks upon this case in Prahlad Misser v. Udit Narayan Singh (5).

3. In the case of Ram Chand Koomar v. Modhoo Soodun Muzoomdar (6) the plaintiff claimed under a registered deed of sale, dated the 13th Assar 1272, that is, 24th June 1865. The defendant claimed under a subsequent unregistered deed, dated the 3rd Pous 1272, that is, 19th December 1869. Both the instruments were for a sum less than rupees one hundred; no question of possession was here raised and the sole question was whether the registered deed was fraudulently registered. This [759] case is not in point, more especially as the registered deed was prior in point of time.

4. In the case of Gooroo Dass Dan v. Kooshoom Koomaree (1) the plaintiff's (appellant's) deed was not registered, but was prior in date to the defendant's registered deed. The value of the property conveyed by each was less than one hundred rupees. The possession of the plaintiff (appellant) under his unregistered deed was not found by the lower Appellate Court; see the judgment of Kemp, J. This case is also not in point, not being a case of possession under a prior unregistered deed versus a subsequent registered deed.

5. In Gobind Chunder Roy v. Poorno Chunder Sein (2) the plaintiff purchased on the 4th Pous 1272, but did not register. The defendant claimed under a prior registered lease from the same person, and dated the 17th Aughran 1272; nothing was said as to the values of the property or as to possession. Effect was given to the prior registered lease. This case also is not in point.

6. In the case of Soodharam Bhuttacharjee v. Odhoy Chunder Bundopadhya (3) the plaintiff sued to recover 99 rupees due to him under an unregistered mortgage-bond, dated the 11th Jeyt 1266 (23rd May 1859), by which a tank was pledged as security for the repayment of the loan. Another person intervened in the suit, claiming to be in possession of the tank under a subsequent registered deed of sale, dated the 5th Srabun 1274 (19th July 1867) from the same person. Section 50 of the Registration Act, XX of 1866, was held applicable, and the subsequent registered instrument was held to prevail. Here the possession accompanied the registered instrument; so that this case also is not in point.

7. In the case of Salim Shaikh v. Boidonath Ghuttuck (4) the plaintiff claimed under a registered patta, dated the 16th of Bysack 1275 (12th April 1867). The defendants claimed under a verbal grant. This case also is not in point, but the observations of Markby, J., as to the effect of possession are important.

[760] 8. In the case of Gourée Kant Roy v. Gridhur Roy (5), the plaintiff's kobala was dated the 6th Pous 1272, and was registered. The defendants claimed under a prior unregistered instrument of the 25th Bhadro 1272; the value of the property does not appear. The question of possession was not decided. The only point which appears to have been taken was, whether the subsequent purchaser had knowledge of the previous sale. Reference was made to the last case, and the Judge below was authorized to re-try the whole question. This case is also not in point, as it appears to have been decided with reference to the principle of notice to which I have already alluded.

9. In the case of Nursingh Poorkaet v. Bikrum Majee (6), the plaintiff sought to recover possession under a patta granted by a female and registered. The defendant claimed under a prior lease granted by the female's husband. The defendant's lease was one which, under the Registration Act, should have been, but was not, registered. The defendant alleged possession. The last case was referred to, and the case was remanded for re-trial.

of the question whether the defendant had got a lease from the husband of the widow, and possession under it. In this case the defendant's patta was not an instrument of which the registration was optional, but an instrument which should have been registered, but was not so registered. It would, therefore, have been inadmissible in evidence to prove the defendant's title.

10. In the case of Narain Doss v. Gungaram Dhara (1) the plaintiff claimed under a registered kobala dated Cheit 1277, and the defendant claimed under a prior unregistered kobala dated Srabun 1276, the registration of which was not compulsory, alleging that he had obtained possession thereunder. Glover, J., sitting alone, remanded the case to have this allegation of possession tried, remarking that s. 50 of Act XX of 1856 referred to cases where the purchase had not been completed by possession. In support of this view, he quoted the last case, but this appears to have been done under a misconception of the facts of that case.

[761] 11. In the case of Shaikh Ryasutulla v. Doorga Churn Pal (2) the plaintiff sued to enforce his lien under an unregistered mortgage-bond for Rs. 95, dated the 19th August 1870. One defendant resisted as to part of the land, claiming it under a subsequent registered kobala for Rs. 300, dated the 18th June 1872. The registration of this latter kobala was compulsory, and the only point decided in the case was that s. 50, Act XX of 1866, applied not to the case of a registered instrument of which the registration was compulsory as against an unregistered instrument of which the registration was optional, but only to the case of a registered instrument of which registration was optional as against an unregistered instrument of which registration was also optional. This anomaly in the law was removed in the next Registration Act. This case is also not in point.

12. In the unreported case of Indro Narain Bal v. Foolmanu Bewah (3) the plaintiff claimed under a registered kobala, dated the 23rd Bysakh 1280, which included several plots. The defendant alleged title to two of these plots by a prior unregistered kobala, dated the 11th Jeyt 1276, alleging that possession had been given and held thereunder. This allegation of possession was found to be true by the lower Appellate Court. Registration of both kobalas was optional. Markby and Prinsep, JJ., held that the plaintiff's registered kobala could not give him a title against the defendant's unregistered kobala and possession thereunder. Markby, J., said:—"The Act which governs the question as between these parties is Act VIII of 1871. Upon the previous Act XX of 1866, as also upon Act XVI of 1864 and Act XIX of 1843, it had, in my opinion, been held by, at any rate, a preponderance of authority, that the provisions of these Acts, so far as they invalidate title not duly registered, had no application where the party who had purchased had been put into possession." This is a case directly in point. I am bound, however, to say that the learned Judge refers to his judgment in case No. 7 above as containing the authorities, but all the cases there cited, as far as I have been able to test them, were decided upon Act XIX of 1843; and [762] I have been unable to find that in any of these cases both instruments were governed by any of the new Registration Acts.

person X. A purchased from X by an unregistered kobala, dated the 2nd Pous 1282 (16th December 1875). B purchased from X by a registered kobala of subsequent date, 12th March 1876. The value of the property was less than one hundred rupees. A kabuliat had been executed by A in favour of X's father, and A had paid rent under this kabuliat to X. As to this kabuliat, Pontifex, J., says :—"The defendant (respondent) sets up his possession as sufficient notice to the plaintiff of the defendant's alleged prior purchase. No other equity in his own favour, or fraud on the part of the plaintiff is alleged or proved. In many cases possession not properly accounted for may be a very material fact. But in the present case, the defendant had originally been a tenant of the jotedar, the common vendor of both parties, and his possession was equally consistent with the continuance of such tenancy as with his alleged purchase. Moreover, it has been found as a fact by the Officiating Judge of the Court below, that the defendant left the kabuliat of his tenancy in the hands of the common vendor. He ought, if and when he made his alleged purchase, to have insisted upon the kabuliat being given up to him. By not having done so, he in fact helped the vendor to commit a fraud upon the plaintiff, for the production of this kabuliat to the plaintiff would be sufficient to satisfy him that the defendant's occupation was merely that of a tenant." This was a very important feature in this case, which, but for this essential difference, would be on all fours with the case now before us. That a person who allows the indicia of ownership to remain in the hands of another person will be estopped by such conduct from afterwards saying, as against an innocent purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, that such person could not dispose of the property, is a proposition established by numerous cases; see for example the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Coomar [763] Koondoo v. McQueen (1), and see the case of Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (2). But for this point of difference, in all probability this case would have been referred to a Full Bench, regard being had to case No. 12, which is referred to and dissented from.

14. In the case of Panha Khumaji v. Fatta Upaji (3) the plaintiff claimed under an unregistered sale-certificate. The defendant claimed under a subsequent registered sale-certificate, and was in possession. The registration of both was optional, and it was held that the defendant had a better title. But here again possession accompanied the registered and not the unregistered instrument. So that this case also is not in point.

15. In Balaram Nem Chand v. Appa valad Dulu, &c. (4) it was held, upon cl. 1, s. 6 of the Bombay Reg. IX of 1827, that possession and an unregistered deed of sale left nothing in the vendor which he could afterwards sell or mortgage, and that a person claiming under a subsequent registered mortgage-deed could not succeed. This agrees with the state of the old law on this side of India.

16. The case of Manmal valad Suratmal and Dasrath valad Narayan (5) is directly in point, and was decided on the new Registration Acts. The Bombay High Court here decided that a prior unregistered deed of sale, registration of which was optional, followed by possession, created a good title, which could not be defeated by a subsequent registered sale-certificate.

17. In Sheo Dyul Aheer v. Gool Mahomed Khan (6) a person claiming under a registered deed of sale executed in 1867 was held not to have a better title than a conditional mortgagee in possession under an unregistered deed of 1853,—i.e., executed before the new Registration Acts.

The result of the examination of these seventeen cases is then as follows:—Nine, viz., Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11 and 14, are not in point, and any argument based on them fails; four, viz., Nos. 1, 2, 15 and 17, are indirectly in support of the unregistered instrument followed by possession, inasmuch [764] as, on both sides of India, it has been decided that it was not the policy of the old Registration Acts to allow such a title to be defeated by a bare registered instrument. Three cases, viz., Nos. 10, 12, and 16, are directly in support of the unregistered instrument of which registration could have been effected under the new Acts, but was not compulsory, such instrument being followed by possession. One case No. 13, is indirectly against the unregistered instrument and possession, and in favour of the registered instrument, while in no single instance has it been held, that a person claiming under a later registered conveyance has a better title than a person claiming under a prior unregistered conveyance the registration of which was optional, and which was followed by undoubted delivery of possession.

There is an argument based upon the existence of the words "unless where the agreement or declaration has been accompanied or followed by delivery of possession" in s. 48, which gives registered documents priority over oral agreements; and the non-existence of these words in s. 50. I venture to think that there is a very simple solution of the difficulty raised by this argument. These words did not exist in either section, as these sections stood in the Act XX of 1866. Notwithstanding their absence, when s. 48 came to be construed in the case of Salim Shaikh v. Boidonath Ghuttuck (1) decided in July 1869, it was held that the provisions of this section had no application when possession had been given. The Legislature, when amending the Act in 1871, adopted this construction, and added the above words in s. 48 of Act VIII of 1871. No similar question had been raised up to that time upon s. 50. Case No. 10 was decided in July 1873; case No. 12 in August 1877, and was never reported; and case No. 16 in May 1872. It may be said that the Legislature had Nos. 10 and 16 in the published reports when the Act III of 1877 was passed, and yet the words abovementioned were not inserted in the section of this Act. To this it may be replied that case No. 10 was the decision of a single Judge only, and No. 16 may have escaped observation; that the Legislature had in 1871 [765] ratified and approved the construction put upon s. 48; and a similar construction is therefore rightly put upon s. 50.

The object of the new Registration Acts is to prevent fraud. It ought to be construed so as to promote this object. If we decide that a person who has sold land by a legal conveyance and has parted with the possession, can again sell, and by registering the second conveyance can destroy the first title and give a good title to the second purchaser, we enable the law to be used for the promotion, not the prevention, of fraud. Until the purchaser under the unregistered instrument has been twelve years in possession, his vendor may defraud him of that which he has honestly bought and paid for.

In giving effect to the prior unregistered conveyance and possession, there is no real hardship done to the latter registered purchaser, who, if he has used ordinary precaution and had not been misled by the conduct of the first purchaser as in case No. 13, would have been able to discover that his vendor had no possession to give him.

Whether a bare conveyance by a person not in possession, and who cannot therefore put his vendee in possession, confers any title in this country, is a question as to which there has been some difference of opinion and some discussion. See the following cases:—Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Baboo Budhoo Singh (1), Ranee Bhobo Soondree Dasseah v. Issur Chunder Dutt (2), Tara Soondaree Chowdhraim v. The Collector of Mymensingh (3), Ram Khelawan Singh v. Mussummat Audh Koer (4), Kachu Bayaji v. Kachoba Vithoba (5), Gunga Hurry Nundee v. Raghob Ram Nundee (6), and Lalubhai Surchand v. Bai Amrit (7). The result of these cases appears to be, that delivery of possession of the property sold is essential to complete the title of the vendee; and that a bill of sale by a person out of possession does not take effect as a conveyance in presenti, and is merely evidence of a contract to be performed in future.

[766] The effect of applying this principle is, that the unregistered purchaser obtained a complete title when possession was delivered to him; but the registered purchaser never obtained a complete title, and has in fact no title to enforce. It may well be that, in view of these cases, the Legislature thought it unnecessary to add the words already referred to in s. 50 of Act III of 1877.

It may be observed, although it cannot be used as an argument for the decision of this case, that, in the revised draft of The Transfer of Property Bill, published in the Gazette of India of the 26th March last, 'sale' is defined as "the transfer of ownership, &c.," and such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of a value less than one hundred rupees, may be made either by a registered assurance or by delivery of the property, such delivery being said to take place when the seller places the buyer in possession (s. 54). This is practically the state of the law at the present moment.

The conclusion to which I am led by authority and by my own examination of the subject is, that a bare conveyance, though registered, does not give the person claiming under it a better title than [that of] a person in possession under an unregistered conveyance, such possession having been delivered in order to complete the title created by the unregistered conveyance, and such unregistered conveyance being admissible in evidence to prove that title.

I think, therefore, that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PRINSEP, J.—It appears to me that this case is on all fours with Indro Narain Bal v. Foolmani Bewah (8) decided by Mr. Justice Markby and myself on the 20th August 1877, the decision of which has not been reported. Since the decision of that case, I have had another opportunity of considering this point in a case which was heard by me and two other learned Judges of this Court last week, and I am confirmed in the opinion which I then entertained, that one who holds under an unregistered deed of sale the registration of which is not compulsory, and is in possession of the property conveyed, has a superior title to one [767] who

DHURRUM SINGH (Defendant) v. KISSEN SINGH AND OTHERS
(Plaintiffs).^{*} [14th July, 1881.]

Religious Endowment—Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Restraining Manager from allowing Property to be removed—Form of Order—Injunction—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 30.

In 1849, the Board of Revenue, acting under Reg. XIX of 1810, interfered in the management of the affairs of a temple. In a suit relating to the affairs of the temple instituted in 1878, it did not appear whether any transfer of property had been made under s. 4 of Act XX of 1863, but it did appear that, in 1865, the Judge of Patna had appointed a manager of the temple.

Held, that the right of the Government officers to control the affairs of the temple had been sufficiently proved.

Section 14 of Act XX of 1863 is generally applicable to all religious endowments, and while it in one sense restrains the ordinary Courts from dealing with cases against trustees of religious endowments, it gives special facilities for suits in the principal Civil Court of the district by any of the persons interested in these endowments.

Quære,—Whether, considering the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, the retention of s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 is at all necessary?

An order under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 should be mandatory, and not prohibitory.

Where a sacred book was kept at a temple, and was an object of veneration to the members of the sect entitled to worship there,—

Held, that a suit would lie under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863, by some of the persons interested in the temple, to restrain the superintendent from removing the book to another place, and he should be directed to retain it as a portion of the furniture of the temple.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgments.

The judgments of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

MACLEAN, J.—This is a suit instituted under the provisions of Act XX, 1863, entitled “an Act to enable the Government to divest itself of the management of religious endowments.” Leave to institute the suit was given under s. 18 of the Act. The plaintiffs are members of the Nanuk Shai sect of Sikhs resident at Patna, and the defendant is the superintendent or mohunt of the temple of Guru Gobind Singh, called Harmandir, at the same place. The temple is said to be on the site of the Guru's birthplace, and it contains his cradle 'Pangura' and several copies of the Granth, a sacred law of the Sikhs. One of these Granths purports to have been sent by Guru Gobind Singh to the temple more than a century ago, and to contain a gold leaf on which the Guru himself inscribed some words. This cradle and book are, therefore, objects of great veneration to the Sikhs, and the temple is visited by the chiefs of the Sikh nation and others.

It appears that the Maharaja of Jhind, a leading Sikh Chief, is said to have expressed a wish that the Granth referred to above should be sent to his capital, that his Ranis might have an opportunity of paying their respects to it. He is said to be willing to make a considerable present to the temple for his privilege, and the present superintendent or mohunt is, or was, anxious to comply with the Maharaja's wishes. The plaintiffs, professing to represent the general body of persons interested in the temple, object to the removal of the Granth, on the ground that its removal will "leave the temple empty," or "render it desolate." It is not clear, whether they apprehend that the sacred book will be permanently lost to the temple or not, but they urge that its removal will be an innovation contrary to practice, and will impede the Sikhs of Patna from the due performance of their religious duties. They, therefore, pray [769] that the superintendent may be restrained, by order or injunction, from carrying out the proposed removal of the book.

The defendant, the superintendent, urges that the temple is "not governed by Act XX of 1863," nor is he a trustee appointed under the Act. He states that the Granth is not 'established' or 'asthapon,' nor is it, like the cradle, worshipped. That it is not contrary to the religion of the Sikhs to remove the Granth, and that this particular Granth has on previous occasions been removed. He alleges that it will 'really be for the temporal advantage of the temple to send the book to Jhind, and that the prohibition asked for will involve loss.

It may be remarked that the defendant's (appellant's) pleader informed us, that his client had abandoned his intention of removing the book, though still questioning the applicability of the Act No. XX of 1863 to the temple.

The District Judge, disbelieving the evidence as to the removal of the Granth last year, i.e., 1878, to the Sonopore fair, has directed the issue of an injunction prohibiting the defendant from removing the book. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

The first question is, whether Act XX of 1863 has any application to this temple at Patna. That Act was passed to divest the officers of Government of the control which they were empowered to exercise over religious endowments by Reg. XIX of 1816, and it directed that they should hand over to the trustees of a certain class of endowments all the land and property then (1863) in the possession or under the superintendence of the Board of Revenue or any local agent. The class of endowments referred to were religious endowments to which the Regulation specified was applicable, and the nomination of the trustee, manager, or superintendent whereof was vested in or might be exercised by Government. The evidence of the control of this temple having been exercised by Government is not very strong, but we find that, in 1849, the Board of Revenue forbade any unsolicited interference with the

There is nothing to show that any transfer of property was made under s. 4 of the Act of 1863, although we find that the Judge of Patna, on the 11th March 1865, acting under [770] Act XX of 1863, appointed Genda Singh, the defendant's immediate predecessor, manager of the temple, which he could only do if the Act applied. On the whole, I am disposed to think that the right of the Government officers to control the affairs of the temple was asserted or admitted in 1849 and 1865 without question.

Even if it can be held that sections 3 and 4 of Act XX of 1863 are of doubtful application, I am disposed to think, that s. 14 is generally applicable to all religious endowments, and while it in one sense restrains the ordinary Courts from dealing with cases against trustees of religious endowments, it gave special facilities for suits in the principal Civil Court of the District by any of the persons interested in these endowments. Under the Civil Code then in force, viz., Act VIII of 1859, no such suit could have been brought in the ordinary Courts on behalf of the community, but the present Code provides for such suits in s. 30. It may be doubted whether the retention of s. 14 is at all necessary under the present Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the merits, I think the decree a proper one, save that it should be mandatory rather than prohibitory, for s. 14 requires that the Court should direct the performance of some specific act. It is clear that the Granth to which it refers is one of the main attractions of the temple. Its value as an object of veneration is clearly demonstrated by the mere fact that the Maharaja of Jhind is stated to be anxious to present the ladies of his family to it at his own capital. The objections to its removal could hardly be better illustrated than by the fact proved in this case, that Runjit Singh, the most powerful Chief the Sikhs ever had, yielded to the auguries which are said to have been against its removal, and we find an informal piece of evidence on the record that the question of removing it was seriously debated in the Patiala durbar, and it was decided that it was contrary to the wishes of the States and Sikhs of the Khalsa community that the book should be removed. We cannot say that the evidence of removal of other Granths is conclusive in favour of the removal of this one, or that the Judge has improperly rejected the evidence of one instance of a temporary move of the book to Sonapore fair.

[771] I think, therefore, that the decree of the Judge of Patna should be so far modified as to make it direct that the defendant retain the Granth referred to as a portion of the furniture of the temple. With this alteration in the decree, the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MITTER, J.—I am also of the opinion that the conclusion to which the lower Court has come is correct.

The provisions of Act XX of 1863 are applicable to this case. The Act in question is applicable to all cases of religious endowments and temples to which Reg. XIX of 1810 was applicable. It is said, that s. 4 of the Act is not applicable, because there was no transfer of property. But if Reg. XIX of 1810 governed this temple, then, by the operation of s. 4 of Act XX of 1863, there was a transfer of the superintendence, which was vested in the Board of Revenue under s. 2, Reg. XIX of 1810. That such superintendence was vested in the Board of Revenue under the Regulation in question is clear from their letter, an extract of which has been filed as an exhibit in this case. This is further corroborated by the fact that the predecessor of the appellant, viz., Genda, was confirmed in his appointment under the provisions of s. 5 of Act XX of 1863. It seems to me, therefore, that Act XX of 1863 is applicable to this temple.

The next question is, whether the present suit could be brought under the provisions of s. 14, Act XX of 1863. The plaintiffs charge the defendant with misfeasance, breach of trust, and neglect of duty in respect of the trusts confided to him. If the charge be established, then the Civil Court, under the section in question, would be competent to direct the specific performance of the following act, viz., to keep the Granth in question within the precincts of the temple, so that the pilgrims who may come to visit it may worship it.

On the merits, I think that the plaintiffs' claim is just. Quite apart from any other consideration, it is evident that it would be a breach of trust on the part of the defendant if by any act of his the pilgrims visiting the temple should be deprived of the opportunity of worshipping the sacred Granth. They, undoubtedly, have the right to worship it any time they may choose to visit the temple. The defendant, who is a trustee [772] on behalf of all these pilgrims, would be clearly guilty of breach of trust in allowing the sacred Granth to be removed from the temple.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed, subject to the alteration of the decree as proposed by my learned colleague. The appellant will pay the costs of this suit to the respondents in both the Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

ANUND MOYE DABI (Plaintiff) v. GRISH CHUNDER MYTI AND ANOTHER (Defendants). [10th August, 1881.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10—Trust—Charge of Debts by Testator.

A charge of debts generally by a testator upon his property or any part of it, will not affect limitation, because it does not at all vary the legal liabilities of the parties, or make any difference with respect to the effect and operation of the Statute itself. The executors take the estate subject to the claim of the creditors, and are in point of law trustees for the creditors, and such a charge adds nothing to their legal liabilities. But the case is different when particular property is given upon trust to pay a particular debt or debts. In such a case, the trustee has a new duty, not the ordinary duty of an executor to pay debts generally out of property generally, but a duty to apply a particular property to secure a particular debt; and there is a trust within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act.

the following circumstances: Shib Pershad Giri borrowed a sum of Rs. 15,000 from the defendant Goluck Chunder Myti, the father of the infant defendant Grish [773] Chunder Myti. On the 26th Bysack 1275 (May 1868), Shib Pershad Giri executed a will in favour of the infant defendant, to whom it was addressed, directing him to pay off that debt out of the properties for which he had obtained a decree against one Joy Narain Giri. The material parts of the will were as follow:—

“Therefore, you being my nephew (sister’s son), and competent to give the pinda (funeral cake) to my pectreelok (ancestors), I give you under this will the whole of my moveable and immoveable properties specified in the decree of the original suit No. 17 of the District Court and of the Appeals Nos. 167 and 168 of the High Court, under these conditions,—viz., that you will perform my onteyshtee kreea (funeral cremation) and rites and ceremonies in the proper manner at the prescribed expenses, and that you will cause the said kreea to be performed. The sum of Rs. 15,000, which I took in loan from your father and carried on the cases aforesaid from the Zilla Court up to the Sadr Court, and in which I have been successful, you will repay that loan with interest from the properties specified in the decrees, and you will set me free from the liability of that debt. Your maternal grandmother, who is my mother, and I, being your maternal uncle, his wife (must be my wife) to these two persons you will give food and raiment, and pay expenses to meet religious rites as will be required, and you will maintain them both accordingly. I have a daughter, who is unmarried. You will find out a worthy lad and give her in marriage. The expenses which will be incurred for that, you will pay. If a son be born of the womb of that daughter of mine,—that is to say, if I have a daughter’s son, in that case you will yearly pay him Rs. 200. My opposite party has preferred appeal to the Privy Council against the appeal case abovementioned. You will pay the expense of defending that out of your money, and you will recover the properties specified in the decree and the costs incurred in the lower Court up to the Sadr Court with interest thereof. If it be necessary to furnish security for execution of the decree, when the case is pending in appeal to the Privy Council, in that appeal you will furnish the security and will recover the whole properties with costs as specified in the [774] decree. You being a minor, I have appointed your father, Baboo Goluck Chunder Myti, the trustee. He will carry out the whole work specified in this will. I have given to you the whole of the abovementioned property under the condition stated in this will. From to-day I have relinquished my right to the properties. You from this day will become rightfully entitled to my right of the whole of the properties,—that is to say, to the decree numbered aforesaid, and you will obtain from the Court a certificate under this will, and you will cause record of your name in the decree aforesaid, and you will be in possession, and you will maintain my patrimonial rites and ceremonies and the (sheba) worship of the debta (idol), and you will be in enjoyment of the properties as aforesaid.”

After the successful termination of the suit in the Privy Council, Goluck Chunder Myti, as guardian of the infant defendant, executed the decree against Joy Narain Giri, and obtained possession of all the properties included in it on the 23rd November 1874, and realized the sum of Rs. 10,200 from Joy Narain Giri.

Subsequently, the plaintiff’s husband obtained a decree against Goluck Chunder Myti, and caused Goluck Chunder Myti’s right to receive his debts due to him out of the estate bequeathed by Shib Pershad Giri to be sold in execution of his decree, and purchased it himself on the 16th September 1875. The present suit was not instituted until more than three years after that date. The defendants pleaded limitation, and in the Court below the suit was dismissed on that ground.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENTS.

The following judgments were delivered by :—

WILSON, J. (CUNNINGHAM, J., concurring).—This is a suit by a purchaser at an execution-sale of the right, title, and interest of one Goluck Chunder Myti under the will of one Shib Pershad Giri.

[775] The only question before us is one of limitation. If the suit is properly a mere suit for a debt, and if, as was argued before us, the will amounted at most to an acknowledgment of the debt so as to give a new period of three years within which to sue, then, it is conceded, the suit is barred.

If, on the other hand, the will validly charged the debt on immoveable property, or created a valid trust for its payment, then, it is contended, the suit is in time. (His Lordship then read the will as above set out and continued).

It has been decided in England that a charge of debts generally in a will upon the testator's personal estate, or any portion of it, creates no trust so as to exclude the Statute of Limitations; Scott v. Jones (1).

The reason is, "because it does not at all vary the legal liabilities of the parties, or make any difference with respect to the effect and operation of the Statute itself. The executors take the estate subject to the claim of the creditors; they are in point of law the trustees for the creditors; the trust is a legal trust, and there is nothing whatever added to their legal liabilities from the mere circumstance of the testator himself declaring in express terms that the estate shall be subject to the payment of his debts."

In this country there is no distinction between one kind of property and another in respect of its liability for debts. Probably, therefore, upon the principle just referred to (which is not based upon any peculiarity in the English law of trusts), a charge of debts generally by a testator on his property or any part of it would not affect limitation.

But the case is, I think, materially different when particular property is given upon trust to pay a particular debt or particular debts. In such a case the trustee has a new duty, not the ordinary duty of an executor to pay debts generally out of property generally, but a duty to apply particular property to secure a particular debt, and such trusts of personalty have been upheld in English Courts.

In Williamson v. Naylor (2), a testator gave one-fifth of his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay certain specified [776] debts, all of which were barred by limitation at the date of the testator's death. The case came first before Lord Lyndhurst, C.B., and afterwards before Alderson, B., and it was held, that the effect of the will was to revive the barred debts (the effect of the English Statute having been to bar the remedy, not to extinguish the right); that the trust was a valid trust; and that the creditors claiming under it were entitled as creditors, not as legatees.

This case, it is true, was decided before Scott v. Jones (1); but the decision was approved and followed in an exactly similar case by Shadwell, V.C., five years after Scott v. Jones (1) had been decided—Philips v. Philips (2).

I think the same rule is applicable in this country, and that a gift of property by will upon trust to pay a particular debt or particular debts creates a good trust.

In the present case the testator gives the property in question to the defendant, and expressly directs him to discharge certain duties, one of which is to pay the debt of Goluck Chunder out of the property. It is true that he confides the active administration in the first instance (probably during the defendant's minority) to the defendant's father; but that does not relieve the defendant from discharging the duties imposed, so far as they are undischarged; and then he says expressly, "I have given to you the whole of the abovementioned properties under the condition stated in this will."

This seems to me clearly a gift only on condition of discharging the trust, and I, therefore, think there is a trust within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act, and that the suit is not barred.

PRINSEP, J.—On re-consideration of this case, and after hearing further argument, I agree in this judgment. The contrary view I formerly entertained was in consequence of understanding the case of Scott v. Jones (1) differently from the explanation now given. The case will be remanded to the lower Court for trial. Costs to follow the result.

(1) Suit in a Small Cause Court—Want of Jurisdiction.—A, B, and C, the joint owners of an estate, sued their tenant in the Munsif's Court for rent; the tenant defeated the suit by proving payment of the entire rent to B.

A then brought a suit in the Small Cause Court against B for damages equal in amount to the one-third of rent due to him and the costs incurred by him and awarded against him in the rent-suit in the Munsif's Court. B pleaded that he had expended the share of rent due to A for the benefit of the joint estate, and that A had collected the rents of other mebals belonging to the joint estate, and had not accounted for such rents. Held, that the suit being one which involved questions of partnership account between the joint proprietors of an undivided estate, could not be entertained in a Court of Small Causes. Act XXXV of 1858 (Lunatic District Courts).

- (1) Application under—Interference of Court—Ill-treatment of Lunatic—Accounts of Joint Property—Mitakshara.—The husband of a lunatic's daughter applied to the Court to declare his father-in-law, who was a member of a joint Mitakshara family, to be a lunatic, and appoint a manager of his property and guardian of his person under Act XXXV of 1858. The lunatic had an interest both in joint ancestral property and in property inherited collaterally, which might, but was not shown to, belong to him separately. The lower Court found that the application was made with a view to taking consequent proceedings for partition.

Held that, it appearing that he had remained for sixteen years in the same house under the same guardians, and there being no allegation of ill-treatment, no sufficient grounds were shown for the Court's interference, or the appointment of another guardian of his person. Before any action can be taken under the Act in this respect, there ought to be a strong case made out that the change of custody would be for the lunatic's benefit. Held also, that as his daughter could not inherit his ancestral property, and as it was doubtful if the collaterally inherited property was the separate property of the lunatic, the Court would not, under such circumstances, appoint a manager of the property; but that the guardians of the lunatic, who were managers of the joint family, should, on her request, furnish accounts to the daughter, of the management of the collaterally inherited property.

Semle.—Act XXXV of 1858 applies to the members of a Mitakshara family.

- (15) S. 58—Limitation—Execution of Decree—Delay and Laches—Costs.—In a suit for arrears of rent under Beng. Act VIII of 1869, a decree was obtained, on the 30th June 1876, for a sum which with costs amounted to less than Rs. 500. Application for execution was made, in December, 1877, against property other than that for which the rent was due; but was, in the first Court, opposed successfully by the judgment-debtor, on the ground that the under-tenure should first be proceeded against, though such under-tenure had already been sold away in execution of another decree, and the execution-proceeding was struck off on the 15th March 1878, and the property released from attachment. The judgment-creditor appealed, and was successful both in the lower Appellate Court and the High Court, the latter decision being dated 26th February 1879. The costs awarded him in these proceedings, if added to the amount of the decree, would amount to a sum of more than Rs. 500. The next application for execution was made on 19th August 1879.
Held, that the costs of the appeals in the execution-proceedings should not be added to the decree; and, therefore, the decree being for less than Rs. 500, the provisions of s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, applied to it.

Held , also, that the attachment having been removed in March 1878, the execution of the decree was barred under that section.

(1) Ss. 9, 58, 74— Introduction into Calcutta of Spirituous Liquor manufactured elsewhere—Limits fixed by Collector—Additional Punishment—Alternative Sentence of Imprisonment. —The provisions of s. 74 of the Beng. Excise Act as to additional punishment, where there has been a "previous conviction for a like offence," contemplate merely the case of the offender having been already convicted of an offence punishable with a fine of Rs. 200 or upwards, and being again convicted of another offence punishable with the same punishment; it is not necessary that he should have been previously convicted of the same offence.
The accused were sentenced by the Presidency Magistrate, under ss. 58 and 74 of the Beng. Excise Act, to a fine of Rs. 200 each, in default to three months' imprisonment, and in addition to six months' imprisonment, which was the maximum term that could be awarded under s. 74. Held , that the sentence of imprisonment was not in excess of the powers given to the Magistrate by s. 12 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, the imposition of the additional sentence of imprisonment not affecting the Magistrate's powers as regarded the original sentence under s. 58.
No limits with regard to any distilleries in Calcutta having been fixed under s. 9 of the Act within which spirituous liquor manufactured otherwise than in that particular distillery, shall be introduced or sold without a special pass, and the fixing of such limits being necessary to a conviction of an offence under s. 58, the convictions in this case were set aside. RAM CHUNDER SHAW v. Enlargement of Window—Obstruction—Notice—Delay—Mandatory Injunction.—

Where a person, who has a right to light from a certain window, opens a new window, or enlarges the old one, the owner of an adjoining house has a right to obstruct the new or enlarged opening, if he can do so without obstructing the old, but if he cannot obstruct the new without obstructing the old, he must submit to the burden.

Held, that he had been guilty of no delay in taking steps to prevent the obstruction, and that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring the defendant to remove it. PROVABUTTY DABEE v. MOHENDRO LALL BOSE, 7 C. 453 ...

(2) Jurisdiction—Time from which an Order of Appointment dates.—An Assistant Magistrate convicted an accused on the 12th August, and by an order of even date, such Magistrate was invested with power to act as a Magistrate of the 1st class, although the fact, that he had been so invested with full powers, was not communicated to him until the 23rd idem. The accused appealed to the District Magistrate, and was acquitted. On motion made to the High Court to set aside the acquittal, on the ground that, after the date of the order of the Lieutenant-Governor investing the Assistant Magistrate with further powers, no appeal lay to the District Magistrate,—held, that even supposing the Lieutenant-Governor's order conferred first class powers upon the Assistant Magistrate from the moment it was made, it must be shown before the District Magistrate's decision could be set aside, that the order of the Lieutenant-Governor was signed before the conviction.

(3) Order by Judge of High Court presiding over the Privy Council Department—Letters Patent, s. 15—Judgment—Certified Copy of Order of the Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 610. A decree obtained on appeal by certain defendants, in the High Court, was appealed to the Privy Council by one only of the two plaintiffs to the suit, and the decision of the High Court was reversed; the plaintiff who had appealed assigned her share in the order of the Privy Council to one of the defendants, and delivered him the certified copy of the decree made in the Privy Council. The plaintiff who had not appealed to the Privy Council applied to the High Court for leave to transmit the order to the Court of first instance for execution of the share decreed to him, but on account of the assignment above-mentioned, was unable to produce the certified copy of the decree of the Privy Council. The Judge presiding over the Privy Council Department in the High Court held, that the production of a certified copy of the order of the Privy Council was excusable under the circumstances, but refused the application, on the ground that the decree

- of the Court of first instance, which was affirmed by the Privy Council, could only be executed as a whole and not partly by one of the plaintiffs. Held on appeal per GARTH, C.J.—That the duties of a Judge in dealing with the meaning of decrees of the Privy Council are purely ministerial, and that any order made in such ministerial capacity could not be considered a judgment, and could not, therefore, be made the subject of an appeal to a Bench of the High Court under s. 15 of the Charter.

Appeal (Second Appeal).

- (1) Improper Reception of Evidence by Lower Court—Remand.—On second appeal, the High Court has, generally speaking, no right to look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence in a case other than that which has been improperly admitted, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below.
- The only cases which can be, with propriety, disposed of under such circumstances without a remand, are those where, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, the lower Court has apparently arrived at its conclusions upon other grounds. WOMES CHUNDER CHATTERJEE v. CHONDEE CHURN ROY CHOWDHRY, 7 C. 193 ... 737
- (2) Rent Suit under Rs. 200—Title Beng. Act VIII of 1860, s. 102—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 622.—A and B, both of whom set up a claim to certain land, brought separate rent-suit against the tenants. In none of these suits did the amount claimed exceed Rs. 100. Subsequently to the institution of the rent-suits, A sued B to establish his title to the land in dispute. The District Judge, before whom the rent-suits came on appeal, allowed them to stand over until the decision in the suit between A and B. That suit was decided in favour of B, and the Judge then decided the rent-suit instituted by B in his favour, and dismissed the suits instituted by A.

Appeal (Second Appeal) — (Concluded).

Held, that no second appeal would lie in the rent-suits, as no question of title between parties having conflicting claims was decided in them.

Held, also, that there was no such irregularity on the part of the District Judge in the course which he pursued, of making his decision in the rent-suit depend upon the decision in the suit to establish title, as would justify the Court in interfering under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was enacted in order to protect parties in the position of ryot-defendants, and to prevent their being dragged up to the High Court in cases where the decree or demand is under Rs. 100. In such cases the decree is intended to have the same effect as that of a Small Cause Court. DOORGA NARAIN SEN v. RAM LALL CHUTAR, 7 C. 330

Appeal (to Privy Council).

Application for leave to appeal—Judgment of one Judge—Ministerial and Judicial Acts—Letters Patent, cl. 15.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in the Court of first instance. On appeal to the High Court, the decision of the lower Court was upheld, but the decree was varied in respect of some matters relating to the mode in which the relief to which the plaintiff was declared entitled should be granted. The defendant applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but the application was refused, on the ground that the judgment in the High Court and the Court of first instance were in effect concurrent judgments, and that no substantial point of law was involved in the case. The defendant appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Held, that no appeal would lie. MANLY v. PATTERSON, 7 C. 339 = 9 C.L.R. 166 Arbitration.

- (1) Award—Finality of decree—Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 318, 323, 324 and 325.—A case was referred by consent to arbitration, and after having been re-called into Court was again referred. An award was made by the arbitrator and filed in Court. The defendants then objected, on the ground that they had no notice after the second reference, and that they were not heard, and that the arbitrator had otherwise misconducted himself. These objections were disallowed by the Subordinate Judge, who gave a decree in the terms of the award. This decree was upheld by the Judge, on appeal, who, however, found, that the arbitrator had been guilty of misconduct.

Held, that if the decree of the first Court was not final under s. 325, Act VII of 1859, all that the lower Appellate Court could do, was to remand the case to be dealt with on its merits; but inasmuch as there had been an award and a decree thereon, which was final within the terms of that section, the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal or to express any opinion on what had passed in the first Court. WAZIR MAHTON v. LULIT SINGH, 7 C. 166=8 C.L.R. 505 ...

- (2) Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), Chap. xxxvii—Kabuliat, suit for—Suit under Act X of 1859.—Notwithstanding that Chap. xxxvii of Act X of 1877 (in reference to arbitration) does not refer specially to suits brought under Act X of 1859, yet if both parties to a suit for a kabuliat brought under the latter Act agree to refer the matters in dispute between them to certain arbitrators named by them, and file a joint petition in the Court of the Deputy Collector, stating that they had so agreed, and praying that the case may be referred to such arbitrators, neither of them will be afterwards at liberty to object to a decree made, embodying the award of the arbitrators, on the ground that the reference to arbitration was irregular, and not warranted by any of the provisions of Act X of 1877.

When a case has been so referred, the arbitrators are at liberty to determine what appears to them to be a fair and equitable rate of rent, and notwithstanding the amount so found is less than that demanded by the plaintiff in his plaint, the Court out of which the reference issued is not at liberty on that ground to dismiss the suit, but is bound to order the defendant (with the alternative of eviction) to execute a kabuliat in favour of the plaintiff, engaging himself to pay rent to the plaintiff at the rate determined by the arbitrators to be fair and equitable. *KHEMNA GOWALA v. - (2) Rate of rent payable—Duty of Court—Beng. Act VIII of 1869.—The plaintiff sued for arrears of rent for the year 1282 at the rate of Rs. 2-8 per bighas. The defendant alleged that the rent was only fifteen annas per bigha. The Judge found that the plaintiff had not proved that the rate of rent was Rs. 2-8 per bigha, and, without finding that the proper rate was fifteen annas, gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount. The plaintiff brought a subsequent suit for arrears of rent for the year 1283, when it was held by the Court of first instance and by the lower Appellate Court, that he could only recover arrears of rent at the rate of fifteen annas, that being the rate of "rent payable for the previous year" within the meaning of s. 14, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Arrears of Rent—(Concluded).

Held, that the decisions were wrong, and must be reversed.

In a suit for arrears of rent where the plaintiff fails to prove the rate of rent claimed in the plaint, it is duty of the Court to find the proper rate of rent payable by the tenant to his landlord, and not to a decree merely for the rent admitted by the tenant. PUNNOO SINGH v. NIRGHIN SINGH, 7 C. 298=8 C.L.R. 310

- (3) Voluntary Payment—Mistake—payment under a mistake.—The plaintiffs, believing that they held a four annas share and the defendants the remaining twelve annas share, in a patni, the revenue of which was in arrears, paid to the zemindar, on the 8th of March 1876, a portion of the arrears corresponding to the share in the patni to which they considered themselves entitled. It was afterwards decided, in a suit between the parties, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any share in the patni, and that the defendants were entitled to the whole sixteen annas thereof. Subsequently to this decision, the defendants, in paying up the arrears of revenue due on the patni, took the benefit of the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 8th of March 1876, and paid in only so much as, together with previous payment, made up the whole arrear. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover from the defendants the amount of the payment made to the zemindar on the 8th of March 1876.

Held, that the payment was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. NOBIN KRISHNA BOSE v. MON MOHUN BOSE, 7 C. 573=9 C.L.R. 182

Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 274, 276.—A suit on a mortgage foreclosed under Reg. XVII of 1806, s. 8, comprising property attached before the date of the mortgage under s. 81 and the following sections of Act VIII of 1859, was brought against the purchaser of the attached property, which had been sold under the decree obtained by the attaching creditor. The defence was, that the mortgage falling within the provisions of s. 240 of the Act was void as against the attaching creditor and those claiming under him. For the mortgagee it was contended, that the attachment could not prevail, it not having been proved affirmatively that the requirements of s. 239 relating to the intimation of the attachment had been complied with.

Attachment—(Concluded).

(1) Attorney's Lien—Discharge by dissolution of partnership—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 1, 171.—Where a firm of attorneys dissolved partnership after the death of a client, there being at that time papers and documents belonging to the client in their hands, and a debt due in respect of costs from the client to them,—

Held, that the dissolution of partnership operated as a discharge by the firm, and that the attorneys were not entitled to retain the papers and documents until their costs were paid, but were bound to hand them over to the administrator of the client.

S. 171 of the Contract Act does not give an attorney an absolute lien. S. 1 provides that nothing in the Act contained shall affect any usage or custom of trade, and, as no part of the English law is inconsistent with s. 171, cases arising in this country must be governed by the English authorities. According to those authorities, while the relation of attorney and client exists, the client may either continue to employ the attorney or change him. When he claims to do the latter, the attorney being willing to act, he cannot ask the attorney to give up papers in his possession without first satisfying the lien. The attorney has his option,—he may, if he chooses, either go on acting for his client, or cease to act; if he adopt the latter course he must give up the papers. On the death of the client his representative stands in exactly the same position with respect to the attorney as the client did. In the Matter of MCCORKINDALE, 6 C. 1 = 6 C.L.R. 406 = 5 Ind. These conditions, among other things, stated that the company would not be responsible for loss or damage arising from accidents or risks of the sea ; that the ticket was delivered subject to the conditions that certain articles of a specified nature should be made the subject of a special declaration, in default of which the company would not be liable; that the Company would not be answerable for unregistered luggage ; and that luggage might be insured at any of the company's offices. Bond.

- (1) Description of Property—General Words—Registration.—In consideration of a loan, A gave a bond, by which he covenanted "not to alienate the property of himself and his daughter, or the rest of his own property, until the loan secured by the bond was paid." The bond was recorded under the Registration Act in the book numbered 'four' required to be kept by the Act. A subsequently sold his moveable property, and the conveyance was recorded in the book numbered 'one' in which documents relating to immoveable property have to be recorded. In a suit by the bond-creditor against the purchaser seeking to establish a lien on A's immoveable property by virtue of the bond,—

Held, that the general words used in the bond were not sufficient to give a lien upon any specific property, and that the fact that the bond had been recorded in book 'four' showed that it was not the intention of the parties that the immoveable property of the debtor should be charged. Breach of Contract.

- (1) Impossibility to perform a portion arising after execution—Suit to cancel such portion—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), chaps. iv and v.—A contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant, for a specified number of years, in certain specified lands situated in different villages, with respect to portion of which lands the plaintiff was a sub-tenant only. Subsequently, during the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands, through his immediate landlord having failed to pay the rent, and having been in consequence ejected therefrom by the owner. In a suit by him, under the above circumstances, to have so much of the contract as related to those lands cancelled, on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no neglect on his part,—

Held, that such a case came within the provisions of cl. 2, s. 56 of Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), and that the mere fact that the plaintiff could have paid up the debt due by his immediate landlord and so retained possession of the land, was not sufficient to constitute such an omission or neglect on his part as to take it out of the provisions of that section.

Held, also, that chap. iv of Act I of 1877 (Specific Relief Act) did not apply to such a case, but that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought under s. 40 of that Act, inasmuch as the contract was evidence of different obligations,—viz., to cultivate indigo in different villages.INDER PER-SHAD SINGH v. Held, that, though the plaintiff might have been rejected in the first instance under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that it did not disclose any cause of action, it was too late for an Appellate Court to reverse the decree solely on that ground without being satisfied that no such cause of action was established on the evidence. The Court before whom the application was made refused the grant of the certificate, on the ground that sufficient prima facie evidence existed establishing the validity of the adoption. On appeal held, that the Appellate Court, concurring with the opinion expressed by the Court of first instance in respect of the factum of the adoption, would not be justified in setting aside the decision, on the ground that such Court was wrong in entering into and deciding the question as to the validity of the adoption.

On an application for the grant of a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, which is opposed by a party, who alleges he has a preferable title to it, the Court should adjudicate the question of title, with a view to determine which party has the preferential right to the certificate. *In the matter of the petition of SHEETANATH MOOKERJEE v. - (6) S. 240—Private Sale of Property attached in Execution—Incumbrance created after attachment.—The title obtained by the purchaser on a private sale of property in satisfaction of a decree, differs, from that acquired upon a sale in execution. Under a private sale, the purchaser derives title through the vendor, and cannot acquire a title better than his. Under an execution-sale, the purchaser, notwithstanding that he acquires merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title, by operation of law, adversely to the judgment-debtor, and freed from all alienations and incumbrances effected by him after the attachment of the property sold.

In 1858, the respondent obtained a decree against B. In 1863, in satisfaction thereof, he caused to be attached a decree for mesne profits made in favour of B against the appellants in 1860. In May 1865, the respondent obtained an order for the sale thereof; but, instead of proceeding to execution-sale, he purchased, in 1866, the whole of the mesne profits due under the decree of 1860, by private sale from B. Meanwhile, in September 1865, an order of Court had been made, between B and the appellants, on their consent (but without the respondent being a party to it), whereby the decree for mesne profits was set off, pro tanto, against a prior decree for a larger amount, which the appellants had obtained against B.

Held, that the sale of 1866 having been a private one, and not in process of execution, the respondent only obtained such title as B had in the decree of 1860—viz., a title subject to the effect of the order of September 1865. - (16) S. 32—Adding Parties as Plaintiffs—Act XXVII of 1860, s. 2—Holder of Certificate of Administration.—A sued as only son and heir of his father B. C, the widow of B, having, with the concurrence of A, taken out letters of administration to B's estate, was, on the application of A at the hearing of the suit, made a co-plaintiff under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that C ought not to have been joined as a plaintiff in the suit, inasmuch as A had no right at all to sue.

Section 32, as far as the addition of plaintiffs is concerned, only applies to those cases in which the original party who brought the suit had some title to sue.

Per PONTIFEX, J.—The power given by s. 27 of the Code ought to be exercised before the first hearing of the case.

Held also, that s. 2 of Act XXVII of 1860 prohibited A from suing alone, for although he was, no doubt, beneficially entitled to recover it, yet there was no vexatious or fraudulent withholding of the debt within the meaning of that section.

Per GARTH, C. J.—A debt cannot be said to be "vexatiously withheld" within the meaning of that section, simply because the debtor omits to pay it. CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. GOCOL CHUNDER BHUTTACHARJEE, 6 C. 270=5 Ind. Jur. 362 ...

- (32) Ss. 244, cl. (c), 278, 283—Appeal—Representative—The holders of a taluq hypothecated certain other property belonging to them as security for the rent. A decree for rent was obtained against them. Prior to attachment the taluqdars assigned their interest in eight annas of the hypothecated property to A, and made a mourosi lease of the remaining eight annas to him. The decree-holder then obtained an order for summary sale for the rent due for 1876-77. She then attempted to sell the property hypothecated to her. An objection by A was allowed. A regular suit was then instituted by the decree-holder against A, and it was declared that she was, after selling the taluq, entitled to sell the hypothecated property. The decree-holder again attempted to execute her rent-decree by attaching and selling the hypothecated property, and an objection by A was disallowed.

Held, that no appeal lay from the order disallowing the objection, as A could not be considered to be a 'representative' of the taluqdars within the meaning of s. 244, cl. (c) of the Civ. Pro. Code; and was, therefore, debarred from appealing under ss. 278 and 283. RASHBEHARY MOOKHOPADHYA v. MAHARANI SURNOMOYEE, 7 C. 403=4, Shome D.R. 32=9 C.L.R. 79 ...

(59) S. 586—Appeal in cases cognizable by a Small Cause Court.—A was the proprietor of nine annas of a mouza, B and his family of one anna, and C and others of the remaining six annas. B and his family having occupied and enjoyed, to the exclusion of their co-shareholders, fifty-four bighas of the mouza, failed to pay any rent in respect of such occupation. A instituted a suit against them (making C and the other holders of the six annas share defendants to the suit) to recover the sum of Rs. 412-8 as the sum justly due to him after making all proper deductions, including as well the share of the rent of the fifty-four bighas to which the six annas shareholders were entitled, as also the share which B and his family were entitled to retain as proprietors of a one-anna share. Held, that the facts showed an implied contract on the part of B and his family to pay to their co-shareholders whatever, upon taking an account, should appear to be due to them; and that, inasmuch as the total amount sought to be recovered in the suit by A did not exceed 500 rupees, the suit was one which might have been brought in a Small Cause Court, and therefore the plaintiff had no right of second appeal to the High Court under s. 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure. - (61) S. 622—Appeal—Rent—Suit under Rs. 200—Title—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 102.—A and B, both of whom set up a claim to certain land, brought separate rent-suit, against the tenants. In none of these suits, did the amount claimed exceed Rs. 100. Subsequently to the institution of the rent-suits, A sued B to establish his title to the land in dispute. The District Judge, before whom the rent-suits came on appeal, allowed them to stand over until the decision in the suit between A and B. That suit was decided in favour of B, and the Judge then decided the rent-suit instituted by B in his favour, and dismissed the suits instituted by A.

Held, that no second appeal would lie in the rent-suit, as no question of title between parties having conflicting claims was decided in them.

Held also that there was no such irregularity on the part of the District Judge in the course which he pursued, of making his decision in the rent-suits depend upon the decision in the suit to establish title as would justify the Court in interfering under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 was enacted in order to protect parties in the position of ryot-defendants, and to prevent their being dragged up to the High Court in cases where the decree or demand is under Rs. 400. In such cases the decree is intended to have the same effect as that of a Small Cause Court. DOORGA NARAIN SEN v. RAM LALL CHHUTAR, 7 C. 330 ...

Suit to set aside—Fraudulent Representations—Sanction by Court of Compromise entered into by a Minor—Misapprehension or mistake as to Material Facts—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 20—Inquiry as to whether it would be for benefit of Minor to set aside Compromise.—The plaintiff, a minor, was, as daughter and one of the heirs of A, entitled to 7-24ths of his estate. The value of A's estate was uncertain, and depended on whether or not A had been a partner in business with M, and whether or not a sum of Rs. 30,000 had been paid by M to A, in satisfaction of all claims which A had against M in respect of the estate of K, a deceased brother of A, and former partner in the same business. M having, on A's death, possessed himself of all the estate of A, the plaintiff brought a suit against M, in which a decree was made, ordering an account to be taken of the estate of A which had come into the hands of M. Pending such account, M died, leaving a will, by which he appointed the son of A and another his executors, and the suit was revived against them. In their application for probate they stated that the value of M's estate, so far as they had been able to ascertain and were aware, was Rs. 4,41,000. Shortly after probate was granted, negotiations were entered into between the executors and the advisers of the plaintiff for a compromise, and a petition was, with the concurrence of the executors, presented by the plaintiff to the Court, asking for its sanction to the terms agreed upon by the parties, which were, that the plaintiff should receive Rs. 20,000 in full of all demands, and Rs. 5,000 for her costs of suit. This petition took, as the value of M's estate, the amount stated by the executors in their application for probate, and stated that the value of A's estate, in case the abovementioned payment by M was proved, would be Rs. 30,000, and in case it was not proved, then a moiety of the estate of M; and that, considering the difficulties the plaintiff had to meet in proving her case, and with a view to put an end to further trouble, litigation, and expense, the above terms had been agreed to on her behalf. These terms of compromise were sanctioned by the Court on the 11th September 1876. Shortly afterwards, further property was discovered belonging to the estate of M. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors to set aside the compromise, alleging that the terms had been accepted by her on the faith of the representation made by the executors in their application for probate, and charging them with wilful and fraudulent concealment. There was evidence to show that some of the property subsequently discovered was such that the defendants as executors ought to have known, even if they did not of its existence at the time of the compromise. Held, that even though the executors had no such knowledge, and there was no actual fraud, yet there was such culpable ignorance and neglect of duty on their part as to amount to fraud, and carry with it the consequences of knowledge, and as the compromise had in consequence been entered into by the parties and sanctioned by the Court under a misapprehension of material facts, the plaintiff was entitled to have the compromise set aside, and the parties restored to their rights in the former suit at the time it was effected.

Per PONTIFEX, J.—In cases where the sanction of the Court is required, as where there is an infant concerned, each party is bound to see that the materials on which the sanction of the Court is asked for are unimpeachable.

Per PONTIFEX, J.—Quære.—Whether in this suit, if the question were found to arise, it would be necessary for the Court to consider whether it would be for the benefit of the minor that the compromise should be set aside?

Per GARTH, C. J.—Semble.—Even if it only appeared that the compromise had been entered into and sanctioned under an entire mistake of the parties and of the Court with regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, it ought to be set aside under s. 20 of the Contract Act.

Per GARTH, C. J.—In a substantive suit by a minor to set aside a compromise made with the sanction of the Court obtained by fraud or mistake, Constructive notice.

Principal and Agent—Fraud by Agent—Liability to Third Persons.—When a person is proved to have had a knowledge of certain facts, or to have been in a position, the reasonable consequence of which knowledge or position would be, that he would have been led to make further enquiry, which would have disclosed a particular fact, the law fixes him with having himself had notice of that particular fact. There may be such wilful negligence in abstaining from the enquiry into fact which would convey actual notice, as may properly be held to have the consequence of notice actually obtained. But if there is not actual notice, and no wilful or fraudulent turning away from an enquiry into, and consequent knowledge of, facts which the circumstances would suggest to a prudent mind, then the doctrine of constructive notice ought not to be applied.

Delivery from seller's godown in pile up to the 15th of July next." On the 10th July, the vendor tendered the seed. On examination the refraction was found to be above the contract rate. It was agreed that the vendor should reclean the seed ; and on the 13th July, the purchasers went to take delivery of the seed, which was found still to be not sufficiently cleaned. On the 15th July, the vendor said that he should require a week longer for that purpose. The purchasers then cancelled the contract. In a suit by the vendor for damages for breach of contract, —

Held—(1), that the breach of the contract was with the plaintiff ; (2), that the week allowed for recleaning commenced from the 10th July ; and that as the plaintiff had not succeeded in reducing the rate of refraction to the contract rate, the defendants had a right to reject the seed ; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to further time to reclean it again. *BUDDREE DOSS v. (3) Partition—Portion of an estate—Parties.—The owner of a twelve annas share in a joint zemindari granted to the plaintiff a mokurrari lease of his share in a small portion of land within the zemindari. The owners of the remaining four annas share granted a patni of his share in the whole zemindari to the defendants. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for partition of the small plot of land.

Held, that such a suit would not lie, because the zemindars were not made parties; and also that a partition could not be enforced of a part of the estate held by the defendants, who, if the plaintiff's claim was allowed, might, in respect of the same estate, be subjected to many claims for partition at the suit of persons in the plaintiff's position. *PARBATI CHURN DEB v. - (17) Ss. 491, 530—Dispute likely to cause breach of the peace—Decision on title by Civil Court—Police report—Incorporation of, by reference.—On the 20th of March, 1879, A applied to have certain lands, which he had lately purchased, registered in his name. The order of the Deputy Collector, declaring that A had proved possession, and was entitled to registration, was not passed until the 24th December, 1879. Prior to A's purchase, B and C had, on the 6th March 1879, obtained registration of the same property. The proceedings were sent to the Commissioner, who, on the 29th September, 1880, declared A to be entitled to the land; and in October the registration in the names of B and C was cancelled, and A's name was finally registered. In July, 1880, proceedings under s. 530 of the Crim. Pro. Code, were commenced upon the petition of certain ryots, who alleged that other ryots, at the instigation of A, were going to do acts which would lead to a breach of the peace. The Deputy Magistrate, the same person who as Deputy Collector had decided the land-registration case in favour of A, proceeded under s. 530 to consider the question as to who was in possession, and found that B and C were in possession.

Held that the Deputy Magistrate could not, in these proceedings, set aside the order which he had made in the registration case as that order could only be set aside in a regular suit.

The proceedings recorded by the Deputy Magistrate did not set forth in express language that he was satisfied that a dispute likely to create a breach of the peace existed in respect of the land in question, between A on the one side, and B and C on the other; nor did it set forth the grounds upon which he was so satisfied that such dispute existed.

Held, that the proceeding was therefore defective.

In the proceedings the Magistrate referred to a police report, which, however, did not show that a breach of the peace was imminent.

Held, that although this report might be taken to be incorporated by reference, yet that it was not sufficient to justify the order.

Per FIELD, J.—Unless the parties are able to show that there is such a dispute as is likely to induce a breach of the peace, the Magistrate should hold his hand and not proceed further. When the rights of the parties have been determined by a competent Court, the dispute is at an end, and it is the duty of the Magistracy to maintain the rights of the successful party, and the proper course for the Magistrate to pursue, if the defeated party does any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, is to take action under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and require from such person security to keep the peace. In the matter of GOBIND CHUNDER MOITRA, 6 C. 835 = 8 C.L.R. 217 = 4 Shome L.R. 115 ...

(20) S. 530—Record of grounds—Police report, incorporation of—Evidence of possession—Evidence of title.—In proceedings under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate recorded the following words—"whereas from the police report a breach of the peace probable," and found that certain persons were in possession.

Held that, although the record of grounds was unsatisfactory as the initial proceeding did not contain within itself all which the law requires to be recorded,—viz., in the first place, that the Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace exists, and in the second place, the ground upon which he is so satisfied,—yet as the police report from which the grounds for apprehending a breach of the peace appeared was incorporated by reference, the final order was not defective.

No sufficient evidence of possession was produced before the Magistrate, but evidence as to the title of the person in whose favour the Magistrate found was given, and the Magistrate based his decision upon the latter evidence, and determined the case with reference to the merits of the claims of the parties to the right of possession.

Held that, although the Magistrate would have been justified in looking to the evidence of the title in corroboration of the evidence of possession, he was wrong in basing his decision on the evidence of title, and his order was set aside. *In the matter of the petition of KALI KRISTO THAKUR v. XI of 1829—Act XXXII of 1855.—In a suit for damages caused by the overflow of a river through an embankment on the defendants' land, it appeared that the defendants held under a kabuliati from Government, which provided that the zemindar should not object to pay rent on the score of drought or inundation; that he should bear all losses incurred on that account; and also that he should do embankment work at the proper time, and should be liable for loss from negligence. It did not appear whether the embankment was in existence when the kabuliati was granted. It was proved that the defendants received an annual sum from Government as a contribution to the repairs of embankments, but such payment was not provided for in the kabuliati and no evidence was given as to the terms of the agreement under which it was paid.

Held, that there was no common law liability to repair imposed on the defendants.

Damages—(Concluded).	PAGE
That it not having been proved that the embankment in question was in existence at the date of the kabuliat, the defendants were not liable ratione tenure , and that if the sum paid by Government was in consideration of the defendants' maintaining the embankment in question, and if the terms of the agreement under which it was paid showed that it was intended to impose the obligation to repair for the public benefit, the defendants would be liable.

In a suit brought under the above circumstances to have the document declared void, and to have it cancelled, the Court placed the onus of proving its genuineness and its execution by the plaintiff on the defendant,—
Held , that the proceedings of the Registrar, when he enquired whether the document had been duly executed or not, were in no sense those of a "competent Court," but only those of an executive officer invested with quasi-judicial functions, and that, consequently, such a suit was maintainable; and that, under the circumstances, the onus of proof was properly placed on the defendant.

Decree—(Concluded).

his purchase was confirmed, and he obtained a certificate of sale on the 23rd May 1879, from which date he remained in possession. The judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside for irregularity, but his application was dismissed both at the hearing and on appeal. He had applied, before the sale took place, to stay the sale on the ground that the right to apply for execution was barred. This application was dismissed but was allowed on appeal. It did not appear that the auction-purchaser was a party to the proceeding, or that he was cognizant of the application.

Two years from the date of the sale, and one and-a-half year from its confirmation, the judgment-debtor, on a summary application, obtained an order setting aside the sale and putting the auction-purchaser out of possession.

Held, that the order was erroneous, the Subordinate Judge having no power, after the sale had been confirmed, to set aside the sale by a summary order; and that, under art. 165, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, the application for such an order was barred.

The words "subsisting decree," in s. 316 of Act X of 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879, mean a decree unreversed and in full force, and not merely one upon which execution cannot be issued. In the matter of the petition of MAHOMED HOSSEIN v. KOKIL SINGH, 7 C. 91 = 9 C.L.R. 53 ...

Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), ss. 72, 74, 76—Criminal Trespass.—A, the servant of B, was convicted of criminal trespass in going upon the land of C., one of B's tenants, and preventing him from cutting his crops. B was convicted of abetment of Criminal trespass. A and B pleaded that they were acting in the exercise of the legal right of distraint.

It appeared that no written demand under s. 72 of the Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869) for the amount of the arrears, together with an account exhibiting the grounds on which demand had been made, was served on C, and that no written authority under s. 76 had been given by B to A.

Held, that it lay upon A and B to show that they had conformed to the provisions of the law, or at least had acted with the bona fide intention of distraining the complainant's crops; and that the conviction was right.

Held also, that as, under s. 74, standing crops and ungathered products may, notwithstanding distraint, be reaped and gathered by the cultivator, A had no right, even if he was acting bona fide, to restrain C from cutting his crops. JHUMUK NONIAH v. SHADASHIB ROY, 7 C. 26 ...

Introduction of English Law—Freehold Estates of Inheritance—Armenian Widow—English Law how far applicable in Calcutta—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 4—Estoppel—21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17—Dower Act XXIX of 1839.—The widow of an Armenian married before the Dower Act (XXIX of 1839), is entitled to dower out of lands which her husband held during the marriage for an estate of inheritance as against a Hindu purchaser for value from the husband during his life, the English law of dower having been recognized in this country amongst Europeans and Armenians as a branch of the law of inheritance.

Per GARTH, C. J.—Estates which have been held by British subjects under the name of freehold estates of inheritance, are, in all essential respects, the same estates which have been held in England under the same name.

The case of The Mayor of Lyons v. The East India Co., does not mean to decide that the Courts of this country are justified in adopting just so much of the law of inheritance, or of dower, or of any other law, as they consider equitable, and rejecting the rest. It only points out that there are certain portions of the English Statute law which from their very nature were only passed for reasons connected with England, and which would not be applicable in India or any Colony of the British Crown,—e.g., the Mortmain Acts, the Law of Aliens, and the like.

The provisions of s. 4 of the Succession Act are prospective, and leave rights unaffected which had already been acquired before the Act passed. SARKIES v. PROSONOMOYEE DOSSEE, 6 C. 794=8 C.L.R. 76=4 Shome L. R. 134

Easement.

(1) Limitation, Plea of—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26—Presumption of a Grant.—In a suit to establish an easement when limitation is pleaded, the proper issues to frame under s. 26 of Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act) are :—

(i) whether the easement in question was peaceably, openly, and as of right, enjoyed by the plaintiff, or those through whom he claims, within two years of the institution of the suit ; and

(ii) in the event of the above issue being found in the negative, whether there is evidence of enjoyment on the part of the plaintiff, or those through whom he claims, of such a character and duration as to justify the presumption of a grant or other legal origin of the plaintiff's right independent of the provisions of Act XV of 1877, s. 26. *ACHUL MAHTA v. (2) Right of way—Right of Passage for Boats in the Rainy Season—Water.—A right of passage for boats in the rainy season over a channel wholly in another man's land, is, in respect of extent, analogous to an ordinary right of way ; and the dominant owner cannot complain of the servient owner's narrowing the channel, so long as the latter, by so doing, does not prevent the former from passing and repassing as conveniently as he has always been accustomed to do.

A right of passage for boats in the rainy season over another person's tank must be claimed in a particular direction in order to be valid. DOORGA CHURN DHUR v. KALLY COOMAR SEN, 7 C. 145=8 C.L.R. 375

(3) Right of Way—Prescription—Effect of illustration—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26 and illus. (b).—On the 6th of April 1878, the plaintiffs sued for obstructing a right of way for boats in the rainy season. The defendants admitted the obstruction, but denied the right of way. The plaintiffs proved that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed, and actually used by them, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, from before 1855 down to November, 1875, since when no actual user of the way by the plaintiffs had taken place. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs had made no actual use of the way within two years previous to the institution of the suit. Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that, notwithstanding Act XV of 1877, s. 26, illus. (b), actual user within two years previous to the institution of the suit is not necessary, in order that the right claimed may be acquired under Act XV of 1877, s. 26.

Illustrations in Acts of the Legislature ought never to be allowed to control the plain meaning of the section to which they are appended, especially when the effect would be to curtail a right which the section in its ordinary sense would confer. *KOYLASH CHUNDER GHOSE v. - (4) Unity of possession—Severance—Nuisance arising from acts of several persons. The words 'appurtenant' or 'belonging' will ordinarily carry only actual existing easements and therefore will carry no right of way over the land of the grantor, though, under certain circumstances, even these words will have a wider construction.

Where further words are used, such as 'therewith held or used, such words will carry away formerly enjoyed as an easement, but as to which the right has been suspended by unity of possession. But such words will not carry a way made by the owner of both properties during the unity of possession for his own greater convenience in the use of the two properties jointly.

But where, during the unity of possession, a way, which has never existed as an easement, is in fact used for the convenience of one of the tenements afterwards severed, the authorities show that the words in question are large enough to carry it.

One who has a right of passage over any place, must not, any more than the owner of the soil might, use it in an excessive or improper manner so as to obstruct the exercise by others of their rights.

The acts of several persons may together constitute a nuisance, though the damage occasioned by the acts of any one, if taken alone, would not be appreciable. CHUNDER COOMAR MOOKERJI v. KOYLASH CHUNDER SETT, 7 C. 665

The plaintiff now sued A upon the bond, making B a party. At the trial, A denied the execution of the bond, and it was not produced by the plaintiff, who, having served B with notice to produce, tendered secondary evidence of its contents. Evidence Act (I of 1872).

(2) Ss. 13, 40, 41, 43—Admissibility in Evidence of Judgments not "inter partes."—Per GARTH, C. J., JACKSON, PONTIFEX, and MORRIS, JJ. (MITTER, J., dissenting).—A former judgment, which is not a judgment in rem, nor one relating to matters of a public nature, is not admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit, either as a res judicata, or as proof of the particular point which it decides, unless between the same parties or those claiming under them.

In a suit between A and B, the question was, whether C or D was the heir of H. If C was the heir of H, then A was entitled to succeed; otherwise not. The same question had been raised in a former suit brought by X against A, and decided against A; and this former judgment was admitted in evidence in the suit between A and B, and dealt with by the Courts below as conclusive evidence against A upon the point so decided.

Held (MITTER, J., dissenting), that the former judgment was not admissible as evidence in the suit between A and B, either as "a transaction" under s. 13, or as "a fact" under s. 11, or under any other section of the Evidence Act. *GUJJA LALL v. He subsequently withdrew this statement, and made another, in which he endeavoured to exculpate himself.

Held, that this statement was not evidence against the other prisoners under s. 30 of the Evidence Act. It was not a confession, nor did it amount to any admission by the prisoner that he was guilty to any degree of the offence charged; but it was simply an endeavour on his part to explain his own presence on the occasion in such a manner as to exculpate himself, and any mention made by him in such a statement of other persons having been engaged in the riot, was altogether irrelevant, and not evidence against them.

At a trial before a Sessions Court, the Judge, on the examination-in-chief of the witnesses for the prosecution being finished, questioned the witnesses at considerable length upon the points to which he must have known that the cross-examination would certainly and properly be directed.

Held, that such a course of procedure was irregular, and opposed to the provisions of s. 138 of the Evidence Act.

It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions; and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in s. 138 of the Act. *NOOR BUX KAZI v. - (6) S. 32, cl. 1, and s. 33—"Questions in Issue"—Charges added at Sessions—Depositions before Magistrate—Witness dying or absconding—Qualification of Jurymen.—In the proceedings before a Magistrate on a charge of causing grievous hurt, two (among other) witnesses, one of whom was the person assaulted were examined on behalf of the prosecution. The prisoners were committed for trial. Subsequently the person assaulted died, in consequence of injuries inflicted on him. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, charges of murder and of culpable homicide not amounting to murder were added to the charge of grievous hurt. The deposition of the deceased witness was put in and read at the Sessions trial.

Held, that the evidence was admissible either under s. 32, cl. 1, or s. 33 of the Evidence Act, notwithstanding the additional charges before the Sessions Court.

The question whether the proviso to s. 33 of the Evidence Act is applicable,—that is, whether the questions at issue are substantially the same,—depends upon whether the same evidence is applicable, although different consequences may follow from the same act.

At the trial it was proved that the other witnesses who had been examined before the Magistrate had disappeared, and that it had been found impossible to serve him with a summons. His deposition was put in and read.

Held, that it was properly admitted under s. 33. In the matter of the Petition of ROCHIA MOHATO. THE EMPRESS v. ROCHIA MOHATO, 7 C. 42 =8 C.L.R. 273 ...

Execution

- (1) Attachment by more than one Judgment Creditor of Property of Judgment-Debtor in Court—Priority—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 272 and 295.—In execution of a decree of a Munsif's Court, the plaintiff attached certain money, the proceeds of decrees which her judgment-debtor had obtained against third parties, then lying in a Small Cause Court to her credit, and subsequently obtained an order from the Munsif directing the same to be paid to her in satisfaction of her decree, which order was duly communicated to the Small Cause Court Judge. Subsequently, the defendant, who held another decree against the same judgment-debtor, attached the same sale-proceeds. The Small Cause Court Judge then proceeded, under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code, to enquire whether the plaintiff was entitled to any priority over the second attaching creditor, and having decided that question in the negative, divided the sale-proceeds rateably between them. In a suit brought by the plaintiff, under the above circumstances, to recover from the defendant the portion of the sale-proceeds so paid to him,—

Held, that s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not applied to the Small Cause Court Judge to execute her decree, and it had never been transferred to that Court for execution; and that the proviso in s. 272 is merely intended to mean that any question of title or priority is to be determined by the Court in which or in whose custody the property is, and not by the Court which made the order of attachment.

Held also, that, previous to the order by the Munsif directing the payment to be made to the plaintiff, the Small Cause Court Judge would have had jurisdiction to deal with the question he had tried; but as that order was made prior to the attachment by the defendant, the judgment-debtor had no interest in the money which could be so attached, the effect of that order being to vest the property in the money in the plaintiff, and to take it out of the disposal of the Small Cause Court Judge, and consequently the order for distribution was wrong, and the plaintiff was entitled to the decree she sought.

- (2) Irregularities in Proclamation of Sale—Evidence of such Irregularities—Nazir's Report—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 274, 287, 289, 290, 291, and 295—Sale to satisfy judgment-Creditor who has not attached.—The proclamation of sale required by s. 274 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to be made at some place adjacent to the property to be sold, and the fixing up of a copy of the order in a conspicuous part of the property, are acts which must precede the posting of the notices in the Court-house as required by s. 290.

Where the sale-proceeds of a portion of several parcels of property are sufficient to satisfy the decree of a judgment-creditor who has attached the property, another judgment-creditor, although he has not attached the property, is still entitled to have the remainder of the property sold to satisfy his decree under the provisions of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Three mouzas were attached in execution of decrees obtained by A and B. Prior to the sale C, who had also obtained a decree against the owner of the land, applied for leave to execute his decree, in order that he might participate in the sale-proceeds under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code. Upon the day fixed for the sale, the Deputy Commissioner was unable, through illness, to attend; and he postponed the sale for three days. Two of the mouzas were sold, and realized more than enough to satisfy the decrees of A and B. The third was then sold in satisfaction of C's decree. Upon an application by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, it appeared, that notice of the sale had been posted in the Court-house more than thirty days before the date fixed for the sale, but had only been published on the properties to be sold five days before that date; that notice of the existence of a mortgage on the properties, but no further particulars, was given, and the mortgagee was allowed to purchase; and that the Deputy Commissioner had accepted the reports of the Nazir and Court-peon as to the proclamation of sale, and had refused to allow the judgment-debtor to give evidence of its insufficiency.

Held, that the proclamation of sale on the property having taken place only five days prior to the date of sale, and the particulars of the mortgage not having been given, there had been such material irregularities in the publication as to entitle the judgment-debtor to give evidence of them and the other allegations made by him, in order to show that he had suffered material injury by reason of such irregularities.

Held also, that the Deputy Commissioner was not entitled to proceed upon the reports of the Nazir and Court-peon, but was bound to hear the evidence tendered by the judgment-debtor, though he was justified, under s. 291, in postponing the sale as he had done.

Held further, that the third judgment-debtor who had not attached the property, was still entitled to have the sale proceeded with and his decree satisfied under the provisions of s. 295. *MOHUNT MEGH LALL POOREE v. - (3) Irregularity in Publishing and Conducting a Sale—Waiver of Irregularity by the Judgment-Debtor.—Previous to the date fixed for the sale of certain property in execution of a decree, the judgment-debtors presented a petition, praying for a month's further time to be allowed them in order that they might complete the arrangements they were making for the purpose of paying off the debt, and stating that the decree-holders had attached, and advertised the property for sale. That petition being refused, the sale took place; and subsequently the judgment-debtors came in and objected to the sale, and asked to have it set aside, on the ground that there had been material irregularity in the publication of the attachment and sale-proclamation, and that, consequently, they had suffered substantial injury. The Subordinate Judge refused to hear evidence on this point, holding that the petition was an admission that the proceedings were in order.

Held, that the petition presented prior to the sale did not amount to an admission by the judgment-debtors that the publication and proclamation of the sale had been duly made; and that consequently, the Court was bound to hear the evidence tendered by the judgment-debtors on that point, and to find whether there had been such irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale as to occasion substantial injury to the judgment-debtors. *THAKOOR MAHATAB DEO v. Act VII of 1868, subsequently became the purchaser of a decree passed prior to the sale in a suit upon a mortgage of the property, such decree being declared not only a charge on the mortgaged property, but also personal against the mortgagor.

Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to execute the decree against the surplus sale-proceeds under such sale, although he abandoned his lien on the property. GOLUK CHUNDER MAHINTA v. SURBOMANGALA DABI, 6 C. 711=8 C.L.R. 189=4 Shome L.R. 41 ...

- (5) Mortgage-Decree—Stay of Sale pending Administration—Suit—Appealable Order—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244, cl. (c).—In execution of a decree on a mortgage-bond executed by the father of the judgment-debtors, since deceased, which decree directed that the mortgage lien should be enforced—first, by sale of the property specifically mortgaged; and secondly, if the debt remained unsatisfied, by the sale of the other property in the possession of the judgment-debtors, the judgment-creditor proceeded to have the mortgaged property sold. After the issue of the sale-notification, and three days prior to the date fixed for the sale, one of the judgment-debtors applied to have the sale stayed, on the ground that an administration-suit was pending with respect to the property of his father, the mortgagor, and also asked that a receiver might be appointed and arrangements made for the purpose of paying off the mortgage-debt and saving the property from being sold. On this application the Court passed an order staying the sale.

Held, that such order was appealable, being a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of that decree, and as such coming within the provision of cl. (c), s. 244, Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code).

Held also, that the Court was wrong in passing such order, inasmuch as there were no reasonable grounds why a secured creditor should be debarred from enforcing his security pending the administration-suit. KRISTO-MOHINY DOSSEE v. BAMA CHURN NAG CHOWDRY, 7 C. 733=9 C.L.R. 344 ...

A then sued B for contribution. Pending that suit, B again made default, and the estate was sold and purchased by C, subject to incumbrances. Subsequently, A obtained her decree against B, and assigned her decree to D, who obtained an order for execution and attached certain property belonging to B. D and E then entered into an agreement with C, that they would release C and the share charged with payment of A's decree, from all liability, and that they would entrust the whole conduct of the execution-proceedings to C, in consideration of his granting a perpetual lease of part of the property to D and E. In pursuance of this agreement, D and E granted a release to C, and C granted a lease to E for himself, and it was contended, also, as benamidar of D. The agreement contained a proviso that should the Court, in which the decree should be executed, of its own accord or on the petition of B, or his legal representative, notwithstanding objection on the part of D and E, make any order directing the decree to be executed against the estate, then in such case D and E should not be bound by the release, and that it should be open to C to cancel the agreement. D applied for execution against the estate of the adopted son of B (who had died), but subsequently abandoned all proceedings and transferred his decree to the High Court to obtain execution against a house belonging to C, in Calcutta. The adopted son and widow of B, in a suit brought against C and D, objected to the execution-proceedings, and after paying the sum due to D into Court, asked for an injunction staying all further proceedings in execution until the hearing of the suit.

Held, that D had obtained, out of the lien directed by the decree, some benefit or advantage, which the plaintiffs might have a right to have valued at the hearing, and that, notwithstanding this did not form the subject of a separate prayer in the plaint, the Court would grant the injunction. *KRISTO MOHNEY DOSSEY v. The widow having died before execution for the costs was taken out, the decree-holder sought to take out execution against the next heirs of the late widow's deceased husband. Held, that the fact, that the widow did not in her suit seek to recover any interest personal to herself, but that she contracted the judgment-debt in the effort to recover a portion of her husband's estate, to which in its entirety the next heirs of her late husband had succeeded, was sufficient to make the whole estate liable, and would entitle the decree-holder to satisfy his decree against "the legal representatives" of the late widow's husband, under s. 234 of Act X of 1877.

- (6) Court which passed the Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), as amended by Act XII of 1879, ss. 223, 649—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 179, cl. 4.—Per Garth, C.J.—S. 649 of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended by Act XII of 1879, which explains the meaning of the expression the "Court which passed the decree," does not exclude the Court which originally passed the decree as being a Court in which an application for execution should be made, but merely includes another Court.

When, therefore, a Court which has passed a decree has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it, the application for execution may be made either to that Court, although it has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree, or to the Court which (if the suit wherein the decree was passed were instituted at the time of making application to execute it) would have jurisdiction to try the suit.

Per Field, J.—A Court does not cease to be "the Court which passed the decree" merely by reason that the head-quarters of such Court are removed to another place, or merely because the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are altered.

An application for the transfer of a decree under the provisions of s. 223 and the following section of Act X of 1877, is a step-in-aid of the execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877. *LATCHMAN PUNDEH v. The decree was dated the 12th June 1875, the first instalment was due in July 1875, and the last in October 1877. Default was made in payment of the first three instalments, but the decree-holder did not apply for execution, and accepted subsequent payments. On the 13th December 1879, he applied for execution for the amount then remaining due.

Held, that the period of limitation prescribed by art. 179, sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, began to run on the third default taking place, and that no subsequent payment could stop limitation once begun. ASMUTULLAH DALAL v. KALLY CHURN MITTER, 7 C. 56=5 Ind. Jur. 525 ...

- (8) Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 230, 235, 236 and 237.—In execution of a decree passed more than twelve years before the date of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), certain judgment-creditors applied for the attachment and sale of certain specified property belonging to their judgment-debtor, previous to the date on which the three years allowed for such execution, under s. 230, would have expired. Subsequently, after the three years had elapsed, they filed a fresh application, praying that certain other property of their judgment-debtor might be attached and sold in lieu of that specified in their former application, and that the latter might be released.

Held, at execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

Per PRINSEP, J.—Under s. 230 of the Civ. Pro. Code, it was intended by the Legislature that a decree-holder, seeking to execute a decree passed more than twelve years before, should have one opportunity to execute that decree, and that, if he fails to satisfy it on that application, any further application becomes barred. *SREENATH GOOHO v. - (11) Partial Satisfaction under Arrangements made by Court—Limitation—Subsequent Application for Execution.—In execution of a decree, an order was made by the Court, directing the payment of the rents of certain property, which had been attached, as they became due from the mukuridar to the judgment-debtors, to be made to the decree-holder, to satisfy his decree; and afterwards the execution-case was struck off the file. Subsequently, default having been made by the mukuridar in the payment of the rents of certain years, and the decree not having been fully satisfied, the decree-holder applied for an order directing the payment of the rents which were in arrear to be made by the mukuridar in accordance with the previous order. Notice having been directed to be served on the judgment-debtors, they came in, and pleaded limitation.

Held, that, as the application was not strictly one for fresh execution, limitation could not apply, and that, as the effect of the order in the execution-proceedings was virtually to appoint the decree holder receiver under the provisions of s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859, and as the attachment was still in force, his proper course was to file a regular suit qua-receiver against the mukuridar. *RADHA KISSORE BOSE v. If it is proved that the price obtained for property sold at an execution sale is greatly inadequate, and if it be also proved that there has been a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, the Court will presume that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequacy of price, until proof is given to the contrary. *KALYTARA CHOWDHRAIN v. Execution Proceedings.

- (1) Mesne Profits—Amount awarded in Execution larger than that claimed in Plaint—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 11, para. 2.—The plaintiff brought a suit for possession, and for a certain sum as mesne profits, which he assessed at three times the annual rent paid to the defendant by tenants in actual possession of the land. He obtained a decree for possession, and the decree ordered that the amount of mesne profits due to him should be determined in the execution-proceedings. On an investigation, a larger sum was found to be due to him for mesne profits than that claimed by him in his suit. The plaintiff, therefore, paid the excess fee as provided by para. 2 of s. 11 of Act VII of 1870; but held, the amount of mesne profits recoverable by him must be limited to the amount claimed in the plaint. Execution-sale.

- (1) Material Irregularity—Sale of a Portion of a Tenure—Sale for Arrears of Rent—Mortgage Decree—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 311.—The mere fact that the amount of rent payable in respect of a tenure brought to sale in execution of a decree is not stated in the sale-proclamation, is not a material irregularity within the meaning of s. 311 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877) though, if the amount of rent payable were stated to be more than it actually was, that might constitute such an irregularity as tending to lessen the price at which purchasers might be willing to buy.

Where decrees for arrears of rent had been obtained by fractional shareholders in a tenure, and in execution thereof a moiety of the tenure had been sold, it appeared that the other moiety had been sold at the same time in execution of a mortgage decree against some of the judgment-debtors in the rent-suits, on an objection being taken to the confirmation of such sale on the ground that the whole tenure should have been sold in execution of the rent decrees,—

Held, that all that the decree-holders were entitled to have sold, was the right, title, and interest of their judgment-debtors, and that they were in the position of ordinary creditors having no lien on the tenure; and that, consequently, the mortgagor being entitled to enforce his lien against the moiety covered by his mortgage, the sale of the remaining moiety in satisfaction of the rent-decrees was a good sale, and could not be set aside. —A person cannot be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence under s. 511 of the Penal Code, unless the offence would have been committed if the attempt charged had succeeded.

A prisoner, who was charged with attempting to commit forgery of a valuable security, was found guilty by the jury of attempting to commit forgery. The jury explained their finding by saying that the prisoner had ordered certain receipt forms to be printed similar to those used by the Bengal Coal Company, and that one of these forms had actually been printed and the proof corrected by him; that the prisoner had had an intention of making such addition to the printed form as would make it a false document; and that he did this dishonestly and with intent to commit fraud. The Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to rigorous imprisonment for one year under ss. 465 and 511 of the Penal Code for attempting to commit forgery.

Held, that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside. In the matter of the petition of RIASAT ALI alias BABU MIYA alias BODIUZZUMA, THE EMPRESS v. RIASAT ALI alias BABU MIYA alias BODIUSUMMA, 7 C. 352=4 Shome L.R. 155=5 C.L.R. 572 ...

Fraud.

- (1) Altering a Document—Material Alteration—Bond—Forgery.—A person, who had a bond executed in his favour by one of three brothers, forged the signature of the other two brothers to the bond, and brought a suit upon it in its altered form against the three brothers. The forgery having been established, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as against all the three defendants, and this decision was affirmed on appeal. On second appeal to the High Court,—

Held, that the decision was correct, as a material alteration in a bond is, if fraudulently made, sufficient to render the bond void.

A party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit is bound to preserve it in its original state, and any material alteration of it will vitiate the instrument.

(1) Adoption among Sudras—Execution of Mutual Deeds—Actual giving and taking of Child.—Although it has been held that, in the case of Sudras, no ceremonies except the giving and taking of the child are necessary to an adoption, yet it is not to be taken for granted, that such giving and taking can be completed by the execution of mutual deeds without more; but, semble, that, according to Hindu usage which the Courts should accept as governing the law, the giving and taking in such an adoption ought to take place by the father handing over the child to the adoptive mother, the latter intimating her acceptance of the child in adoption.

In this case it was found on the evidence, that it was not the intention of the parties to complete the adoption by the mere execution of the deeds. *SHOSHINATH GHOSE v. (3) Adoption by Widow—Contingent Reversionary Heir—Collusion—Party to suit to contest Adoption.—Although a suit, to contest an adoption made by a Hindu widow of a son to her deceased husband, may be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, yet it is not the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding to the estate of inheritance held by the widow for her life is competent to bring such a suit. The right to sue must be limited. As a general rule, the suit must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir,—that is to say, by the person who would succeed to the estate if the widow were to die at the time of the suit. But it may be brought by a more distant heir, if those nearer in the line of succession are in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering. The rule laid down in Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vitthal approved. Reference made to Koer Goolab Sing v. Rao Kurun Sing.

If the nearest heir had refused, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or had colluded with the widow, or had concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable heir would be, in respect of his interest, competent to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant heir claimed to sue, a Court would exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether he was or was not competent, in that respect, to sue; and whether it was requisite or not, that any nearer heir should be made a party to the suit.

Hindu Law—1.—Adoption—(Concluded).

In a suit to have an alleged adoption set aside, the plaintiff, a minor, through his guardian, claimed to sue, on the strength of being the adopted son of the husband of a daughter of a brother of the father of the deceased, under whose authority the adoption was alleged to have been made by the widow, the defendant. The Judicial Committee, without deciding that, as an adopted son, this minor had the same rights as a naturally born son, and without deciding that he would have been entitled, in default of nearer relations, to succeed to the estate of inheritance, after the death of the widow, pointed out, that he could only have succeeded as a distant bandhu, and that he had not a vested but at most a contingent interest. And held, that there being, in fact, heirs nearer in the line of succession than this minor, the grounds of his competence to sue in respect of his interest, assuming that interest to exist, should have been made out in the manner above indicated. RANI ANAND KUNWAR v. THE COURT OF WARDS, 6 C. 764 (P.C.)=8 C.L.R. 381=8 I.A. 14=4 Shome L.R. 78=4 Sar. P.C.J. 195=5 Ind. Jur. 161=Rafique and Jackson's P.C. No. 63 ...

- (4) Fraud—Adoptive Son claiming Share in Estates already vested in another before the Date of the Adoption.—Shortly before his death in 1862, A, by his will, gave his widow power to adopt a son. In consequence of fraud on the part of B, the son of a brother of A, in suppressing this will and setting up another, the will was not proved until 1874, when the widow exercised the power. C, the widow of another brother, had died in 1867, and B had succeeded to her estate. The adopted son now sued by his mother to recover a half share in C's estate, alleging that his adoptive mother, in consequence of the fraudulent act of B in suppressing the will under which the power of adoption was given and in setting up a false one, was unable to exercise the power of adoption before the death of C, and that thus he had been deprived of the opportunity of succeeding to C's estate.

Held, that although B had committed fraud in suppressing the will and setting up a false one, and had so placed obstacles in the way of the adoptive mother of the plaintiff taking a son in adoption earlier, yet that, as the plaintiff was not in existence at the time the fraud was committed, such fraud was too remote so far as it affected him, and that the Court as a Court of Equity could not disturb the estate which had already vested in B. The right to succession is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property and cannot under any circumstances remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir not conceived at the time of the owner's death. *NILCOMUL LAHURI v. 2.—Alienation.

- (1) Alienation by Widow—Grounds supporting charge on the Inheritance by a Widow for her Debt.—In transactions such as the alienation by a widow of her estate of inheritance derived from her husband, any creditor, seeking to enforce a charge on such estate, is bound, at least, to show the nature of the transaction, and to show that, in advancing his money, he gave credit, on reasonable grounds, to an assertion that the money was wanted for one of the recognized necessities. The principle is, that the lender, although he is not bound to see to the application of the money, and does not lose his rights, if, upon bona fide inquiry, he has been deceived as to the existence of the necessity which he had reasonable grounds for supposing to exist, still is under an obligation to do certain things. These are to inquire into the necessity for the loan and to satisfy himself, as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the borrower is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. This principle, laid down in Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Mussamat Baboocsee Munraj Koonweree, in regard to the manager for an infant, has been applied also to alienations by a widow of her estate of Under Act IX of 1871, sch ii, cl. 127, the limitation for a suit by a person excluded from joint family property, to enforce a right to share therein was twelve years from the time when the plaintiff claimed and was refused his share. Under Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, cl. 127, the limitation for such a suit is twelve years from the time the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff. Held, that the period of limitation prescribed by the latter Act is shorter than the period prescribed by the former Act, within the meaning of s. 2, Act XV of 1877. *NARAIN KHOOTIA v. Afterwards a suit was brought by another member of the family, who had attained majority prior to the mortgage, to set it and the decree aside, so far as he was concerned, and to recover possession of his share of the joint family property. Held, that the mere circumstance of an antecedent debt was not in itself sufficient to bind him, and that the alienation was not good as against him, unless it could be shown that he had either expressly or impliedly given his consent to the mortgage. *UPOROO TEWARY v. 3.—Debts.

- (1) Mitakshara—Liability of Son to pay Father's Debts.—Under Mitakshara law, according to the rulings of the Judicial Committee, the payment, even in the father's lifetime, of an antecedent debt due by him, is a pious duty on the part of the son, and its discharge is, therefore, such a necessary purpose as to give validity to a sale or mortgage by the father as against his minor sons. Such antecedent debt means a debt antecedent to the transaction,—viz., the sale or mortgage purporting to deal with the property. In a suit upon a mortgage by the father alone, where the sons are made parties, the decree would be good as against the sons, even though they may have been adult when the debt (assuming it was not for immoral purposes) was incurred, and the whole property would be bound, notwithstanding verse 29, Chap. I, sec. 1, and verse 10, Chap. I, sec. 6 of the Mitakshara. In respect of ancestral property the son is equally liable for his father's debts, if not incurred for immoral purposes, as for his own debts. The interest of an adult son, however, could not, ordinarily, be affected by a decree against the father alone. Where, however, an adult son, although neither an executant of the bond on which the suit was brought, nor a party to such suit, yet was shown to be himself liable for a large proportion of the antecedent debt due on the bond, and by his conduct had made it apparent that he approved of and fully acquiesced in the sale of the whole ancestral property, and moreover, that he allowed the mortgagee to take and remain in possession for upwards of eleven years and to go to expense in paying off encumbrances on the estate,—it was, in a suit by the son to recover his share of such ancestral property, held, that he was not entitled to succeed. Under the circumstances the son ought to have been made a party to the suit brought by the mortgagee. The principles laid down by the Privy Council, and in the Full Bench case of Luchmun Dass v. Giridhar Chowdry by the High Court, discussed. LALJEE SAHOY v. FAKHER CHAND, 6 C. 135=7 C.L.R. 97 ... 89

- (2) Mortgage of Ancestral Estate by Father for Family Purposes —Attachment of property in Execution of Decree —Death of Judgment-Debtor prior to Sale.—Where a decree on a mortgage was obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, the debt having been incurred for joint family purposes, and in execution thereof the joint family property was attached, but prior to sale the judgment-debtor died; in a suit subsequently brought by the other members of the joint family, praying for a partition of their shares, and for a declaration that such shares were not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree,—
Held, that there could not be a partition as between a person already dead and his sons, and that the whole of the ancestral property was liable for the mortgage-debt, the only declaration to which the plaintiffs could be entitled being, that they were not liable to pay the debt. *GOBURDHON LALL v.  The author of the Mitakshara, in verse 3, sec. 5, Chap. II, uses the word "sapinda" in the sense of "connection by particles of one body," and not in the sense of "connection by funeral oblations."
 In order to determine whether a person is a "sapinda" of the prepositus, within the meaning of the definition given by the author of the Mitakshara in Achrakanda (chapter treating of rituals), it is necessary to see whether they are related as "sapindas" to each other, either through themselves or through their mothers and fathers. *UMAID BAHADUR v. 7.—Partition.

- (1) Grandchildren—Right of grandmother to share.—In a suit for partition among the members of a joint Hindu family, consisting of the heirs, in different degrees, of five brothers, a decree for partition according to certain proportions was made, subject, so far as the decree affected property derived through the eldest brother, to maintenance for his widow A. Among other parties to the suit were B, the grand-daughter by the eldest son of A, and C, her second son. C died in 1880, leaving a widow D and four infant sons.

A, who was not party to the partition suit, now sued B and D and the infant sons of C for a declaration that she, as such widow and mother, was entitled to a share in the partitioned properties equal to those of her grand-daughter B, and her grandsons, the infant sons of C.

Held, that such a suit would lie, it not being a suit for partition exclusively among grandsons, and that A was entitled to an equal share with her grand-daughter and grandsons in the properties which, under the partition decree, had been allotted to the representatives of her husband, and to a life-interest in the income of the property remaining unpartitioned. SIBBOSOONDERY DABIA v. Act VII of 1876) —Certificate under Act XL of 1858.—B, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died, leaving two minor sons, J and K, and also a widow L and two minor sons by her; the mother of J and K having predeceased him. On J's attaining majority, the Court of Wards, which had taken possession of all the property, withdrew from the management; and L then applied under Act XL of 1858, and obtained a certificate with respect of the shares of K and her two minor sons. Subsequently K having attained majority, his share was excluded from the operation of the certificate. On the death of J, leaving H, his widow, and an infant son by her, H applied for a similar certificate, under Act XL of 1858, with respect to the property of her son, and it appeared that K was incapable of managing the property.

Held, that though the certificate granted to L had been improperly obtained, H was not entitled to one, as, no partition having taken place since B's death, the property was still the joint family property.

Held also, that neither the granting of the certificate to L, nor the registration of the specific shares of each of the co-owners under the provisions of the Land Registration Act, amounted to a partition, such as to justify the Court in granting the certificate asked for. *HOOLASH KOER v. - (3) Trust—Agreement restraining Partition—Right of purchaser of Share—Trust for idol.—By an agreement entered into between five brothers, who formed a joint Hindu family, it was provided, that none of the parties, "nor their representatives, nor any person, should be able to divide the real and personal property belonging to the family into shares; that, while the male descendants of any of the brothers lived, the sons of the daughters of the deceased persons should not be entitled to the real and personal properties, nor to the proceeds thereof; that none of the brothers, nor any of their male descendants, should be able to adopt a son; that during the lifetime of the brothers, or of the one of them who should be the last survivor, their earnings should be regarded as joint property, and that, if any brother or son of a brother separated himself from the family, he should only get Rs. 20,000 as his share." The agreement further provided for the maintenance of widows and infant children, and that the sum of two lakhs of rupees should be taken from the joint khatta for the purpose of carrying on certain businesses. The family dwelling-house had belonged to the mother of the brothers. She made a gift by deed of the house and lands and houses appertaining thereto to an idol, and appointed her sons managers, and directed that they should live in the house, and should not have power to partition or alienate any portion of the properties settled. The deed contained provisions as to the disposition of the profits arising from the lands and houses, viz., to provide accommodation for the families of the managers, and to invest the surplus in the purchase of lands in the name of the idol.

A son of one of the brothers sold his share in the family property. In a suit by the purchaser for partition and an account of the property,—

Held, that the general scheme of the arrangement between the brothers was such as could only be binding upon the actual parties to it, not upon a purchaser from one of the parties, and a fortiori not upon a purchaser from the heir of one of the parties.

The object of the arrangement was to settle the family property upon trust for the maintenance of the members of the family born and to be born. This could not be done by a gift, and what cannot be done by a gift cannot be done by the intervention of a trust.

The owner of property cannot by mere contract during his life prevent his heirs from partitioning property after his death, and such a prohibition is not binding upon an assignee of the heir.

Held also, that there was a good gift of the family dwelling-house to the idol, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share therein. RAJENDER DUTT v. SHAM CHUND MITTER, 6 C. 106 ...

Unless such suits could be brought, it might be impossible, if the widow lived to a great age, to bring evidence after her death to prove that there was no legal necessity for the alienations. Nor would it be possible to prevent the widow from committing irremediable mischief to the estate. CHOTTO MISSER v. JEMAH MISSER, 6 C. 198=6 C.L.R. 588=3 Shome L.R. 153

- (1) Adoption—Failure by Widow to adopt—Inheritance, Widow's Right to.—A husband's express authorization, or even direction, to adopt, does not constitute a legal duty on the part of the widow to do so, and for all legal purposes it is absolutely non-existent till it is acted upon.

A widow's refusal to comply with such a direction is no ground of forfeiture as regards her rights of inheritance.

When a Hindu, by his will, gave his widow authority to adopt, if necessary, from one to three dattaka sons, and she, having neglected to do so, brought a suit to recover possession of her husband's property and for an account of the administration, against the administrator of the estate, after having ineffectually attempted to get the letters of administration recalled and fresh letters granted her as heiress of her husband,—

- (2) Construction of Will—Restriction of Gift to Male Descendants void—How such a Gift should be construed.—A gift by will upon condition that the subject-matter should descend to heirs male only, is void by Hindu law.

By his will a Hindu testator made a gift of certain immoveable property to his nephews and their descendants in the male line with a condition that, "if any of them die childless, then his share shall devolve on the survivors of my nephews and their male descendants, and not on their other heirs."

Held, that the gift was bad in so far as it restricted the subject-matter of the gift to male descendants, but that the language used relating to the gift over to the testator's surviving nephew or nephews, was not inconsistent with the intention of the testator that the whole augmented share should pass to the plaintiff, the sole surviving nephew; but that, having regard to the doctrine frequently acted upon by the Courts of India, he was only entitled to a life-estate therein. *SHOSHI SHIKHURESSUR ROY v. - (3) Construction of—Use of Words "putra poutradi krame"—Condition subsequent—In a will, the words "putra poutradi krame," recognized as apt for conveying an estate of inheritance, do not limit the succession to male descendants, and will include female heirs of a female, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs.

The will of a Hindu, who died leaving only a widow, a daughter's daughter, and a brother, directed as follows:—

"7. If no daughter or daughter's son of mine should be living at the time of the death of my wife, then my grand-daughter (daughter's daughter) shall become the proprietress of my property and shall remain in undisputed possession thereof, 'putra poutradi krame.'"

"8. If the death of my wife should take place before my daughter's daughter arrives at majority and bears a son, then the whole of the estate shall remain in charge of the Court of Wards until she arrives at majority and bears a son.

"9. If my daughter's daughter should be barren or a sonless widow, or if she should be otherwise disqualified, she shall not become entitled to my property, but shall receive an allowance of Rs. 300 per mensem for her life.

"20. If no son or daughter should be born to me, and if my daughter's daughter should die before she bears a son, or if she should be barren or become a sonless widow, or be otherwise disqualified, then the whole of my properties shall pass into the hands of the Government."

The will further directed the use of the money by the Government in that event, for certain charitable purposes.

In an administration-suit brought by the Secretary of State in Council against the testator's brother, wife, and grand-daughter, for the carrying out of the trusts of the will,--

Held, that clause 7, if it stood alone, would confer an absolute estate on the daughter's daughter on the death of the widow;

That the disqualification in clause 9 must come into operation, if at all, at or before the death of the widow; and that it was unnecessary to decide whether, if they had been conditions subsequent, they would or would not have been in violation of Hindu law;

That clause 20 was supplementary to clause 9, and that by it the gift over to the Government was to take effect, if at all, immediately upon the widow's death, in the event of the grand-daughter dying before her without having borne a son, or in the event of the grand-daughter being disqualified at the date of such death.

One possible event not having been provided for by the will, viz., that of the grand-daughter predeceasing the widow, having borne a son, their Lordships did not decide what would happen on the occurrence of that event. The rights of a son yet unborn would not, in the case supposed, be affected by any judgment in these proceedings. RAMLAL MOOKERJEE v. - (4) Estate Tail—Accumulation.—A Hindu, by his will, directed that his estate should remain intact, and that the profits should be applied, in the first place, towards performing religious duties; and he provided that his immoveable property, business, and the capital stock thereof should also remain intact, and that his heirs, sons' sons, and great grandsons in succession, should be entitled to the profits, no person having any right of alienation. The testator then provided that his eldest son should act as manager and shevait, and prepare accounts; and that he should have no power of alienation. He then made provisions for the payment of Government revenue, and declared that, of the surplus profits, six-sixteenths should be applied, in part, towards the worship of his ancestral deities, and the residue towards the maintenance of all the members of the family and religious ceremonies; the remaining ten-sixteenths to be carried to the credit of his estate. In case of dispute between his eldest son and the testator's third wife, the mother of the testator's minor children, the testator directed that his eldest son should receive five-sixteenths of the ten annas share; if another son should be born of the testator's third wife, the remaining eleven-sixteenths was to go to her sons. If no son was born, then the eldest son was to take five and-a-half-sixteenths, and the sons of the third wife the remaining ten and a-half-sixteenths, absolutely, as long as the family remained joint; the expenses of the debsheva and maintenance of the family were to be defrayed from the six annas share. In case of separation, the shares of the sons were to be placed to their respective credits every year, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share.

The testator then provided that, in case of separation, his sons (with the exception of the landed properties and capital stock of the business, and the articles used by the idols) should be at liberty to take the moveable property absolutely, according to the conditions laid down for the division of the ten annas share of the profits. He then provided for the maintenance of his third wife and minor sons out of the six annas share, each son on attaining majority to be entitled to his share under the will absolutely. After providing that his sons should live in his ancestral dwelling-house, but that none of them should have any power of alienation, the testator directed that, if any of his heirs died without male issue, the widow of such heir should receive maintenance only, and that his grandson by a daughter should get nothing, but his share should go over to the surviving sons. The testator finally directed that his eldest son, sons' grandsons, and other heirs in succession, should perform the duties of kurta and shevait.

In a suit by the widow of one of the testator's sons by his third wife, seeking to recover such a share of the testator's property as she would have been entitled to in case of intestacy,—

Held, that the intention of the testator, in disposing of the profits of the six annas share, was not an intention to create a valid estate in the corpus in favour of any individual, but to tie up such corpus and to give the profits only to his male descendants; or, in other words, to create a sort of estate in tail male in the profits, and the bequest was void.

Held, also, that the disposition of the ten annas share of the profits was void, there being in one event a direction to accumulate for ever without a disposition of the profits; and in the other event, the gift was void for the same reasons as the gift of the six annas share.

Held, further, that the disposition of the family dwelling house, save in so far as it prohibited alienation, was good, and that there was a sufficient disposition of the moveable property. SHOOKMOY CHUNDER DASS v. MONOHARI DASSI, 7 C. 269=8 C.L.R. 473 ...

Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21).

- (1) S. 23—Reputed Ownership—Possession, Order, or Disposition—Consent of True Owner—Partner out of Jurisdiction—Mortgage of Chattels—Priority. In 1878, the members of the firm of A and Co. mortgaged the live and dead stock, chattels, and effects belonging to the firm to B, the mortgage deed containing a clause to the effect that as long as there was anything due on the mortgage, the mortgaged property should be treated and considered as the property, and in the order and disposition, of the mortgagee. A and Co. subsequently obtained further advances from B: at this time A was residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and the instruments creating the further charges were signed by his attorney. C and D, the two members of the firm residing in Calcutta, remained in possession of the mortgaged property up to the 10th May, 1880, when they became insolvent, and their property was vested in the Official Assignee, who entered into possession. On the 12th May the mortgagee also entered into possession. On the 26th June, A, the remaining partner of the firm, returned to Calcutta and filed his petition of insolvency.

Upon a petition by the mortgagee claiming to be paid his mortgage-money in priority to the other creditors of the firm,—

Held, that the goods and chattels of the firm which were covered by the mortgage and further charges did not vest in the Official Assignee upon the insolvency of C and D. In the matter of MORGAN, E. S. GUBBOY v. A. B. MILLER, 6 C. 633=7 C.L.R. 29=9 C.L.R. 385 ...

- (3) S. 51—Deferring Personal Discharge.—The words in s. 51 of the Insolvent Act relating to debts contracted—"without having any reasonable or probable expectation at the time when contracted of paying them"—are pointed, not at the case of a man who incurs a debt knowing that he cannot pay his debts generally, but at that of a man who incurs a debt knowing that he cannot re-pay that debt. The words in the same section—"if it shall appear that the insolvent's whole debts so greatly exceeded his means of providing for the payment thereof during the time when the same were in course of being contracted, reference being had to his actual and expected property as to show gross misconduct in contracting the same,"—apply not to this or that debt, or class of debts, but to all the debts, contracted for some years past. And under the circumstances of the case afford ground not for excepting any specified debt under s. 51, but for deferring the discharge under s. 47.

The insolvents carried on business as bankers and commission agents, receiving the money of their constituents, on deposit, for investment or for remittance, charging a commission on each transaction, and allowing 4 per cent. interest on deposits. An opposing creditor, one of their constituents, sent them in April, 1880 a letter instructing them to invest Rs. 40,000 in Municipal debentures. The insolvents failed in November, and it was found on the evidence that they could not have procured the desired quantity of Municipal debentures without paying more than the market-price for them. They purchased Rs. 18,000 worth of such debentures, and were debtors to the opposing creditor for the balance. Held, that the money was in their hands as bankers and not as agents; and this being

- (1) Act VI of 1871, s. 18—Sale in Execution of Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 285.—A, who had obtained a decree in the Court of the Second Munsif of B, in September 1877, attached certain property within the jurisdiction which had been assigned to the Munsif by the District Judge, under s. 18 of Act VI of 1871. In the previous month, C, who had obtained a decree in the Court of the Additional Munsif of B (to whom jurisdiction had similarly been assigned), had attached the same property. The sale in execution of A's decree took place first, and A became the purchaser. A then objected in the Court of the Additional Munsif that the property could not again be sold; but his objection was overruled, and two days subsequently, the property was again put up for sale in execution of C's decree, and he became the purchaser. A brought various suits against the tenants for arrears of rent, in which C intervened.

Held, that the jurisdictions of the Munsifs were confined to the particular limits assigned to them, and that, as the property was situate within the limits assigned to the Second Munsif, the Additional Munsif had no jurisdiction to attach or sell it, and that the attachment by C was made improperly and without jurisdiction.

- (2) Property situated in different Districts—Pleading Multifariousness—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 28, 31—Parties—One Member of Joint Hindu Family contracting alone—Undisclosed Principal—Splitting Cause of Action.—A, B, C, and D were the proprietors of a 2a. 13g. share in mouza E, and also of a 2a. 13g. share in a mouza F, both in the district of Bhagalpore. On the 19th September 1872, A mortgaged a 1a. 4p. share of E to H. On the 20th September 1872, A, B, C, and D mortgaged their shares in E and F, together with property in the district of Tirhoot, to the plaintiff. On the 24th March 1873, A mortgaged his share in E and F to J. On the 13th November 1874, A and B mortgaged their shares in E to K.

On the 25th March 1874, J obtained a decree on his mortgage, and interest of A and B were purchased on the 5th January 1875 by L.

On the 17th April 1874, M, to whom the first mortgage had been assigned, obtained a decree and attached the property mortgaged. L objected that he had already purchased the interests of A, and on the objection, being allowed, M instituted a suit against L for a declaration of priority, and obtained a decree on the 9th August 1876. In execution of this decree the property first mortgaged was sold on the 4th March 1878, and after satisfying the mortgage, a surplus of Rs. 7,664 remained. After the institution of the first suit, and before L's purchase the plaintiff instituted a suit upon his mortgage in the Tirhoot Court without having obtained leave to include that portion of the mortgaged property situate in the Bhagalpore district. On the 17th July 1874, a decree was made in this suit. On the 17th January 1877, K obtained a decree on his mortgage, and the shares of A and B in E were sold, and purchased on the 3rd September 1877 by N. The plaintiff had his decree transferred for execution to the Bhagalpore Court, and he attached the surplus sale-proceeds 1a 9g. share in E. The attachment was withdrawn on the objection of L, who drew out the surplus sale-proceeds. The share purchased by N was also released from attachment.

The plaintiff now sued L, N, and the mortgagors for a declaration that his decree of the 17th July 1874 affected the E property, to recover the surplus sale-proceeds from L, and in case the decree should not be valid to the extent mentioned, for a decree declaring his prior lien on the property in E.

It was contended for the defendants that the Tirhoot Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the Bhagalpore property; that the suit was bad for multifariousness; that certain persons, co-sharers with the plaintiff, should have been made parties; and that the cause of action had been split.

Held, that the Tirhoot Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the Bhagalpore property;

that the suit was not bad by reason of multifariousness; and that it was not necessary to make the plaintiff's co-sharers parties, as he might be regarded as contracting on behalf of himself and the other members of the family as undisclosed principals.

Held also, that the cause of action had been split. BUNGSEE SING v. SOODIST LALL, 7 C. 739=10 C.L.R. 263 ...

- (3) Right of Way—How far finding of Magistrate thereon binding on Civil Court—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), ss. 521, 523, 530—Estoppel.
—A Civil Court is not competent to set aside the order of a Magistrate made under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that such order was made without jurisdiction, because the land in respect of which the order was made is private property, and not a thoroughfare or public place. A Civil Court can, however, irrespective of an order made under s. 521 by a Magistrate, to try the question, whether the land which formed the subject of such order is private property, and not a thoroughfare or public place, as between the parties to such suit and those who claim under them.

Per Field, J.—A person who, on receipt of an order made by a Magistrate under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, declaring the existence of a right of way over such person's lands, demands, under s. 523 of the same Code, the appointment of a jury to try whether such order was reasonable, is not by such action estopped from afterwards bringing a suit in a Civil Court, seeking to establish his right to the exclusive enjoyment of the same lands. *MUTTY RAM SAHOO v. - (4) Valuation of Suit—Exclusion of Time of Proceeding in another Court—Parties—Adding Defendants—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 14 and 22.
A suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who, after seven months, returned the plaint to be filed in the Munsif's Court, on the ground that the suit had been overvalued. There was nothing to show want of bona fides in the plaintiff's instituting the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Held, that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, the time during which the plaint was on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court must be deducted.

A suit for property in the possession of several persons was brought by the plaintiff against one of those persons only. After the institution of the suit, and after the period of limitation prescribed for a separate suit on the same cause of action against the other persons in possession had elapsed, these latter were added as defendants.

Held, that the suit must be dismissed as against the added defendants, on the ground that it was barred by limitation. OBHOY CHURN NUNDI v. KRITARTHAMOYI DOSSEE, 7 C. 284 ...

The word 'may' in s. 265 of the Contract Act has a somewhat similar force to the words 'it shall be lawful' in a Statute which merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. And the words 'may apply' in the section create a new jurisdiction, which must be exercised strictly in accordance with the Statute which creates it,—that is to say, the jurisdiction created by the section must be exercised exclusively by a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge, within the local limit of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm which it is sought to wind up is situated.

It was the intention of the Legislature, in enacting s. 265 of the Contract Act, to create a new jurisdiction to be exercised exclusively by the Court of the District Judge; and in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the members of a partnership, or their representatives, cannot obtain the relief mentioned in the section except by resorting to that Court.

The presumption that the existing jurisdiction of a Court is not intended to be taken away unless express words have been used for that purpose, usually applies only to the jurisdiction of the superior Courts.

Unless the jurisdiction of a Superior Court is expressly and clearly taken away, such jurisdiction will be presumed to continue. PROSAD DOSS MULLICK v. RUSSICK LALL MULLICK and PROSAD DOSS MULLICK v. KEDAR NATH MULLICK, 7 C. 157=8 C.L.R. 329 ...

Act IV of 1876*, ss. 75, 77, 78, 79, 346 and 351—High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875), s. 147.—A, alleged to have carried on business in Calcutta without having taken out a license under Beng. Act IV of 1876, was summoned at the instance of the Corporation by B, a servant of the Corporation and also a Justice of the Peace. The case was subsequently heard by B, and it was shown that notice of the assessment under clause ii, sch. 3, had been duly served on A, and that, though he then denied his liability to take out any license, and stated that he carried on no business as alleged, he had not appealed against the assessment under s. 79. It was further shown that the assessment had been confirmed by the Chairman of the Corporation, but that the amount had not been paid. A thereupon tendered evidence to show that he was not liable to take out any license; but B refused to hear such evidence, and convicting A, sentenced him to pay a fine. On an application, under the above circumstances, to the High Court under s. 147, Act X of 1875,—

Held, that the finality of the decision of the Chairman referred to in s. 79 has only reference to the class under which a particular person, who is admittedly bound to take out a license under s. 75, should be assessed, and not to the case where the liability to take out a license at all is denied, this being a question which can only be determined judicially after taking evidence by a competent Court in a prosecution under s. 77, and that, therefore, the refusal of B to hear the evidence tendered by A on this point was illegal.

Held also, that the proceedings and ultimate conviction of A were illegal, inasmuch as B being a servant of the prosecutor, i.e., the Corporation, had such an interest as might give him a bias in the matter, and that consequently he ought not to have sat as Justice of the Peace either at the granting or upon the hearing of the summons. *WOOD v. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, gave the defendant credit for the payments so admitted.

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong; that the defendant having pleaded payment was bound to prove that the admitted payments were in respect of that portion of the year 1283 for which the arrears were claimed.

When an application for a review of judgment is made upon several grounds, one of which refers only to the question of adjudication of costs, and the Court to whom the application is made holds all the other grounds to be untenable, but is of opinion that there has been a clerical mistake in that part of its order or judgment which refers to costs, it may reject the application absolutely and permit the applicant to apply, under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, for a rectification of the clerical mistake; but if it does not do so, but, on the application for a review of judgment, amends the clerical mistake in its original order, the decree drawn up in conformity to this order becomes the final decree, and an appeal will lie against it if brought within the time prescribed for bringing an appeal against any other similar decree. *JOYKISHEN MOOKERJEE v. (Prinsep, J., dissenting).—The words “from the date of such judgment,” in s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, should be read as if they were “from the date when the rent is adjudged to be payable.”

Per PRINSEP, J.—The “date of such judgment,” in s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, means the date on which the judgment was delivered.

Where the terms of an Act are clear and plain, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to it as it stands. GUREEBULLAH SIKRAR v. MOHUN LALL SHAHA 7 C. 127 = 8 C.L.R. 409 ...

- (3) Possession—Onus of Proof—Alluvion—Dispossession—Acts of Ownership.—In a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, alluvial lands, which had been diluviated more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs proved their title and possession up to the time of diluviation, and alleged that the lands had re-formed within twelve years, without alleging or proving possession during that period. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged, that the re-formation had taken place more than twelve years before suit, and that they had acquired a title to the lands by adverse possession for that period.

Held, that in such a case the submergence of the lands after diluvion ought to be presumed until the contrary was shown, and that the onus of proving re-formation before twelve years and adverse possession was shifted to the defendants.

Per WILSON, J.—As a general rule, where a plaintiff claims land from which he alleges he has been dispossessed, the burden is upon him to show possession and dispossession within twelve years.

Proof of possession within twelve years does not necessarily mean proof of acts of ownership within that time. The nature of the proof of possession must depend on the nature of the case

There are many cases in which the party on whom the burden of proof in the first instance lies, may shift the burden to the other side by proving facts giving rise to a presumption in his favour.

In the case of lands gradually diluviated and gradually re-formed, if the diluviation has been more than twelve years before suit, the claimant, unless he can show possession since the re-formation, must at least show that he was in possession down to the date of the diluviation.

Where the true owner is in possession at the time of diluviation, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the land continues submerged: probably also afterwards, until he is dispossessed.

Per FIELD, J.—Although, according to the general rule, it lies upon the plaintiff, who is met with a plea of limitation, to show his own possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit, when the property in dispute is capable of actual and visible possession, yet, in the case of property which is not susceptible of actual and visible possession, an exception from the nature of the thing must be made to the general rule. In such cases, when the title and possession have been proved to be in a certain person up to a certain point of time,—when there has been no transfer of the title to any third person,—and there is no evidence that possession was exercised by a person other than the person having the title, so long as actual visible possession was possible, the possession of the person having the title will be presumed to continue until the property has again become susceptible of actual visible possession. Proof of possession is presumptive proof of ownership, because men generally own the property, which they possess. And if the ownership of property is proved, and there is nothing to show that the possession of such property is with any person other than the owner, it may fairly be presumed to be with the owner. Such a presumption then takes the place of evidence to show the plaintiff's possession, within twelve years before suit, of a property in which, from the nature of the thing, evidence of actual possession is impossible. *MANO MOHUN GHOSE v. (7) Suit to recover Possession of Land taken by Municipal Commissioners—Beng. Act III of 1864, s. 87.—Section 87 of Beng. Act III of 1864 is applicable only in those cases where the plaintiff claims damages or compensation for some wrongful act committed by the Commissioners or their officers, in the exercise, or honestly supposed exercise, of their statutory powers.

The notice in the earlier part of the section is meant to give the defendant an opportunity of making some pecuniary amends for the wrong without incurring the cost of litigation. CHUNDER SEKUR BHUNDOPADHYA v. OBHOY CHURN BAGCHI, 6 C. 8 (F.B.) ...

(8) Suit to recover possession—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 47.—In a dispute between A and B concerning the possession of a certain taluq, the Criminal Court made an order under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure retaining B in possession; and this order was, in a proceeding under ss. 295, 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, confirmed by the Court of Session. Held, that a suit by A for the recovery of the land must be brought within three years from the date of the Magistrate's order, and not from the date of the order passed by the Court of Session.

Article 47 of sch. ii, Act XV of 1877, refers to immovable as well as moveable property. KANGALI CHURN SHA v. ZOMURRUOONNISSA KHATOON, 6 C. 709 = 8 C.L.R. 154 ...

(1) S. 20—Acknowledgment—Repeal of Act—Revival of Right to sue—Authorized Agent—Signature. Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 4.—The law of limitation governing a suit for a debt, is that law which is in force at the date of its institution.

Limitation Act (IX of 1871)—(Concluded).

As far as regards debts, the Indian laws of limitation merely bar the remedy, but do not extinguish the right.

Acknowledgments which under Act XIV of 1859 were insufficient to keep alive a cause of action, because they were signed only by an agent, held to be sufficient to sustain a suit on the same cause of action under Act IX of 1871.

Where a series of acknowledgments of a debt have been made, each within three years of the one next preceding, and the first of the series has been made within three years of the date on which the debt was contracted, a suit for the recovery thereof is, under Act IX of 1871, in time, if instituted within three years from the date of the last acknowledgment.

Discussion as to who is an authorized agent, what is a sufficient signature, and what amounts to a sufficient acknowledgment, within the meaning of s. 20, Act IX of 1871.

Under s. 20 of Act IX of 1871, the authorized agent may sign either his own name or that of his principal. MOHESH LAL v. BUSUNT KUMAREE, 6 C. 340=7 C.L.R. 121 ...

Held, that the provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to such cases, and that, consequently, the suit was not barred. KHOSHELAL MAHTON v. GUNESH DUTT alias NANHOO SINGH, 7 C. 690 ...

(4) S. 7—Minor's Right to sue.—A suit by a guardian on behalf of a minor is that of the minor, and is governed by the law of limitation applicable to the minor. So, where a minor had been dispossessed of his share in certain property, which had been sold in execution of a decree, and where an application under s. 268 of Act VIII of 1859 to obtain possession of the share was made by the then guardian of the minor, and disallowed, and subsequently, but beyond the period of one year from the date of the application, a suit was brought to obtain possession by another guardian of the infant, who had been duly appointed,—

- Held*, that such suit was not barred by limitation, the right to sue being that of the minor, and that it might be exercised by any one duly appointed on his behalf during his minority, or by the infant himself, within the time limited by s. 7 of Act XV of 1877, after attaining his majority. *KHODABUX v. - (6) S. 14—Exclusion of Time.—The defendants cut down and carried away some trees which had been growing on the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff's manager brought a suit in his own name against the defendants for the value of the trees so cut and carried away. This suit was dismissed, on the ground that the manager had no cause of action against the defendants. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendants for the value of the same trees, he contended that the time occupied in the former suit ought to be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the second suit.
- Held*, that the provisions of Act XV of 1877, s. 14, did not apply, and that the time could not be excluded, as the reason why the previous suit was dismissed was, because it was brought in the name of the wrong person, not from defect of jurisdiction, or from any cause of a like nature. *RAJENDRO KISHORE SINGH v. (28) Application to revive a case and restore it to the Board.—After a decree had been made in a suit, the case was, in 1875, struck out of the board for want of prosecution. No steps were taken to have it restored. In 1879 both the plaintiff and defendant died. In the same year the heirs of the plaintiff instituted a suit against the administrator of the defendant for the purpose of having the decree in the original suit carried out. This suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the Appellate Court, holding that the original suit was subsisting and might be reconstituted, directed that the plaintiffs should be allowed to amend their plaint by putting it into the form of a petition under s. 372 of the Code. On a petition by the plaintiffs praying that the original suit might be revived and restored to the board,—

Held, that the application was not barred under art. 178 of sch. ii to the Limitation Act of 1877.

Even if art. 178 was applicable, the application would not be barred, limitation running from the time when the suit was allowed to be reconstituted.

The legislature did not intend to include in the Limitation Act every application to a Court with reference to its own list of causes, such as applications to transfer a case from one board to another, to transfer a case to the bottom of the board, change of attorneys, and so forth. *GOVIND CHUNDER GOSWAMI v. (29) Sch. II, art. 179—Execution of Joint Decree against two or more Defendants.—In a suit for possession of land brought by A against B, C, and D, a decree was passed on the 14th of April 1874 for possession and costs against B, C, and D jointly. This decree was afterwards reversed on an appeal by B, who alone claimed the property. A then preferred a special appeal to the High Court; and on the 29th June 1877, the decision of the Judge was reversed, and the decree of the Court of first instance restored.

On the 30th December 1878, A applied to the Court of first instance for execution to issue against C and D for the costs specified in the decree passed on the 14th April, 1874. C and D successfully objected in the Court of first instance and the Lower Appellate Court that more than three years having elapsed since the date of the decree, the decree for costs could not be executed, the application for execution being barred by art. 179 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that, inasmuch as B's appeal had related to the whole case, and the decree obtained by him dismissing the suit would, if not reversed, have deprived A of his right to any costs at all, A, upon succeeding in getting the original decree restored upon special appeal to the High Court, was entitled to execute such restored decree at any time within three years of the order of the High Court. *MULLICK AHMED ZUMMA alias TETUR v. Held also, that future maintenance should have been given only during the continuance of the marriage, and not during the term of the plaintiff's natural life. ABDOL FUTTEH MOULVIE v. ZABUNNESSA KHATUN, 6 C. 631=8 C.L.R. 242 ...

To constitute a valid waqf, there must be a dedication of the property solely to the worship of God or to religious or charitable purposes.

Semble.—Appropriations in the nature of a settlement of property on a man and his descendants can only be treated as legitimate appropriations under the designation of waqf, where the term sadukah is used.

Even supposing they could be so treated, it would be necessary, in order to validate a waqf by making a settlement of property on himself or his descendants, for a man to reduce himself to a state of absolute poverty. MAHOMED HAMIDULLA KHAN v. LOTFUL HUQ, 6 C. 744=8 C.L.R. 164 =4 Shome L.R. 47 ...

Manager of Defendant.—When liberty is given to a decree-holder to bid at the sale of the judgment-debtor's property, he is bound to exercise the most scrupulous fairness in purchasing that property, and if he or his agent dissuades others from purchasing at the sale, that of itself is a sufficient ground why the purchase should be set aside.

Where a decree-holder was joint in family with the manager of an infant defendant, and the defendant's property was to be sold in execution of the decree,—

Held, that the decree-holder ought not to be granted leave to purchase at the sale, because any purchase made by him would be for the benefit of the family of which the manager of the infant defendant was one of the members; and it would in fact be a purchase by an agent of the property of his principal. *WOOPENDRO NATH SIRCAR v. In 1869, one of the parties to that litigation obtained a decree for money against the zur-i-peshgidars; and in 1874, in execution of this decree all the right, title, and interest of the representatives of the latter, in the lease of 1851, was sold to a third party.

Held (reversing the decision of the High Court), that the right to the mesne profits awarded by the decree of 1860 did not pass by the sale, but remained in the representatives. *GANESH LAL TEWARI v. Money.

Paid under Compulsion—A mortgagee of two separate properties became by purchase the owner of the equity of redemption of one of them, and of this property the value was so proportioned to his payments that the mortgage-debt was in effect satisfied. This mortgagee, however, obtained a decree and order in execution for the sale of the other property, on which his mortgage was the second. Of the latter property, the plaintiffs, who also represented the first mortgagee, had become purchasers, and they filed objections to the sale. These were disallowed, and they thereupon paid into Court money sufficient to satisfy the decree in order to prevent the sale.

Held, that this was not a voluntary payment, nor a payment of money equitably due; but one made under compulsion of law, i.e., under pressure of the execution-proceedings. And held, that this might be recovered in a suit for a money-decree, the remedy not being confined to the execution-proceedings. DULICHAND v. RAMKISHEN SINGH, 7 C. 648 (P.C.) = 8 I.A. 93 = 4 Sar. Held, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's previous money-decree, he was still entitled to enforce his lien against the property pledged. RAJKISHORE SHAHA v. BHADOO NOSHOO, 7 C. 78 ...

2.—Foreclosure.

(1) Sale or Foreclosure—Limitation—Adverse Possession.—In 1823 the trustees of a mortgage settlement invested the trust-funds in the mortgage of a house and premises at Entally in the neighbourhood of Calcutta. The mortgagor was the first tenant-for-life under the settlement, and it was agreed that he should be entitled to remain in the house as long as he pleased, the rent of the premises being set-off against the income of the trust-funds to which he was entitled under the settlement. In execution of a money-decree against the mortgagor, his right, title, and interest in the premises were purchased by the judgment-creditor, a lady who, at the time of execution and sale, lived in the mortgagor's house. After the purchase, all parties continued to live in the house as before. The mortgagor died on the 14th of August 1867, and on the 13th of August 1879, the present suit for sale or foreclosure was instituted by the plaintiff, in whom the legal and beneficial interest in the trust fund had become vested.

Held, that the position of the judgment-creditor under the sale of 1866 was not adverse to the plaintiff or those under whom he claimed; that the suit was not barred by limitation; and that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for sale.

A subsequently leased in zurpeshgi part of the property to C. B obtained a sale-decree against A on his mortgage, and at the sale himself became the purchaser of the property. He then brought a suit against C to set aside the zurpeshgi lease, and to obtain khas possession. Held, that the covenant in the mortgage-bond merely created a personal liability between A and B, and that the sale under B's mortgage decree did not put an end to the zurpeshgi lease or affect the interests of the zurpeshgidar; that B's suit against C was wrong in form; and that his proper course was to sue to have his right declared to sell the property in satisfaction of his mortgage-debt, so as to give the zurpeshgidar an opportunity of redeeming. Mortgagor and Mortgagee.
Mortgage-Bond—Money-Decree—Mortgage-Decree—Lien—Sale in Execution—Purchaser. —Where a mortgagee obtains a decree against his mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy his debt, he cannot sell that property reserving his own rights over it, because it is for the very purpose of satisfying those rights that the sale is made. And if, instead of obtaining a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee obtains only a simple money-decree and sells the mortgaged property under it, he is precisely in the same position as far as his own interest is concerned. In either case, the purchaser at the execution-sale takes the property sold freed from the mortgagee's lien.

But, where the mortgagee puts up the mortgaged property for sale at a time when the mortgagor has no longer any interest in the property, then nothing passes by the sale, and the execution-purchaser does not get any benefit from the fact that, previously to the sale, the mortgagee had a lien on the property. *RAMANATH DASS v. Mukhtarnama.

Pardanishin Woman—Extent of Liability—Account stated—Explanation of Document.—In order to charge a pardanishin woman upon an instrument or power purporting to have been executed by her, it is requisite that the person relying on such a document should give satisfactory evidence that it has been explained to, and understood by, her.

A mukhtarnama executed by a pardanishin woman appointed her husband to be her general mukhtar, and declared that "all acts done by the said mukhtar, such as giving and taking loans to and from others, executing on my behalf, getting executed in my favour, deed of absolute sale," and so on, "shall be accepted by me."

It was sought to render the principal liable, on an account stated by her husband as her mukhtar so empowered, for a debt, without proof that the money constituting it had been borrowed on her account.

Held, on the construction of the mukhtarnama, that the mukhtar had no authority to bind her by such a statement of account, whatever authority he might have had to bind her by an actual borrowing of money on her behalf.

No implication of authority in the mukhtar to bind the woman by his stated account had arisen from the carrying on of a course of business. Accordingly, when the evidence of express authority failed, the statement of account by the mukhtar was insufficient to render the principal liable.

No evidence was given of the items lent, so as to establish an indebtedness independently of the account stated. SUDISHT LAL v. MUSSAMUT SHEOBARAT KOER, 7 C. 245=8 I.A. 39 (P.C.)=4 Sar. P.C J. 222=5 Ind. Jur. 270 ...

Mutual Benefit Society.

Power of Majority to alter Rules—Payment of Pensions in England—Adjustment of Payments in accordance with Rate of Exchange—Interest of Subscriber to Society.—The U.S.F.P. Fund, a Society established as stated in rule 2 of the Rules of the Society "to provide for the maintenance of the widows and children of those who shall subscribe to it upon the terms and conditions specified below, or upon such others as may be determined upon by the subscribers or by a majority of them," had, prior to 1850, passed a rule (33) that "widows, being incumbents on the Fund, shall be paid their pensions at any place they may desire, subject to the usual charges of remittance; the pensions of children, being incumbents on the Fund, shall also be so paid, and on the same condition." The subscriptions were then, and continued to be, paid in rupees, and the pensions were calculated in rupees according to certain tables. On being admitted, a subscriber had to "promise and engage to submit to, and abide by, the rules and bye-laws of the Institution" (rule 22) and by rule 27 had to pay "a fee equal to ten per cent. on the amount of monthly pension insured." Rule 60 gave power to alter any existing rule by the duly recorded votes of a majority of the subscribers. In 1850, exchange between India and England being then about par, rule 33 was repealed, and a new rule (41) was substituted for it, which provided that "incumbents on the Fund shall be paid their annuities in India at par, or in Europe at the fixed rate of two shillings in the rupee." On the first July 1876, exchange being adverse on remittances from India to England, a rule was passed, which provided that "incumbents on the Fund shall be paid their annuities in India in full, and those residing in Europe at the rate of exchange fixed for the official year by the Secretary of State; annuities already due or hereafter becoming due on risks accepted before the 1st July 1876, shall be payable to incumbents residing in Europe at the fixed rate of two shillings to the rupee." Exchange continuing to decline, on the 22nd May 1880, the Society, by the votes of 553 against 505 of the subscribers, passed the following rule:—"Annuities already due, or becoming due before the 1st May 1880, on risks accepted before the 1st July 1876, shall be payable to incumbents residing in Europe at the fixed rate of two shillings to the rupee: but all other annuities due, or becoming due, shall be paid, if to incumbents in India, in full, and if to incumbents residing in Europe, in London, at the market rate of exchange."

The plaintiffs were the widow and children of F, a member of the society, who was admitted as a subscriber for the benefit of his widow in November 1871, for the benefit of his son in September 1873, and for the benefit of his daughter in November 1874. He commenced to pay an increased subscription for the benefit of his son in September 1878. He was not one of the majority who voted in favour of the rule of the 22nd May 1880, though he attended the meeting of subscribers. He died on the 25th June 1880, having, up to that time, duly paid his subscription to the Fund. In a suit in which the plaintiffs, who were residing in England, claimed to be paid their pensions there at the rate of two shillings in the rupee,—

Held, that F had no vested interest at the time of the passing of the rule of the 22nd May 1880; that the plaintiffs were, with respect to their pensions, bound by the terms of that rule, which a majority of the subscribers had full powers to pass so as to affect the nominees of all existing subscribers, and therefore the suit should be dismissed.

Rule 41 gave an undue advantage to one class of subscribers, which was extra vires, and open to correction under rule 60 by a majority of the subscribers. The Society being one for the equal benefit of all subscribers, even if rule 60 did not give power to adjust payments in accordance with the rate of exchange, such a power might be implied for the purpose of continuing the business of the Association. *FALLE v. (1) Adding Plaintiffs in Actions of Contract—Non-joinder—Joinder of Plaintiffs after time for bringing Suit has expired, Effect of—Co-Contractors—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 20 and 22—"Prescribed Period"—Procedure—Suit by Members of Joint Hindu Family carrying on Trade in Partnership.—Two of the sons out of a joint Mitakshara family, consisting of a father and three sons and the widow and sons of a deceased son, and carrying on business in partnership, sued to recover money due on a hathchitta, dated the 11th December 1876; the last payment made and entered by the defendant being on the 20th July 1877. No time was fixed for payment of the money, so that it became payable on the date of the hathchitta.

The suit was instituted on the 19th July 1880, and came on for hearing on the 26th July, when an objection was taken, that all the parties who ought to sue were not on the record. On the application of the original plaintiffs the names of the father and the third son were then added, and the plaintiffs were described as surviving partners of the deceased son. At the time the additional plaintiffs were made parties, the suit was, as regards them, barred by limitation.

Held, that the additional plaintiffs were rightly made parties to the suit, notwithstanding that the suit was, as far as they were concerned, barred. In actions of contract it is the right of the defendant, if he takes the objection in proper time, to insist upon all the persons with whom he contracted being joined as plaintiffs, and if, after the objection has been raised, the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non-joinder has been objected to, and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed.

That, inasmuch as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claim in conjunction with the added plaintiffs, and the added plaintiffs were barred by s. 22 of Act XV of 1877, the claim of the original plaintiffs was also barred.

That the suit, if all the plaintiffs had originally joined in suing, would not have been barred by s. 20 of Act XV of 1877. The words "prescribed period" in that section mean, not the period prescribed for the payment of the debt, but the prescribed period of limitation.

There is no equity, but often much injustice, in allowing one joint contractor out of many to sue a defendant, notwithstanding an objection duly made by the latter; and the Court has no right to allow one contractor to recover under such circumstances, though he may, no doubt, afterwards adjust the sum which he recovers with his co-contractors.

As between the members of joint family, any one or more may be authorized by the rest to act as their agent or agents in any business transaction; but when a joint family or any members of it carry on a trade in partnership, and contract with the outside public in the course of that trade, they have no greater privileges than any other traders. If they are really partners, they must be bound by the same rules of law for enforcing their contracts in Courts of law as any other partnership. *RAMSEBUK v. The original proprietors asserted their right to collect the rents of a portion of the property by virtue of holding two shikmi talooks and a howla tenure. This right was affirmed by the High Court in April 1875, B had previously sold his interest to C. On the 29th May 1876, A created a patni of his eight annas in favour of D and E, and on the 4th July 1876,

C purchased all the rights of the original proprietors. On the 13th January 1877, A sued under Act XI of 1859, s. 37, to cancel or vary the tenures, making the original proprietors, C, and various tenants, defendants. C objected that A had no right of suit or cause of action, as he had parted with all his rights to D and E; and that as his entire interest in the estate was only eight annas, he could not sue to cancel a part only of the sub-tenures. D and E then applied to be added as parties, and were made plaintiffs.

Held, that A had no cause of action, as he had previously parted with all his rights as zemindar, to cancel these tenures in favour of D and E, nor could D and E sue, as they were not "purchasers of an entire estate." That A having no cause of action it was not competent to the lower Court to add D and E as plaintiffs, and so introduce a right of action which did not previously exist; and

That, even on the assumption that D and E were properly made plaintiffs the lower Appellate Court should have taken into consideration certain admissions made by them as to the existence of the undertenure, both before and after the Government sale. *DWARKANATH PAL v. Partition.

- (1) Appointment of Commissioner—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 396—General Clause Act (I of 1868).—In a suit for partition, the Subordinate Judge appointed an Amin under s. 396 of the Civ. Pro. Code to effect a partition. The Amin made his report, which was objected to on the merits by the defendant, but ultimately the report was confirmed, the defendant having acquiesced in the proceedings. On appeal to the District Judge, the defendant took an objection, that the appointment of the Amin was irregular.

Held, that having acquiesced in the proceedings so far, it was too late for the defendant to take the objection.

Per PONTIFEX, J. (FIELD, J., doubting).—In a suit for partition, it is competent to the Court, in its preliminary decree, to appoint any one person whom it thinks fit to be a Commissioner to make the partition under s. 396 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The section uses the word 'commissioner,' but it is not necessary for the purposes of partition that there should be more than one commissioner, and by force of the General Clauses Act, the word 'commissioners' may be read in the singular number.

The intention of s. 396 is that, upon the first hearing of a suit, the Court shall determine whether the plaintiff is entitled to a partition, and shall ascertain who the several person interested in the property are, and shall direct by a preliminary decree or order that commissioners be appointed to make the partition. GAYAN CHUNDER SEN v. Code (Act X of 1877), sch. iv, forms 113, 132, 133—Costs.—In a suit for an account of partnership transactions, the Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the suit was instituted, framed certain issues with the object of ascertaining who managed the business; with whom the partnership property was; whether the defendants ought to account; what was the capital, and what the expenditure and profits of the firm; and after taking evidence on these points, dismissed the suit.

Held, that the Subordinate Judge should have followed the course pointed out in forms 132 and 133 of sch. iv of the Civ. Pro. Code, and at the first hearing should have determined whether there had been a partnership; what were its conditions; was it dissolved, or ought it to be dissolved; and who were the parties interested, and in what shares; and upon determining these questions, should have directed accounts to be taken; and after the accounts had been taken, should have made a final decree.

Held also, that the suit should not have been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and the case was transferred to the Court of the District Judge.

The plaint in a partnership suit ought to be framed on the lines of form 113 in sch. iv of the Code, and the accounts should be taken as prayed in that form.

Under ordinary circumstances, the cost of a partnership suit should be paid out of the assets of the partnership, or, in default of assets, by the partners in proportion to their respective shares, unless any partner denies the fact of a partnership, or opposes obstacles to the taking of the accounts, and so renders a suit necessary, when he is usually made to pay the costs up to the hearing. *RAMCHUNDER SHAH v. The Sessions Judge believed the last statement, and convicted her under s. 201 of the Penal Code.
Held, that the conviction was wrong, and must be set aside.
S. 201 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the person, who is the probable or possible offender, makes statements exculpating himself by inculpating another. In the matter of the petition of BEHALA BIBI. THE EMPRESS v. BEHALA BIBI, 6 C. 789=8 C.L.R. 207 ... 511
- (9) S. 211—Charge made on Report of Police that case was False—Charge of giving False information.—A commitment for trial under the provisions of s. 211 of the Penal Code, for knowingly instituting a false charge with intent to injure the persons accused, is not illegal, merely because the complaint which the accused made has not been judicially enquired into, but is based on the report of the Police that the case was a false one. THE EMPRESS v. SALIK ROY, 6 C. 582=8 C.L.R. 255 ... 379
- (10) S. 211—Making False Charge to Court or Officer having no Jurisdiction.—It is necessary for a conviction under s. 211 of the Penal Code that the false charge should have been made to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate and send it up for trial. In the matter of the petition of JAMOONA. THE EMPRESS v. JAMOONA, 6 C. 620=8 C.L.R. 215 ... 403
- (11) Prosecution for making a False Charge—Opportunity to accused to prove the Truth of Charge.—Before a person can be put upon his trial for making a false charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, he must be allowed an opportunity of proving the truth of the complaint made by him; and such an opportunity should be afforded to him, if he desires to take advantage of it, not before the Police, but before the Magistrate.
Magistrates should clearly understand that whilst the Police perform their proper duty in collecting evidence, it is the function of the Magistrate alone to decide upon the sufficiency or credibility of such evidence when collected. *THE GOVERNMENT v. - (5) In Appeal from Vice-Admiralty Court of Bengal—Time for Appealing.—By rule 35 of the rules respecting appeals from the Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad, made and ordained by King William IV in Council, in pursuance of the Statute 2 Will. IV, c. 51, all appeals from the decrees of Vice-Admiralty Courts are to be asserted within fifteen days after the date of the decree.
Held, that the words "after the date of the decree" mean after the date when the decree is pronounced by the Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty Court, as the case may be; not the date when the decree is reduced to writing and signed.
On the 23rd July 1880, the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction, modifying a decree of the High Court as a Court of Vice-Admiralty in a cause of damage by collision, referred it to the Registrar to assess the damages that had been incurred in reference to one of the ships, both of which were held to be in fault. The parties went, without protest, before the Registrar for that purpose, the impugnants also having taken out process to compel the appearance of the promovents before him, and the damages were assessed with the consent of both parties at a certain amount. On the 2nd September 1880, a notice of appeal was given on behalf of the impugnants, and was recorded as asserted pursuant to rule 35 above referred to.
Held, that the appeal was not within time, more than fifteen days having elapsed after the decree before the appeal was asserted. According to the law laid down in the Vice-Admiralty Courts, the proceedings taken before the Registrar were themselves sufficient also to prevent an appeal as of right. *THE OWNERS OF THE SHIP "BRENHILDA" v. - (1) Duty of Agent to account—Procedure on taking Accounts in Mofussil—Pleading in Suit for Account—Access to Books and Papers—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 394, 395.—In a suit for an account against an agent, the plaintiff stated that the defendant had not submitted proper accounts of his agency, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered to produce certain papers, and that, on failure to submit the accounts, he might be decreed to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,200 by way of damages. The plaintiff also alleged that, in consequence of the defendant's negligence and mismanagement, the plaintiff believed that he had sustained a loss of Rs. 5,000, and prayed for a decree for this sum.

Held, that no decree could be made for the sums mentioned, or any other sum, until an account had been taken and the amount due from the defendant ascertained.

Per FIELD, J.—It is the duty of an agent to render proper accounts to his employer irrespective of any contract to that effect. And he does not discharge that duty by merely delivering to his employer a set of written accounts without attending to explain them, and produce the vouchers by which the items of disbursements are supported.

Method to be followed on taking accounts in the Mofussil stated.

If the defendant is found liable to render such account for a certain period, the Court should make an interlocutory decree declaring that he is so liable, and direct him to file an account in Court within a fixed period. This decree may be enforced under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code. After an account has been filed, the plaintiff should be allowed reasonable time to examine it. If the objections are numerous, the procedure prescribed by ss. 394 and 395 and Form 157 of sch. iv to the Code should be followed. When the accounts have been taken, the Court must determine the amount due, and the final decree should be for the payment of this amount, and also, if necessary, for the delivery of any papers, vouchers or other documents which have come into the hands of the agent in the course of his employment.

In a suit for an account against A and B as agents, the plaintiff asked for an account as against A from 1265 (1858) to 1283 (1876), and as against B from 1281 (1874) to 1283 (1876).

Held, that there had been no misjoinder.

The seven days within which a notice of objections to a decree by a respondent under s. 561 of the Code must be given, is not a period to which the provisions of paragraph 2 of s. 5 of the Limitation Act can be extended, and the Court has no discretion to extend the period.

The same patnidar afterwards mortgaged the patni talook to the plaintiffs, who obtained a decree on their mortgage on the 28th September 1874. The patni was sold for its own arrears on the 17th November 1876; and after payment of rent and all expenses, there remained a surplus in the hands of the Collector, which was attached by the plaintiffs in execution of their decree on the 9th of November 1876. On the 12th January 1877, the defendants instituted a suit against the patnidar, under cl. 5, s. 17, Reg. VIII of 1819, for compensation for the loss of the durpatni, and obtained a decree, Privilege.

Waiver — European British Subject — Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 72 and 84.—S. 84 of the Crim. Pro. Code must be construed strictly with s. 72, and before a European British subject can be considered to have waived the privilege conferred upon him by s. 72, it must appear that his rights under that section have been distinctly made known to him, and that he must have been enabled to exercise his choice and judgment whether he would or would not claim those rights.

The provisions of s. 72 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the kind of Court which shall have jurisdiction and shall not have jurisdiction to enquire into a complaint or try a charge against a European British subject, constitute a privilege,—that is to say, they are not so much words taking away jurisdiction entirely, as words which confer on the British subject a right to be tried by a certain class of Magistrates and by no others, which right the Code enables him to give up.

No person can by waiver or consent enable a Magistrate or a Judge to try a case which he is disqualified to try by some circumstance not personal to the accused.

The waiver of privilege spoken of in s. 84 must be an absolute giving up of all the rights, with reference to chap vii of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which a European British subject has; and the words 'dealt with as such before the Magistrate' mean everything contained in the chapter,—that is to say, the tribunal having cognizance of the case, the procedure, and also the punishment to which the accused would be liable. *In the matter of the petition of QUIROS. - (2) Revocation of—Removal of Mohunt claiming under a Will—Succession Act (IX 1865), s. 234.—By his will the mohunt of an akra, or religious endowment, appointed A to be the malik of the properties comprised in the endowment, and to receive the dues and pay the debts, and to do everything necessary connected therewith; and provided that, if any act was done prejudicial to any of those purposes or to any property set apart therefor, or contrary to the Hindu practice and religion or usages, the property should vest in such disciple of his who should be competent and virtuous. A obtained probate of the will, and entered upon the properties mentioned therein.

Held, that the Court had no power, under s. 234 of the Succession Act, to revoke the probate upon the ground that A had, since he took charge of the office, taken to an immoral course of conduct, and in consequence had been excluded from the community of mohunts.

The proper course to take for depriving such a person of his office would be to bring a suit under the Religious Endowments Act, or any other suit, for a declaration that he had disqualified himself, and if in that suit a decree was obtained and duly certified to the Court which granted probate, that Court would, no doubt, direct the revocation of the probate. *In the matter of the petition of MOHAN DASS v. Promissory Note.

Bill of Exchange—Original consideration—Evidence—Stamp—Account stated—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, cl. 64.—When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor, for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed, or lost, or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person.

But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself and does not exist independently of it, as, for instance, when, in consideration of A depositing money with B, B contracts by promissory note to repay it with interest at six months' date; here there is no cause of action for money lent, or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note, and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if, for want of a proper stamp or some other reason, the note is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money.

Public Documents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 74—In a suit to obtain possession, under a title acquired by purchase at an auction, of certain lands, together with mesne profits upon setting aside an alleged taluqua etmani right claimed by the defendants, the defendants, in support of their claim produced certain documents purporting to be abstracted from, or copies of, Government measurement chittas, dated Mughli 1126-27 (1764). These documents were produced from the Collectorate but there was nothing to show that they were the record of measurements made by any Government officer.

Held, that they were not "public documents" within the meaning of s. 74 of the Evidence Act. NITTYANUND ROY v. ABDAR RAHEEM, 7 C. 76 ... 599

Public Officer.

Official Trustee—Notice of Suit—Tortious Acts—Civ.—Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 2, 424—Official Trustees Act (XVII of 1864). The Official Trustee is a "public officer" within the definition given in s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The case in which a public officer is entitled to notice of suit under s. 424 of the Code, are those in which he is sued for damages for some wrong inadvertently committed by him in the discharge of his official duties and the object of giving notice, is, that if a public body or officer entrusted with powers happens to commit an inadvertence, irregularity or wrong, before any one has a right to require payment in respect of that wrong—he shall have an opportunity of setting himself right, making amends, restoring what he has taken, or paying for the damages he has done.

The Official Trustee therefore is not entitled to notice of suit when the question to be decided relates to the rights of the cestuis que truent in respect of the trust fund, and not to a wrong committed by him. SHAHEBZADEE SHAHUNSHAH BEGUM v. FERGUSON, 7 C. 499 ... 871

Code together, it appears that, if an accused person desires to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, the time at which he should express such desire is when the charge is read over to him and he is called upon to make his defence; and although it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to recall the witnesses at a subsequent stage of the case, the accused has no right to insist upon the witnesses being recalled. *FAIZ ALI v. Receiver.

Appointment of—Reference to the District Court—Appealable Order—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 503, 504, and 505.—No appeal lies from an order passed under s. 505 of the Civ. Pro. Code by a Court subordinate to a District Court, submitting the name of a person sought to be appointed a receiver, together with the grounds for the nomination, such being only a preliminary order or expression of opinion and not an order under s. 503.

Nor does an appeal lie from the order of the District Court confirming such nomination, but the District Court ought, when the question is raised, to decide on the necessity for the appointment of a receiver, the words, "or pass such other order as it thinks fit" in s. 505 being sufficient to include that question, and not merely to decide the fitness or otherwise of the person nominated to the office of receiver. *BIRAJAN KOOR v. - (1) Lease—Agreement for Lease—Doul Dackhast—Proposal—Acceptance—Contract—Fair Rent—Regular Appeal—Special Appeal—Remand—Full Bench Reference—Practice.—Every lease, or agreement for a lease in writing, must be registered before being given in evidence. But a proposal in writing to take a lease of certain lands on certain terms, made by one person to another, need not be registered, unless the proposal in writing has been so accepted that the proposal and acceptance constitute a contract in writing.

The defendant held lands under the plaintiff at a certain rate per bigha. The plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent on a new agreement alleged to have been entered into by the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the latter agreed to pay a higher rate per bigha. The lower Appellate Court found that the new agreement had never, in fact, been entered into, and gave a decree for the old rate of rent without going into the question whether it was a fair rent or not.

Held, that the decision was correct. SYED SUFDAR REZA v. AMZAD ALI, 7 C. 703 (F.B.)=4 Shome L. R. 240=10 C.L.R. 121 ...

S. the owner of a seven-anna share in certain property, on the 19th November 1866, sold a one-anna share thereof to A for Rs. 30, the bill of sale not being registered, as under the provisions of Act XX of 1866, s. 18, the registration thereof was optional. Subsequently, S sold the remaining six annas to other persons; and then, on the 27th September 1876, sold another one-anna share in the same property to B for Rs. 140, the bill-of-sale with respect to this purchase being duly registered under the provisions of Act III of 1877. In a suit by A, who had never obtained possession of the one-anna share he had purchased, against S, B, and the purchasers of the other six anna shares,—Held, that he was not entitled to succeed, as his bill-of-sale being unregistered was not entitled to priority over B's, which had been duly registered. Religious Endowment.

- (1) Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Restraining Manager from allowing Property to be removed—Form of Order—Injunction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 30.—In 1849, the Board of Revenue, acting under Reg. XIX of 1810, interfered in the management of the affairs of a temple. In a suit relating to the affairs of a temple instituted in 1878, it did not appear whether any transfer of property had been made, under s. 4 of Act XX of 1863, but it did appear that, in 1865, the Judge of Patna had appointed a manager of the temple.

Held, that the right of the Government Officers to control the affairs of the temple had been sufficiently proved.

S. 14 of Act XX of 1863 is generally applicable to all religious endowments, and while it in one sense restrains the ordinary Courts from dealing with cases against trustees of religious endowments, it gives special facilities for suits in the principal Civil Court of the district by any of the persons interested in these endowments.

Quære—Whether, considering the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, the retention of s. 14 of Act XX of 1863, is at all necessary?

An order under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863 should be mandatory, and not prohibitory.

Where a sacred book was kept at a temple, and was an object of veneration to the members of the sect entitled to worship there,—

Held, that a suit would lie under s. 14 of Act XX of 1863, by some of the persons interested in the temple, to restrain the superintendent from removing the book to another place, and that he should be directed to retain it as a portion of the furniture of the temple. *DHURRUM SINGH v. - (2) Decree obtained ex parte—Admissibility of, as Evidence—Finality of, with regard to its Subject-matter—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13. expl. 4.—A decree obtained ex parte is not final within the meaning of expl. 4, s. 13 of Act X of 1877.

Such a decree is not conclusive evidence of the amount of rent payable by the same defendant in another suit for subsequent rent of the same property.

Where the plaintiff sued the defendant for a year's rent at the same rate which had been decreed to him for a previous year in a suit which he had brought against the same defendant for rent of the same property, and relied upon the former decree, which had been obtained ex parte, and which he also alleged had been duly executed, as evidence of the amount of rent due to him by the defendant, but it appeared that the lower Court had found that the alleged execution-proceeding were fraudulent, and that no steps had been taken which gave finality to the decree,—

In 1872, A brought a suit on a mortgage against the mortggagor, a Hindu widow, who died pending the suit. A then applied that the suit should be revived against B as the representative of the defendant. B denied that he was such representative, but the Judge refused to go into the question, made B a party, and gave A a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. B subsequently brought a suit to have it declared, inter alia, that the mortgage and decree only covered the widow's life-interest.

Held, that the suit was not barred either as res judicata, or under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. KANA LALL KHAN v. SASHI BHUSON BISWAS, 6 C. 777=8 C.L.R. 117=4 Shome L.R. 110 ...

D applied for a rehearing, which was granted; and on the 30th of December 1871, a decree was again passed against D, in execution of which the same properties were attached on the 9th of August 1872, and purchased at the execution-sale on the 1st August 1874 by R. On the 14th February 1871, D had executed a solehnama and mortgage in favour of G, pledging, among other properties, X and Y as security for a loan made to him by G. D having made default in payment, G obtained a decree against him in terms of the solehnama on the 28th February 1871. - his decree and mortgage to the plaintiff, who in execution of the decree attached properties X and Y. In these execution-proceedings R brought forward the fact of his purchase of the same properties in August 1874, and his claim was allowed, and the properties X and Y released from attachment on the 4th March 1876. The plaintiffs had, on the 8th March 1872 obtained a mortgage from D, on which they had obtained a decree on the 28th September 1874, in execution of which they had attached X and Y; but on R claiming them under his purchase in August 1874, an order was made on the 10th April 1875 releasing X and Y from attachment; and in a suit by the plaintiff to set aside that order, they failed as to properties X and Y, on the ground that those properties were not included in the mortgage of March 1872. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiffs against R and D, to set aside the order of the 4th March 1876, and to have X and Y declared liable to be sold under the decree of the 28th February 1871.—Held, that the suit was not barred under s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859 by the decree in the previous suit, nor was it barred by s. 7 of the same Act.

- (2) Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—The plaintiff sued to recover certain lands, claiming them as a portion of A, and alleging that A was portion of a mouza which had been leased to him in patni by the zemindar. The suit was dismissed, on the ground that though A was known as a part of the plaintiff's mouza, yet it had been included in a patni lease of an adjoining mouza, which the zemindars had granted to the defendants previously to the date of the plaintiff's lease. The plaintiff brought a second suit claiming another portion of A on the same title.

- (3) Finality of Arbitrator's Award when Judgment is passed thereon—Question dealt with by such Award raised in a subsequent suit—Where a case was referred to arbitration, and the award was subsequently filed and judgment passed in accordance therewith, and subsequently in another suit between the same parties, a question dealt with in the award was raised,—Held, that such question was res judicata between the parties, the judgment on the award having the same effect as an ordinary judgment of a Court, and being conclusive on the point. - (4) Intervenors—Rights as between original Defendant and Intervenors—Suit for possession.—Where a plaintiff claimed certain property, and two persons intervened and were allowed to put in their claim to a portion of it, which claim, at the hearing the intervenors, however, refrained from pressing, and the suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff, the original defendant alone appealing (unsuccessfully) against the decree,—Held, that it was not open to the intervenors to institute any fresh proceedings to obtain the property against the original defendant; the decree in the suit in which they intervened being conclusive as between them and such defendant. - (5) Judgment against one Co-sharer, effect of, on Interest of other Co-sharers—Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), s. 13, expl. 5. Repeal, Effect of.—Explanation 5 to s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not make a judgment obtained in a suit against one co-sharer binding on another co-sharer no party to such suit, in respect of the rights enjoyed in common by such co-sharers in their common property. Nor could such explanation be applied to a case instituted, or the judgment delivered in such case, during the time when the old Code of Civil Procedure was in force. HAZIB GAZI v. - (7) Prescriptive Right—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13, expl. 5—Explanation 5 of s. 13 of Act X of 1877 only applies to cases where several different persons claim an easement or other right under one common title, as, for instance, where the inhabitants of a village claim by custom a right of pasturage over the same tract of land or to take water from the same spring or well.

Where therefore A, in defending a suit brought against him by B, to have it declared that he had a right to build a wall across a drain, set up a prescriptive right to use the drain, and it was decided that no such prescriptive right existed in A ;

And subsequently, C brought a suit against B, claiming to use the same drain as an easement, and asking for the removal of the wall in question in the former suit, and B set up the judgment in the suit between himself and A, as a bar to the suit,—

Held, that the right claimed by C not being one which he and other inhabitants of the neighbourhood claimed under one common title, but a prescriptive right which he claimed individually in respect of his own house and premises, and depending upon the length of time he had used the right, was a separate claim, and that the judgment in the suit between B and A did not operate as a bar to his suit. *KALISHUNKUR DOSS v. - (8) Suit for Enhancement of Rent—Finding in Judgment not embodied in Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—N brought a suit against P for enhancement of rent. P's defence was, first, that no notice of enhancement had been given ; secondly, that the rent was not enhanceable, as he and his predecessors in title had held it at a fixed rent from the date of the Permanent Settlement. The suit was dismissed on the ground that no notice had been given ; but the Munsif stated in the judgment, that he considered the rent enhanceable, because he did not believe in the genuineness of the documentary evidence produced by P. The decree merely ordered that the suit should be dismissed, the portion of the judgment as to the enhanceability of the rent not being embodied in the decree. P, therefore, had no right of appeal against that portion of the judgment. In a subsequent suit by N against P, for enhancement of rent of the same tenure, held, that, on the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Sooreejmonee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapatter and Krishna Behari Roy v. Bunwari Lall Roy, P was precluded by the decision in the former suit, from denying that the rent of the tenure was enhanceable although the decision on that point was not embodied in the decree.

The material findings in each case should be embodied in the decree, and if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties, to avoid their being bound by decisions against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to amend the decree in accordance with the judgment. *NIAMUT KHAN v. - (9) Suit for Rent—Suit for Measurement—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—In a suit by ryots against their zemindar, praying for measurement of certain land and for a declaration of the amount of yearly rental, it appeared that, in a previous suit for rent by the zemindar against the ryots, the ryots had alleged that the amount of rent and the extent of land had been overstated by the zemindar, but the Court decided that the ryots were bound by a jumma bundee signed by them and refused to try whether the extent had been overstated.

Held that the present suit was not barred as res judicata. ROGHOONATH MUNDUL v. JUGGUT BUNDHOO BOSE, 7 C. 214=8 C.L.R. 393. ...

- (10) Want of Jurisdiction as to Valuation of Suit—Subsequent suit between the same Parties—Intervenors—Competent Court—Rent-suits.—A judgment of a Court not competent to try the case in which the judgment is pleaded as res judicata, must, nevertheless, be held to be the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction within the rule as laid down in the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa, and s. 13 of Act X of 1877 ;

Revivor.

(1) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 180—Execution of Decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 230, 245, 248—Scire facias, Writ of.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in 1864. The first application for execution was made in September 1869 under s. 216 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859); and after notice to the defendant as provided thereby, an order was made under that section for execution to issue. In September 1880, an application for execution was made under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, which repealed Act VIII of 1859.

Held, that the order after notice had the effect of reviving the decree within the meaning of art. 180, sch. ii, Act XV of 1877, and therefore the decree was not barred by the law of limitation.

An order for execution under the Code made after notice to show cause has, on the Original Side of the Court, the same effect as an award of execution in pursuance of a writ of scire facias had under procedure of the Supreme Court,—i.e., it creates a revivor of the decree.

The clause of s. 230 of Act X of 1877, which prohibits a subsequent application for execution, only applies where the previous application has been made under that section, and not where such previous application has been made under Act VIII of 1859. - (2) By Sheriff in execution of decree—Payments of Purchase-Money on agreement as to possession between Purchaser and Execution Creditor—Sale subsequently set aside—Suit for Money had and received—Accord and satisfaction—Novation—Limitation.—On the 9th October 1866, the Sheriff of Calcutta executed a bill of sale to A of a certain taluk situated in Oudh, of which A afterwards obtained possession. In consequence of an impression that the sale was illegal, A directed the Sheriff not to pay the money to B, the execution-creditor, and the money remained in the hands of the Sheriff until the 24th of October 1867, when A directed the payment of the money to B, in consequence of an arrangement then come to between A and B, to the effect that, if A should be ousted from the possession of the property within a year, B should take measures to reinstate him at his (B's) expense. A died without heirs in July 1868, and the Government of Oudh, not being aware that A had left a will, took possession of the taluk partly as on an escheat, and partly because there were arrears of revenue due on the property. On the 2nd of October 1868, an order was passed by the Collector of the district in which the taluk was situate, declaring the sale by the Sheriff illegal, and directing the return of the taluk to its former owners, which was done in April 1869. In a suit brought by A's executors against B in September 1872 to recover the purchase-money as money had and received, as upon a total failure of consideration,—

Held, that the agreement of the 24th of October 1867 operated as an accord and satisfaction of all rights which A might have had to a return of the purchase-money or to damages, and that the only remedy which A had was an action on the agreement.

Held also, that no breach of the agreement of 24th of October 1867 had in fact occurred, and that, even if the agreement had been broken, the suit was barred by limitation. DORAB ALLY KHAN v. ABDOOL AZEEZ and ABDOOL AZEEZ v. DORAB ALLY KHAN, 6 C. 356.

purchased a maurasi taluq at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against the taluqdar for arrears of rent of the taluq, and then sued to recover possession of certain lands held by the defendants within the taluq. The defence was, that the lands in question were held by the defendants under a patta which had been granted to their ancestor, in 1733, by the then talukdars in respect of certain services to be performed by the grantees and their descendants. The Court of first instance found that the patta was genuine, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the patta was a forgery; and that although the lands had been granted to the defendants' ancestor in respect of services, yet the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession, as he did not require the services to be performed. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's claim.

Held, that the decree was right, for having found that the patta on which the defendants chiefly relied was a forgery, the Subordinate Judge was not bound, as a matter of law, to presume that the tenure was a permanent one merely from the fact of long possession of the lands. *NOBIN CHUNDER DUTT v. - (6) Decree—Irregularity—Material Injury—Presumption—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 311—Witnesses, Laches in summoning.—On an application under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) to set aside a sale, it appeared that there had been a material irregularity in publishing the sale; but no witnesses were called to prove that substantial injury had been caused thereby. It also appeared that seventeen days after the applicant had applied for proclamations to be issued to his witnesses, he deposited the requisite fees; and that, subsequently, there was a delay of seven days in the office in issuing such proclamations, which were ultimately issued only three days prior to the day fixed for the hearing. On the applicant alleging that, in consequence of such delay, he had not been allowed a fair opportunity to produce his witnesses,—

Held, that the Court cannot presume that substantial injury has been caused from the mere fact of there having been a material irregularity in publishing a sale; but when both a material irregularity and substantial injury have been proved, the Court may reasonable presume that the substantial injury is due to such irregularity.

Held also, that the applicant having been guilty of laches himself, could not be allowed to set up the delay in the office as a ground for the non-production of his witnesses. BONOMALI MOZUMDAR v. WOOMESH CHUNDER BUNDOPODHYA, 7 C. 730=4 Shome L.R. 191=9 C.L.R. 341

- (7) "Right, title and interest" of a Judgment Debtor in a partly-executed Decree—Possession of land attached under Reg. V of 1805, s. 26—Right of Purchaser.—A decree of the year 1843 awarded to persons afterwards represented by the respondents, the possession of a moiety of a taluk, which had been since 1837, and remained till 1866, under attachment by the Collector in virtue of an order made under Reg. V of 1812. The Court which granted the decree, intending to execute it, approved the proceedings of an Amin purporting to put the decree-holders into constructive possession of a certain number of mouzas of the taluk.

In 1850, the appellants, in execution of a decree for money obtained by them against the respondents, purchased at a sale amongst other things, "their right, title and interest" in the decree of 1843. Held, that possession of the mouza having been delivered so far as it could be delivered, considering the attachment to which the taluk containing these mouzas was subject, the decree of 1843 had been so far executed; and that what was acquired by the appellants at the execution sale was only the unexecuted portion of the decree of 1843. *GRISHCHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY v. After the expiration of the further time, the vendee tendered the price of the remaining goods and demanded delivery, when the vendors stated that they had rescinded the contract. In an action for damages for non-delivery,—held, that time was of the essence of the contract, and that, under s. 55 of the Contract Act, the vendors were entitled to rescind. BULDEO DOSS v. - (9) Of Government Revenue paying lands—Purchaser's Liability.—Government revenue does not become due from day to day, but at certain specified times, according to the contract of the parties, or the custom of the district in which the lands liable to pay such revenue are situate. It is not, therefore, liable to apportionment; and the person who is the owner of a revenue paying estate at a time when the payment of the revenue falls due, is the only person liable for its payment.

The purchaser of an estate which pays Government revenue takes it subject to all revenue and cesses, whether in arrear or accruing.

Held therefore, in a suit by a purchaser for a certain sum for Government revenue and cesses, which became due after the date of, though due for a period previous to, his purchase, which sum he alleged he had been compelled to pay to save his interest in the subject of his purchase, that he was not entitled to recover. CHATRAPUT SINGH v. Per GARTH, C. J.—Where a case is settled without evidence being gone into, the Court in which the suit was brought, even if it have power to sanction criminal proceedings against any of the parties to such suit under s. 468 of Act X of 1872, is guilty of great impropriety and indiscretion in so doing, inasmuch as it can have had no opportunity of judging of the bona fides of the claim or defence.

The notification of the Lieutenant-Governor, dated the 7th May 1872, being still in force, the Settlement Officers have no power to deal with such cases.

him, and he gave a decision thereon and certified the same to the Settlement Officer, and it appeared that the Deputy Commissioner had previously been invested with the powers of a Settlement Officer, and the proceedings were subsequently returned to him for the settlement record to be amended in conformity with his findings he being thoroughly conversant with all the facts of the case, and he accordingly passed an order and amended the record, defining the areas to which the plaintiffs were entitled ;

On appeal against that order,—

Held, that, so far as he was acting as a Civil Court, the Deputy Commissioner had no jurisdiction to try the issues sent to him or deal with the case, but that, inasmuch as he was vested with the powers of a Settlement Officer, and was fully competent as such to deal with the case himself, seeing that the parties could not in any way be prejudiced by the irregularity committed, the High Court would not interfere to set aside the order.

Held also, that, treating the action of the Deputy Commissioner as that of a Settlement Officer, the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. TARINI PERSHAD MISRA v. MAHAMUD CHOWDHRY, 7 C. 376=8 C.L.R. 548 ...

Whether the party is to sue in the Civil Court, or in the Small Cause Court, depends entirely upon the nature of the claim and the right which is sought to be enforced.

Where goods have been illegally seized and sold in execution, a suit by the owner thereof against the purchaser for the goods or their value, will lie in a Small Cause Court, if the value of the goods is within the amount limited by law for the jurisdiction of such Court ; but if the plaintiff makes the decree holder and the judgment-debtor parties to the suit, and requires a declaration of his right to the property, such a suit will not lie in the Small Cause Court.

"certain conditions as agreed upon." The defendants alleged that the written agreement did not contain the whole of the agreement between the parties, and offered parol evidence in support of their contention.

Held (reversing the judgment of WILSON, J.), that the parol evidence was admissible to show what was meant by the clause "certain conditions as agreed upon."

Per PONTIFEX, J. (GARTH, C.J., dissenting).—The evidence was admissible under proviso 1, s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

Discussion as to the meaning of s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and of ss. 17, 22, and 26 of the Specific Relief Act.

Per PONTIFEX, J.—It is of the essence of specific performance that part only of an agreement should not be performed.

Part of the purchase money had been advanced by the plaintiffs to the defendants, for which the defendants had given their promissory notes; and the plaint contained a prayer that the defendants be ordered to pay over the amount of the notes.

Held (affirming the decision of WILSON, J.), that there was no misjoinder of causes of action within the meaning of s. 44, rule (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877). G. M. CUTTS v. T. F. BROWN, 6 C. 328=7 C.L.R. 171 ...

In 1281 (1874), a measurement was made, and it was found that some land had accreted; and the plaintiff now sued for rent for the accreted land, at rates varying with its nature and quality.

Held, that the accreted land should be governed by the terms and conditions applicable to the parent tenure, and that the same rent was payable for it as for the land included in the kabuliat.

The meaning of Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, is that the incidents of the original tenure attach to the increment. GOLAM ALI v. KALI KRISHNA THAKUR, 7 C. 479 = 4 Shome L.R. 149 = 8 C L.R. 517. ...

- (6) Beng. Act VI of 1862, s. 10—Irregular Proceedings of Collector under—Shareholder—Proprietor.—An applicant under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862 must be the Proprietor of the estate, and not merely a share-holder in the proprietary body.

Under the above section, the Collector is not entitled to assess the rents at what he considers to be fair and reasonable rates from the rents prevailing in the neighbouring properties, but is only authorised to ascertain for the landlord what the existing condition of his estate is, what are the measurements, what the names of his tenants, and what the rents they are paying.

In a suit for rent by one co-sharer, the plaintiff claimed that the rent should be calculated at the rate fixed by the Collector, in a proceeding held by him under s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1862. It appeared that the defendants had not had notice of the proceeding, and that the Collector had ascertained the rate from the rents paid in the neighbouring properties. Held, that the proceedings of the Collector were irregular, as he had acted without jurisdiction, and that they were not binding on the defendants for the purpose of showing the rate at which rent was payable by them. *BABA CHOWDHRY v. (9) For cancellation—Mukurari Lease—Forfeiture—Equitable Relief against Forfeiture—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 52—Act X of 1859, s. 78.—Where, in a mukurari lease, there was a condition that, in case of non-payment of one year's rent, and its falling into arrears, the mukurari settlement was to be cancelled, and default was made and a suit for ejectment was brought,—

Held, that, independently of the Rent Act, the defendants should be allowed in equity a reasonable time to pay the landlord's dues in order to prevent forfeiture.

Held, also, that the provisions of s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 are exactly similar to those of s. 78 of Act X of 1859, and applicable to the case of a mukurari lease; and therefore that a decree passed in conformity therewith, which allowed fifteen days for the payment of the arrears of rent found due and interest thereon, was a good decree. *MAHOMED AMEER v. (11) For enhancement—Grounds of Enhancement—Increased Value of Produce—Evidence to Prove.—In a suit for enhancement of rent, the plaintiff, among other grounds, contended that the value of the produce of the land had increased, and called witnesses belonging to the cultivating class, who stated from memory the prices which had prevailed in the locality for a number of years. The District Judge considered this evidence to be no safe guide to the value of produce which, he held, could only be proved by traders and merchants with books of accounts, by which their memory could be refreshed and tested,—

Held, that the evidence adduced was relevant, and entitled to consideration. There is a material difference between a case in which a Judge had assigned one bad reason for believing or disbelieving a particular piece of evidence, while he has given one or more good reasons for the same belief or disbelief; or a case in which, putting this particular piece of evidence wholly aside, enough remains to support the judgment, and a case in which the essential question, or one of the essential questions, to be decided rests upon the evidence believed or disbelieved, regarded as of great value, or considered worthless, for a reason which is unsound and unsustainable. HURO PROSAD ROY v. WOMATARA DEBEE, 7 C. 263=8 C.L.R. 419....

(13) Plea that certain of the Lands included in Notice are not enhanceable—Onus of Proof of such Fact—Notice of Enhancement.—In suits for enhancement of rent, where the tenant pleads that a portion of the land sought to be enhanced is held by him rent-free, the onus is on the tenant to prove prima facie that such portion of the land is so held by him; and if he be successful in this, the onus is then shifted upon the landlord to rebut such prima facie evidence.

A notice for enhancement, otherwise sufficient, is not invalidated, because a portion of the lands claimed as enhanceable in such notice turns out to be rent-free land; but is good so far as it is applicable to the portion of the land which is liable to enhancement. *NEWAJ BUNDOPADHYA v. (17) On possession—Diluvion—Possession on Re-formation—Subsequent Diluvion—Possession—Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sch. ii, arts. 143, 145.—Per GARTH, C. J.—Where a person can show that he has been in possession of certain lands prior to such lands becoming diluviated, his possession must be considered as continuing during the time of diluvion, until such time as he becomes dispossessed by some other person; and in such a case, the onus lies upon the dispossessor to show that he has acquired a title under the law of limitation which has put an end to the rights of the original possessor.

Per WHITE, J.—The dispossession or discontinuance of possession mentioned in art. 143, sch. ii of Act IX of 1871 is that which occurs where the property is taken actual possession of by another, and does not apply to the case where the property is submerged by the act of God, and so made impossible of occupation and actual possession.

Owners of land which has suffered from successive diluviations and re-formations, must, if they wish to preserve their rights, bring their suit within twelve years of the time when adverse possession is first taken of land re-forming on the original site, whether at the time of suit the land is capable of occupation or is lying under water in consequence of a second diluvion. *KALLY CHURN SAHOO v. (18) Formal Possession—Transfer of Possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 223, 224.—In a suit for possession, it appeared that, in 1863, the plaintiff had sued some of the present defendants for khas possession of the same land. In that suit the defendants pleaded that they were tenants of the plaintiff and entitled to hold under a patta, which they failed to prove, and the plaintiff obtained a decree. Three years afterwards the plaintiff was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 224 of Act VIII of 1859, instead of under s. 223.

Held, that as the plaintiff was put in possession under his decree by the officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was immaterial.

The formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates, in point of law and fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from the one party to the other. LOKESSUR KOER v. PURGUN ROY, 7 C. 418 ...

(19) Limitation—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27.—In a suit for possession of land, it appeared that the defendants had obtained a darpatni lease of the land in question in 1271 (1865), and that they had immediately dispossessed the plaintiff, and had never acknowledged him to be their tenant. The plaintiff instituted his suit within twelve years from the date of dispossession.

Held that the suit was not barred by limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

That section only applies to cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, and cannot be pleaded in bar by a defendant who does not admit that such relation has existed. NILMADHUB SHAHA v. SRINIBASH KURMOKAR, 7 C. 442=9 C.L.R. 137 ...

(20) Res Judicata—Finality of Decision—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), s. 13.—In a suit to recover possession of certain land, where it appeared that there had been a previous suit between the same parties with respect to the same land, in which the then plaintiffs sought to have their possession confirmed, and that in that suit the lower Courts had decided the case both on the question of title and of possession, but on special appeal the High Court had dealt only with the question of possession, and in dismissing the appeal had not gone into the question of title, and the defendant in that suit subsequently sued to recover possession of the land,—

Held, that the question of title was still open between the parties, and had not been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit, within the meaning of s. 13 of Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code). *GUNGABISHEN BHUGUT v. - (22) Rent—Splitting Claims—Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), s. 43.—At the close of the Bengalee year 1283, which was on the 11th of April 1877, the defendant owed to the plaintiff, his landlord, the rents of his holding for the years 1281, 1282, and 1283. The plaintiff, in the month of April 1878, before the close of the year 1284, instituted a suit for the rent for 1281 only, and obtained a decree. On the 10th of April 1879, he instituted another suit for recovery of the rents for the years 1282, 1283, and 1284. Held, that the claim for the years 1282 and 1283 was barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. *TARUCK CHUNDER MOOKERJEE v. Survey.

Measurement—Beng. Act (VIII of 1869), ss. 25, 37, 38.—A proprietor of an estate or tenure has a right to make a general survey and measurement of the lands comprised in his estate, under the provisions of s. 37 of the Rent Act, without proving that he is in receipt of the rents, there being nothing in law which prevents him from making such a survey or measurement, as is contemplated by ss. 26 and 37, merely because his estate happens to be sublet to a number of tenure-holders.

The only excepted case is where there is a special agreement to the contrary. BROJENDRO COOMAR ROY v. KRISHNA COOMAR GHOSE, 7 C. 684=4 Shome L.R. 226=9 C.L.R. 444 ...

Survey Proceedings.

Beng. Act V of 1875, s. 45, cl. (b) and s. 62—Survey Proceedings not taken for public purposes—Right of Suit.—S. 45, cl. (b) of Beng. Act V of 1875 applies only to a survey or some similar proceeding taken by a revenue officer "for some public purpose," and against which any party who may be affected by the boundary laid down by such officer would have a right to object.

Therefore, where such a proceeding, although initiated under Beng. Act V of 1875, has been taken for the purpose of settling the boundaries of private property as between the owners of it, the party aggrieved by the order of the Collector in such proceeding is not debarred by s. 62 of the Act from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to have the boundaries ascertained. *HURRI PRASAD v.
